The TORTURE CHAMBER in this issue

Old Friends (or Old "Pards") Intemperance and Inspiration.

TO NEW READERS OF THE TRUTH SEEKER.

We send this issue of The Truth Seeker to a great many Liberals who are not subscribers, with an earnest invitation to them to become such, and thereby help along the Liberal cause.

We would also respectfully call their attention to the many points of excellence of the Paper.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is the Largest Freethought Journal in the World.

The Cartoons of Heston appear each week, and each picture is worth the cost of the paper a year to one who appreciates plain and telling arguments against ecclesiasticism.

THE TRUTH SEEKER constantly prints the most varied and entertaining Selection of Original Papers of any Liberal Journal. Its Contributors are all the noted Liberals of the country. All that Col. R. G. Ingersoll gives to the Public can be found in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and that Poet of Freethought, Samuel P. Putnam, writes more for its columns than for any other. The Liberal speakers send us accounts of their journeys, and the best writers of Freethought freely devote their services to the cause of Liberalism through the colums of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Charles Watts, perhaps the greatest Debater of our time, certainly the foremost Secular orator of England, will send us monthly letters from England with all the news of our movement there and such reflections and pertinent observations as will surely make every English Secularist living in this country and Canada want to read THE TRUTH SEEKER. George E. Macdonald, one of the rarest combinations of humorist, satirist, philosopher, logician, has been engaged to write regularly for our columns. As the "Man With the Badge Pin," he is known to nearly all the Liberals of the country and we are willing to make him known to more.

THE TRUTH SEEKER gives all the news of Freethought, and is always on Guard Against the Encroachments of Ecclesiastics upon the People's Liberties.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is devoted to the defense of Mental Liberty, of American Institutions, and the Preservation of the United States Constitution, so far as regards religious tests and the maintenance of human rights. It advocates the abolition of all laws based on religion or religious observances. It demands the taxation of church property. It is uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of church and state, either in name or in fact.

The Sunday Question is now to the front all over the country. On that THE TRUTH SEEKER will voice the demands of the Liberal minded men and women of the country, and nowhere else will the rights of the people as against Puritanism be found so sturdily defended.

To sum it up, THE TRUTH SEEKER is the biggest, best, and bravest Freethought journal in the world, and if you are a Liberal or Freethinker, you want it and ought to take it. We appeal also to fair-minded Christians to hear our side and then decide. Bigots and fanatics, we suppose, wouldn't take it on any terms.

The Most Magnificent Work Ever Published by the Freethought Press.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The object of this work is to present the Course of Freethought throughout the Civilized World for the last Four Centuries, from the time of Columbus and Bruno to the time of Ingersoll.

It will be a radical Historic Record of the Greatest Developments of the Human Race.

It will reveal Freethought as an Intellectual, Moral, Literary, Social, Industrial, and Political Movement.

It will show what Freethought is in itself and how manifold are its influences, and with what hope and promise we can hail its future triumph.

"Four Hundred Years of Freethought" will Embrace the most Illustrious Pages of Human History,

adorned with the brightest Genius, radiant with the most splendid Poetry, rich with the greatest Inventions and Discoveries and ennobled with Freedom's most shining advance.

Nothing Can be More Interesting,

more inspiring to the Pioneer Workers of to-day—to those who are still in the van for Human Rights and Progress. The struggle is not ended and what is already won must be carefully guarded. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; and from the Past we must ever learn Great Lessons for the Future.

NO LIBERAL CAN AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THIS BOOK.

It will contain the Greatest Thoughts and the Greatest Deeds of the Greatest Men

In One Harmonious and Magnificent Whole,

a vivid picture of man's sublimest evolution, with the added glory of

WOMAN'S EMANCIPATION

from the chains and slavery of a barbaric creed and church.

THE FIRST PART of the book will deal with Freethought as a Universal Power, as a Spirit, a Method, a prevailing but unorganized Influence in every Department of Human Growth.

THE SECOND PART will deal with Freethought as an Organized Movement, especially in America and Europe; and this history is of equal importance with the first, and should be justly understood and the Pioneers of our work recognized.

The first part will embrace the following Grand Departments:

Philosophy.	Science.	Education and Ethics.	Literature.		Government and Politics.		Woman's Emancipation.
Bruno.	Copernicus.	Bacon.	Boccaccio.	Lessing.	Voltaire.	Gambetta.	Madame Roland.
Spinoza.	Galileo.	Comenius.	Rabelais.	Schiller.	Rousseau.	Castelar.	Mary Wollstoncraft.

					Heinzen.		Helen H. Gardener.
							Annie Besant.

THE PORTRAITS OF THESE ILLUSTRIOUS REFORMERS

in every domain of Human Thought and Progress will adorn the pages of this volume.

The Second Part of this volume will be devoted especially to organized Freethought and the Liberal Press in modern times. The Truth Seeker, Investigator, Ironclad Age, Secular Thought, Freethinkers' Magazine, Independent Pulpit, Lucifer, the Freethinker, Agnostic Journal, etc.

It will give a history of the

GREAT INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

at Chicago, the Freethought Federation of America, the American Secular Union, the various state and local organizations, the Canadian Secular Union, the British Secular Union, and other Liberal associations throughout the world.

It will contain the portraits of those who, up to the present time, have been identified with Freethought work—editors, lecturers, officers of societies, and those who, as representative men, have won distinction in other fields of effort. There will be the portraits of

Horace Seaver,	George E. Macdonald,	Capt. R. C. Adams,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Sr.,	Susan H. Wixon,
J. P. Mendum,	E. M. Macdonald,	John R. Charlesworth,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.,	Mrs. Charles Watts,
D. M. Bennett,	L. K. Washburn,	Samuel P. Putnam,	Prof. J. H. Cook,	Mrs. Robert C. Adams,
Parker Pillsbury,	Ernest Mendum,	John E. Remsburg,	E. H. Heywood,	Mrs. M. A. Freeman,
Elizur Wright,	Charles Watts,	Franklin Steiner,	Otto Wettstein,	Katie Kehm Smith,
T. C. Leland,	G. W. Foote,	J. D. Shaw,	Stephen Pearl Andrews,	Lucy N. Colman,
T. B. Wakeman,	Saladin,	E. A. Stevens,	James Parton,	Lillian Leland,
Judge C. B. Waite.	J. R. Monroe,	H. L. Green,	Abner Kneeland,	Amy Post.

and other men and women who have contributed to the advancement of Freethought and whose names should be remembered throughout the Liberal ranks. There will also be about

ONE HUNDRED BIOGRAPHIES,

and in these will be given a picture of Freethought progress which will be most interesting and valuable, for it is in individuals that we find the best interpretations of the age.

The Price of This Superb Book is $5.00,

and not for the same amount of money can there be found such an array of facts, such a survey of history, and such a galaxy of Freethought.

Mr. Putnam is now devoting his whole time to this work and it will be published at the earliest possible moment.

The name of every Subscriber who sends five dollars before the work is on the press will be enrolled in this book. DON'T FAIL TO SUBSCRIBE AT ONCE.

This book will contain

Over Six Hundred Pages of Printed Matter and Over One Hundred Portraits.

It will be elegantly bound. It will be a book for the home and the fireside. It will be a book to give to your friends when they ask, What is Freethought—what has it done and what is it doing in the world?

This is the most universal presentation of Freethought ever given to the public, and no Freethinker can afford to be without it. It is a library in itself.

Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated

By WATSON HESTON,

THE GREATEST BOOK OF ITS KIND EVER CONCEIVED.

Or, if preferred, a copy cloth-bound of

W. S. BELL'S

Handbook of Freethought.

With these Splendid Works as premiums there ought to be no difficulty in getting hundreds of clubs of subscribers.

Remember, to the Getter-up of The Club, FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT, free.

To each New Subscriber in the club, a premium of a Dollar Book—either "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought," in Cloth—all free by post or express.

This really brings the price of the paper down to $2 to each new subscriber, as they get THE TRUTH SEEKER one year and a dollar book for $3.

A Club of Four New Subscribers and $12 ($3 only from each) does this.

We want to extend our circulation, and we want to help our friends to help us.

It ought not to be difficult to get four New Subscribers in any town in the country, especially with these Splendid Premiums to assist.

Those who get up these Clubs will receive their copies of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" as soon as the book is issued.

Those who send a Club and Four New Subscribers and $12 before the book is printed, will have their names enrolled in its shining pages.

Something About the Bible.

Sometime since a Christian handed one of our subscribers a tract issued by the American Tract Society. It is No. 31 and must hav been written many years ago, for its arguments are fairly musty with age and the writer of it appears to hav looked upon Deism as the great enemy of his precious Bible. Apparently he had not heard of Agnosticism, Atheism, Monism, and modern science. Although there are many more agreeable and cleanly occupations than threshing over this moldy chaff, which has been worn down almost into impalpable dust, nevertheless some profit may accrue therefrom, because there are yet millions of people to whom the sophisms and inanities of this tractarian will seem logical and conclusiv, utterly demolishing the presumptuous Infidel. Such an admission concerning the mental incapacity of our race is not libelous, although it might appear to be so to one not well acquainted with the limitations of the average believer. But it is all very pitiful. However, let us see what our author has to say in support of his proposition that "The Bible is no Cheat":

"The scriptures are the work of bad men, or devils; or good men, or God."

It is the fatal weakness of religion that its devotees cannot be satisfied with what is natural and reasonable. Put the Bible into the hands of an intelligent man who had been prejudiced neither in its favor nor against it and he would say, after reading it from beginning to end, that it was undoubtedly written by men who were very limited in knowledge, who were easily impressed with the unusual and unexplained, and that some of them were unquestionably given to the use of figurativ and extravagant language. As to their moral character he would declare that some were evidently criminals, some good men, and that the others were scattered along between these two extremes.

"Bad men always hate the Bible, often persecute it, and would never hav been the authors of a book enjoining such strict holiness, and laying sin under such an awful curse."

Of course these are merely unsupported assertions. Sensible persons know that belief in the Bible is no guarantee of good behavior. Nearly every man whose name is written across the pages of the history of Christian nations as a wholesale murderer and heartless persecutor was a devout believer in the Bible. Protestant and Catholic alike are marked with the bar sinister of blood. And Biblical texts hav been the shibboleths on the lips of the most cruel torturers and destroyers of their kind. Eight short words—"Thou shalt not suffer a witch to liv"—hav caused more suffering than the pen of man can measure or describe. As to the "strict holiness" enjoined by the Bible it must be remembered, as we hav previously pointed out, that the Bible is neither all bad nor all good. If a God is needed to account for the good precepts in it, is not then a devil required to account for the bad precepts? Taking the volume through and through there is just as much evidence in support of the theory that it was written by a devil as there is in support of the Christian's assumption that it was written by a god. Which of them, to illustrate, is responsible for the eleventh verse of the second chapter of second Thess.: "God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie"? Or Deut. xiv, 21: "Ye shall not eat anything that dieth of itself; thou shalt giv it unto the stranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat it; or thou mayest sell it unto an alien"? Or 1 Tim. ii, 11: "Let woman learn in silence with all subjection. But I suffer not a woman to teach"? And so on interminably. Regarding the "awful curse" under which sin was said to hav been laid it is sufficient to say that the doctrin of eternal torment was the cause of millions of atrocities. Men who really believed the damnable dogma were ready for any crime against man if there seemed to be a chance that the murder of a Jew or a heretic would insure their own little souls safe passage into heaven, or remove a false teacher who, living, would jeopardize the salvation of their children or weaken the influence of the persecutor himself. And they found in this precious Bible ample authority for the destruction of unbelievers. Read these passages:

"If thy brother, the son of thy mother, or thy son, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend, which is as thine own soul, entice thee secretly, saying, Let us go and serve other gods. · · · Namely, of the gods of the people which are round about you. · · · Thou shalt not consent unto him; neither shall thine eye pity him; neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him; but thou shalt surely kill him; thine hand shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterwards the hand of all the people" (Deut. xiii, 6-9).

"If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrin, receive him not into your house" (2 John i, 10).

"If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye hav received, let him be accursed." (Gal. i, 9).

To quote again from the tract:

"Devils would never hav originated a book which exposes their hateful character, and strikes a blow at the heart of their kingdom."

While rational men and women of this age could not indulge the supposition that a devil wrote or inspired any book, it may be said, in passing, that no smart devil need be ashamed of the record his folks made in the old time, if the Bible is accepted as authentic history. God was involved in far more discreditable transactions than the "adversary," and the latter almost invariably got the better of God. It is admitted, also, that if the orthodox "scheme" works as it is predicted to do, the devil will get, at the lowest estimate, ninety-nine of every one hundred human souls. As the writer of Matthew tersely puts it, attributing the words to Jesus:

"Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat. Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

Not a very severe blow at the heart of the devil's kingdom, is it? To be sure the "bottomless pit" may eventually become slightly overcrowded, but doubtless the devil will be able to colonize some of his subjects elsewhere. He has always shown himself to be very resourceful, or there are a prodigious number of liars in the pay of Christianity.

"Good men, though the amanuenses of God, were not the authors of the scriptures, for they profess to write by divine inspiration; which, if they did not, they were gross impostors, and not good men."

Well, we are dealing with the human writers of the Bible, good, bad, and mixed. We can never know that they were inspired; if they were, the revelation was to them and not to us; we hav it only at second, third, sixth, or twentieth-hand, through the original writers, the transcribers, the translators, the collators, the modifiers, and all the rest of them. There is no doubt that there were plenty of impostors in the outfit. God said he would put a lying spirit in the mouths of his prophets, and Paul appears to hav had a tender side for guile. Mosheim, the church historian, says of the Christians of the first centuries of this era: "It was an established maxim with many Christians, that it was pardonable in an advocate for religion to avail himself of fraud and deception, if it were likely they might conduce toward the attainment of any considerable good" (Eccles. His.).

But did all the Bible writers claim to speak by divine inspiration? Did not some of them admit that they wrote only from tradition? In fact, what Bible author except the crazy showman of Revelations, distinctly says that he was inspired? What does Luke mean when he says in the opening verses of his first chapter?

"Forasmuch as many hav taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us, even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eye-witnesses, and ministers of the word; it seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee in order, most excellent Theophilus," etc.

Here he claims no more than that he had a "perfect understanding" of certain things because those "which from the beginning were eye-witnesses" had "delivered them unto us," by oral tradition, evidently, because they had not before "been set forth in order."

"The only remaining supposition is, that God is the real author of the Bible. And is it not in every way worthy of such an author—in the sublimity of its doctrins, in the pureness of its morality, in the benevolence of its spirit, in the consolation it affords in affliction and death?"

We hav already shown that the reasonable supposition is that the Bible was written by men of various degrees of moral worth and unworth, and possessing only a very limited knowledge of the world in which they lived. Now, as to the alleged specific intrinsic evidences of its divine origin—is the "sublimity of its doctrins" found in this?

"In the same day shall the Lord shave with a razor that is hired, namely, by them beyond the river, by the king of Assyria the head, and the hair of the feet: and it shall also consume the beard" (Isa. vii, 20).

"Above it stood the seraphims: each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly" (vi, 2.)

"Thou shalt make three fringes upon the four quarters of thy vesture" (Deut. xxii, 12).

Do these exemplify the "pureness of its morality"?

"And he said unto them, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel. Put every man his sword by his side, and go in and out from gate to gate throughout the camp, and slay every man his brother, and every man his companion, and every man his neighbor" (Ex. xxxii, 27).

"And they warred against the Midianites, as the Lord commanded Moses; and they slew all the males. . . . And Moses said unto them, Hav ye saved all the women alive? . . . Now therefore kill every male among the little ones, and kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him. But all the women children, that hav not known a man by lying with him, keep alive for yourselvs" (Num. xxxi, 7, 15, 17, 18).

We cannot quote the worst of these "Bible aids to morality." There is so much that is vile in this "word of God" that Liberals who hav compiled pamphlets composed entirely of such matter hav been persecuted under the laws against obscenity by Christians who talk solemnly of the elevating influence of the Bible! And what shall we say of the "benevolence" of the spirit of this book? Again we will let it speak for itself:

"Both thy bondmen, and thy bondmaids, which thou shalt hav, shall be of the heathen that are round about you; of them shall ye buy bondmen and bondmaids. Moreover of the children of the strangers that do sojourn among you, of them shall ye buy, and of their families that are with you, which they begat in your land; and they shall be your possession. And ye shall take them as an inheritance for your children after you, to inherit them for a possession; they shall be your bondmen forever" (Lev. xxv, 44-46).

"And if a man smite his servant, or his maid, with a rod, and he die under his hand; he shall be surely punished. Notwithstanding, if he continue a day or two, he shall not be punished: for he is his money" (Ex. xxi, 20, 21.

"Servants be subject to your masters with all fear; not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward" (1 Peter ii, 18).

As to "the consolation it affords in affliction and death," it may be somewhat soothing to the few who know they are sure of heaven, but to the masses of "outbreaking sinners," and those who are in doubt as to the sufficiency of their passports, the Christian creed, if they really believe it, must be a nightmare of perpetual horror. How must the Christian mother of the criminal feel when she contemplates the never-ending torments of the damned, knowing that her precious, even if wayward, son had not repented and been washed in the atoning blood ere he died—that he was cut off in the midst of his wrong-doing and plunged unshrived into the seething caldron of God's unassuagable vengeance? And millions hav known the unspeakable agony that wrings the loving heart which believes that its beloved are forever shut out from mercy and doomed to anguish indescribable through eon unto eon. If it be said that few Protestant Christians now believe in hell, it is sufficient to say that this statement is not true; that the masses yet believe. Those who hav abandoned the belief and who yet cling to the Bible hav had the old-time weight lifted from their hearts, not by that book, but by their loss of faith in one of the most essential factors of the Christian "plan of redemption," and that emancipation is due to education, science, Freethought. There is yet more to be said in regard to the "consolation" which the Bible affords the dying. What comfort can the Christian believer in immortality derive from these passages?

"As the cloud is consumed and vanisheth away: so he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more. He shall return no more to his house, neither shall his place know him any more" (Job ii, 9, 10).

"For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they hav all one breath; so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast: for all is vanity. All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again" (Eccle. iii, 19, 20).

This subject will receve further attention soon.

Still Misrepresenting Sunday Opening.

The American Sabbath Union held its fifth anniversary in this city a short time since. Among the resolutions adopted was this:

"Resolved, That we render hearty thanks to God for the vindication of the Sabbath at the Columbian Fair. His ways are not as our ways, nor his thoughts as our thoughts. His enemies kept open the Columbian gates, but he made their wrath to praise him. The covered exhibits, the meager attendance, the conspicuous absence of workingmen, the unmistakable opposition of public sentiment, together with the financial loss entailed by Sunday opening, make it certain that no similar attempt of such colossal proportions will ever be made to overthrow in America the sanctity of the Lord's day."

If God "vindicated the Sabbath" anywhere, it was not at the Fair, but rather in Congress, frightened out of all regard for the Constitution and equal rights by the clamors of the clergy and the forged and stuffed petitions poured into that body by the American Sabbath Union and its allies. The talk about "his ways" and "our ways" is a virtual confession that the Sabbatarians do not think they were victorious, spite of all their crowing. The "covered exhibits" prove nothing but the narrowness or cowardice of those who covered them. In several cases state buildings were closed by the votes of the state legislature, which had surrendered to the Sabbatarians a year or more before the Fair opened, and before the common-sense people had awakened to the situation. The attendance was "meager" only because the Fair was practically closed by the covering of exhibits, the stoppage of the machinery, and the failure of the directory to provide any compensating attractions. The heavy attendance of the last four Sundays—reaching one hundred and forty thousand the last Sunday—shows very conclusivly what Sunday opening would hav been for the people had the business been conducted in a sensible way, in calm defiance of the meddling pietists.

Workingmen could not afford to pay fifty cents admission to a show which bigotry and inefficiency had shorn of the major portion of its attractivness. But the attendance toward the close of the Fair tells the real story. If there was financial loss it was due, not to Sunday opening, but to Sunday closing. Such talk as that of the American Sabbath Union resolution is equivalent to the assertion that a merchant who keeps open but three days in the week has small sales because he kept open those three days!

The pretense of interest in the welfare of the workers is well exposed by the chatter about "the sanctity of the Lord's day." Not that they hav any fears that laboring people will be injured by excessiv work consequent upon the Sunday opening of places of instruction and amusement do the Sunday worshipers bombard Congress and legislatures with petitions and heaven with prayers against rational use of the first day of the week. They are not really worrying about "rest;" it is the "sanctity" of their bread-winning day that causes them so so much anxiety and induces them to work so hard in behalf of the Puritan Sabbath.

Wanted—New Subscribers.

We solicit the kind attention of our friends to the need which exists of increasing the subscription list of THE TRUTH SEEKER. There are several reasons for this, which our readers will readily see. First, It will do a world of good, by making more Liberals and by interesting those already liberal in the work of Freethought. The church is making great encroachments upon our liberties, and the people need to know about it, in order to defeat its tyranny. And those who read THE TRUTH SEEKER are a hundred times more interested and activ than those who do not. Second, It is a duty we owe to our fellow-men to giv them the light of reason we hav obtained. Liberalism makes for true civilization, and freedom from fear of an angry God makes men happier and better. Every Liberal should do all he can to lift up his neighbors from the darkness of superstition to the glorious plain of mental liberty. And, as Mr. Wakeman says, referring to the resolution regarding the Liberal papers passed at the late International Congress: "They are the very life of the cause of intellectual and practical emancipation of the people. As such they are to be built up and sustained by constant care, payment, encouragement, and solicitation for subscribers for them." Third, An increase in the list will relieve the readers from the occasional "duns" we are compelled to send out in order to get money with which to pay bills. If we can obtain two or three thousand new subscribers, the increased revenue will make the business work of the paper easier, and we can continue to improve the paper without fear of financial embarrassments.

To reward those who will do a little for us in this matter we hav arranged to take a large number of Mr. Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," and to every one who sends us four new yearly subscribers at the regular rates of $3 ($12 in all), we shall send a copy of that magnificent work free. Those who send the club before the book is on the press will be enrolled among the original subscribers and patrons in the book.

And to make it easy to get these four new subscribers we will offer them as a premium either of two spendid works—The "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought" in cloth binding. Our readers know the value of these books, and that about every Liberal in the country would like a copy of one or the other. Either one of these, as may be chosen will be given to the new subscribers obtained in these clubs of four, and a copy of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" to the one who gets up the club and sends the money and names.

We cannot afford to make this premium to single subscribers, but to enable old subscribers and single new subscribers to obtain these and other desirable works at a great reduction, we hav made a list of premiums in connection with subscriptions to the paper, to be found in the first column of the first editorial page of THE TRUTH SEEKER. We are willing to do our part toward making the obtaining of good Liberal works easy and cheap, and hope our readers will take advantage of the terms offered.

Once more we ask that a favorable eye be turned in our direction, and a helpful hand extended. As the resolutions of the International Congress expressed it, Boom the Liberal papers and you boom the Liberal cause.

Liberals Who Stand Up to Be Counted.

In Santa Ana, California, there is a public reading room. There lay upon the tables THE TRUTH SEEKER, the Investigator, and other Freethought publications. This was too much for some Christians. The sight of the Liberal papers made them blind to justice. Of course their own papers had the same chance that the others had, but that would never do. What business has an Infidel to claim fair play for himself and his belief? The Christian papers must be granted a monopoly. So some one objected to the Freethought papers, and off they went. Then the bigots were happy. But their joy was of short duration. The glucose of intolerance turned to gall and wormwood in their mouths. Mr. D. M. Baker, of the Standard, was the alchemist who wrought the transmutation. He quietly filed a protest against the Christian papers, and off the reading room tables they went. It was neatly and effectivly done. But how it did hurt! Such a cry of outraged innocence as went up from the rigidly righteous! Hearing it, and being uninformed to the contrary, you would hav supposed that the dear pious souls were being persecuted by the wicked heretics. However, they are checkmated for once, for there is a free paper in Santa Ana, and so the truth is sure to be laid before the general public. Our subscriber, Mr. Theophilus Hirst, says in the Standard, referring to the exclusion of THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator:

"To exclude these two papers from the tables of the Santa Ana Free Library is a disgrace to this city, which proves it far behind the age in which we liv. It is a flagrant violation of the individual rights of a large class of the reading public of this city. It is an act of narrow religious intolerance and petty tyranny resulting from deep-rooted prejudices and a mean spirit of persecution. If the editor of the Standard has given the aggressors more than they bargained for, it is their own fault and serves them right. Aggression deserves to get back all it givs with good interest to boot."

The Standard says editorially:

"When the churches let the people's literature alone they will never hav theirs disturbed. They are welcome, so far as Freethinkers are concerned, to all the religious trash and nonsense they can pile up, but we claim the right to introduce the intelligent literature of the day as an offset against their creeds, dogmas, and hideous theories. A Freethinker never oppresses anyone. He asks for no proscriptiv legislation; restrains no one's opinions by force or law. · · · The sectarian saints are kicking on the objections filed by D. M. Baker to their literature. We simply ask, Who began this fuss? If you don't like the medicin, withdraw your objections and hav a reading-room. A Freethinker pays taxes and has equal rights with all of you. Take your medicin or act with common sense. Giv the Freethinkers their literature, which they pay for, and you can hav yours. The day of church proscription is passed."

Good for the Santa Ana Liberals! To Freethinkers everywhere they say by their acts: "Go and do likewise!"

Mr. Charles Watts will contribute the second installment of news and views from England to THE TRUTH SEEKER of January 13th.

In the American Catholic Quarterly, the Jesuit father, James Conway, says the Pope is infallible when he approves of religious orders but not when he suppresses them. Even the most zealous supporters of authority don't like the lash when it is laid across their own shoulders.

The Sunday paper contains a deal of foolish stuff, but what an improvement it is over church services! By the by, papers issued on the other days of the week contain a vast amount of rubbish, but who thinks of suppressing them on that account? You understand why not? They don't so directly compete with the ministers as the Sunday issue does.

President Andrew D. White, writing of the Christian prejudice against the Jews, records this: "As late as the middle of the seventeenth century, when the city council of Halle, in Wurtemberg, gave some privileges to a Jewish physician, 'on account of his admirable experience and skill,' the clergy of the city joined in a protest, declaring that 'it were better to die with Christ than to be cured by a Jew doctor aided by the devil.'" Precisely the same spirits of ignorance and bigotry are rampant in the United States to-day. Names usurp the place of merit.

Talmage brings suit against a publishing firm of this city for printing as a speech of Wendell Phillips a sermon which the Brooklyn pulpiteer delivered some twenty years ago. If the book publishers did this thing it is to be hoped they will be mulcted in heavy damages, for the American people cannot afford to permit the name of Wendell Phillips to be smirched by such a miserable libel.

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of January 20th we shall publish an exposé of the Roman Catholic parochial school teaching. It will include extracts from their school-books, exposing their falsification of history, and the relation of the Roman Catholic church to science. In the face of the facts we shall giv, the attempt to induce the state to place our public schools in charge of the church seems most monstrous. We hope Freethinkers will circulate this issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER freely. It will do good.

It not infrequently happens that people who think that they are so uperior to others as to be above all obligation to treat them as equals, woefully overestimate their own assets. This was true in the case of Professor Bishop, of St. Petersburg. Says the London Woman's Herald: "He was a violent opponent of woman suffrage, his chief argument against it being that the average weight of a man's brain was 1,350 grams, while that of a woman's was only 1,250. When his own brain was weighed it was found to be five grams less in weight than what he had declared to be the average for women's brains."

Divorce is dual murder! So avers F. Herbert Stead in the Independent. He puts it this way:

"Jesus has laid down the law and the ideal of the home with rare explicitness. Now shall we not as individuals and as churches resolve to combine to maintain this decree of the Christ against all comers? He has declared the ethically irrefragable nature of marriage; it is a personal unity created by God—a two-fold life as real and distinct as the single life, the willful destruction of which is two-fold murder."

Therefore, when a judge releases from the marital tie a woman who has for years been terrorized and maltreated by a drunken, violent vagabond, the dispenser of justice is a double murderer! Sweet Jesus, what logic, law, and humanity!

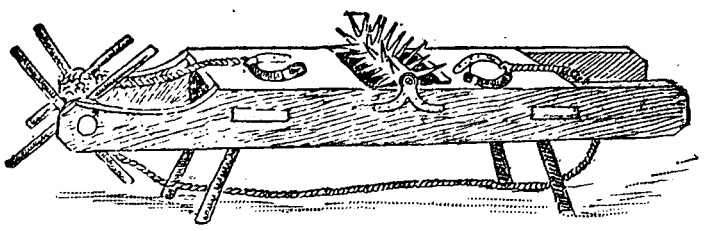
Old Boreas placed violent hands upon the bustle of the snug schooner Gertrude Summers on Christmas week, and pushed her up the Jersey coast in such good time that Capt. Silas Latham sold his cargo of 16,000 pounds of bluefish and ate his Christmas turkey under the eye of Mrs. Latham. When he came back from Noank he called here to get some reading matter to while away the evenings on his next voyage, and when he departed $25 worth of bluefish were left with the editor to spread Freethought. The captain has done this to us before, and seems to hav great luck in fishing, whether in consequence thereof, or in spite of it, we leave for the theologians to determin. But at any rate, the Gertrude Summers has the best wishes of all around here. And we hope she will poke her nose into a school of a million bluefish and get them all aboard!

The Independent is not pleased at the prospect of the admission of Utah as a state. The act of admission provides this irrevocable ordinance:

"That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured and no inhabitant of said state shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship."

This, the Independent complains, is not enough; "there is no constitutional provision which can prevent the Mormon priesthood from tyrannizing in state matters." Our contemporary speaks advisedly. It knows that similar and stronger guarantees in the United States Constitution and in state bills of rights hav not prevented the Protestant and Catholic priesthoods from tyrannizing in national and state matters. But it has not the honesty to say so frankly. It fights the Mormon priesthood, not because it is a priesthood, but because it is not its priesthood, because it is a rival hierarchy.

Everybody knows that everything can be proved and every "reform" supported by the Bible, but even this general knowledge hardly prevents us being surprised when suddenly confronted with the specific statement that Jesus was probably a vegetarian! Of course the ludicrous and mendacious claim that the Bible is favorable to total abstinence and prohibition can never be surpassed in marvelousness by any new tax upon our credulity; but, nevertheless, when Rev. Henry S. Chubb, of Philadelphia, founds a church of which no one not a vegetarian can become a member, and calls the church "Bible Christian," and in his paper, Food, Home, and Garden, avers that the fish Jesus is said to hav eaten may hav been lotus or seaweed, we cannot help asking, "What next?" The Sea of Galilee must hav been rich indeed in vegetable growths to furnish sustenance to so many fishermen! Is there any conceivable reform or supposed reform that the Bible worshiper will not seize upon when it becomes measurably popular, and fraudulently label "Christian"?



Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts has resigned the editorship of the Christian Statesman, the National Reform organ. In the last issue of that paper he recapitulates his work for "Sabbath reform" during the last five years. All friends of Freethought should read it, that they may see the extent to which government by preacher has already gone in this country, and understand something of what it threatens for the future. He thinks of establishing in Washington a "National Bureau of Reforms," which will work against various "un-American elements in the lobby" of Congress. Herrick Johnson, Joseph Cook, Mrs. J. C. Bateman, and other like "reformers" will be associated with him. What will the Freethinkers of the United States do to establish at the national capital a Freethought Bureau? It is imperativly necessary that the enemies of religious liberty and social justice be sharply watched and effectivly antagonized. We cannot afford to hav any more religious legislation by Congress. Already too many precedents hav been established. This country was dedicated to freedom, and it was decreed that church and state should be separate. It cannot be denied by any honest and intelligent person that the ship of state is rapidly drifting from her secular moorings out into the rock-torn waters of ecclesiasticism. We must at once bring her back to her safe anchorage or meet wreck and death in the near future.

"BERLIN, Dec. 28.—Emperor William arranged an exhibition at Wildpark this afternoon for the empress and their children. Half a company of chasseurs chased the pheasants in the Sans Souci preserves toward the garden in front of the new palace, where his majesty, standing on the step, shot one hundred and forty-three of them, the gamekeepers handing him guns ones after another. Afterward the emperor moved to the main front of the palace and shot eighty-seven more pheasants. The empress and family and the members of the imperial suite and household watched the shooting from the palace windows."

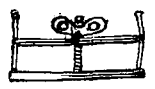
That is your very pious emperor, the man who esteems himself, before all other men in Germany, the favorite of God; the man who claims that he is divinely commissioned to rule and rob the people of that country. Probably he would hav thought it little less than treason to himself and blasphemy against God had his wife or his children or any member of "the imperial suite or household" declined to be brutalized by watching his heroic slaughter of some hundreds of helpless birds. Christian flunkeys hav much to say of the great piety of this young Hohenzollern, and no doubt deem it very fortunate for his children that they hav so "good" a father to look after their moral training, while the children of Freethinkers are subjected to such terribly demoralizing influences! But what Freethinker would arrange for his children such a hardening, distorting, cruel, crime-breeding "exhibition" as that which the "God-sent" ruler of Germany provided for those whose father he is, unfortunately?

HISTORIC MEANS OF GRACE

Persuasive Implements by Virtue of Which the Religion of Love Was Made Triumphant.

The Rack.

"RECOMMENDED BY THE HOLY INQUISITION."



"I USED to read in books," says Colonel Ingersoll, "how our fathers persecuted mankind. But I never appreciated it. I read it, but it did not burn itself into my soul. I did not really appreciate the infamies that have been committed in the name of religion until I saw the iron arguments that Christians used. I saw the 'thumbscrew'—two little pieces of iron, armed on the inner surfaces with protuberances to prevent their slipping; through each end a screw uniting the two pieces. And when some man denied the efficacy of baptism, or maybe said, 'I do not believe that a fish ever swallowed a man to keep him from drowning;' then they put his thumb between these pieces of iron, and in the name of universal love and forgiveness began to screw these pieces together. When this was done most men said, 'I will recant.'" "The man who would not recant was not forgiven. They screwed the thumbscrews down to the last pang, and then threw their victim into some dungeon, where, in the throbbing silence and darkness, he might suffer the agonies of the fabled damned. This was done in the name of love—in the name of mercy—in the name of the compassionate Christ. I saw, too, what they called the 'collar of torture.' Imagine a circle of iron, and on the inside a hundred points almost as sharp as needles. This argument was fastened about the throat of the sufferer. Then he could not walk, nor sit down, nor stir, without the neck being punctured by these points. In a little while the throat would begin to swell, and suffocation would end the agonies of that man. This man, it may be, had committed the crime of saying, with tears upon his cheeks, 'I do not believe that God, the father of us all, will damn to eternal perdition any of the children of men.' I saw another instrument, called the 'scavenger's daughter.' Think of a pair of shears with handles not only where they now are but at the joints as well, and just above the pivot that unites the blades a circle of iron. In the upper handles the hands would be placed; in the lower, the feet; and through the ring at the center the head of the victim would be forced. In this condition he would be thrown prone upon the earth, and the strain upon the muscles produced such agony that insanity would in pity end his pain. I saw the 'rack.' This was a box like the bed of a wagon, with a windlass at each end, with levers and ratchets to prevent slipping; over each windlass went chains; some were fastened to the ankles of the sufferer; others to his wrists. And then priests, clergymen, divines, saints, began turning these windlasses, and kept turning until the ankles, the knees, the hips, the shoulders, the elbows, the wrists of the victim were all dislocated and the sufferer was wet with the sweat of agony. And they had standing by a physician to feel his pulse. What for? To save his life? Yes. In mercy? No; simply that they might rack him once again."

All these instruments of torture, these means of grace, as seen by Colonel Ingersoll, are now on exhibition in New York city. They are arranged for inspection in a hall at Sixth avenue and Twenty-third street. The exhibit does not consist of duplicates or fac similes of the instruments of torture, but of the original instruments themselves, which in the past did the deadly and infamous work of breaking the bones and tearing the flesh of human beings. They are mostly from the royal castle of Nuremberg, in Bavaria, but include Spanish and Italian specimens. The collar introduced here, it will be noted, is a Spanish article—a piece of bric-a-brac from the Holy Inquisition. The thumbscrews mentioned by the colonel are there. I saw them a few days ago, and the sight of them corrected my impressions of what thumbscrews are. I had in some way got the erroneous notion that thumbscrews were intended solely for compressing thumbs and that they took their name from the members compressed. That, I now conclude, is not so, because they may be used on the wrists, legs, or head, or to prize the offender's teeth apart so that the "blasphemous" tongue may be torn out with pincers furnished with still other thumbscrews. These instruments are of various sizes; but, being always worked by a thumbscrew, like that which spreads and closes a pair of dividers for describing circles; or like those which fasten a clothes wringer on a washtub and depress the upper roller, they are all called thumb screws. The prevailing style used on the fingers and thumbs of prisoners are made of two pieces of iron about three inches long, and two short rods. The rods are riveted in one of the flat pieces; the other piece has a hole in each end so that it may slide up and down on the rods. Between the two rods is the thumbscrew, which is turned to bring the upper and lower pieces together. The inner sides of the two latter are sometimes roughened like the sole of a rubber boot, so that the flesh is pierced by blunt protuberances; others have little spikes that penetrate the upper and lower sides of the thumbs. I here present my drawing of one of these, which I have christened a "Happy Thought." The large ones crush the shin bones, or the bones of the wrists. There is also an open iron band with knobs on the inside, put on the head and tightened by means of the thumbscrew, pressing the knobs against the skull. This is called the "iron crown," and was worn by religious martyrs on the way to execution. Here again appears the deadly thumbscrew, which runs through the whole system of religious torture as the cross runs through the system of worship. A comparison of the influence of the one and of the other upon the growth of Christianity might be decided in favor of the screw.

SPANISH COLLAR.

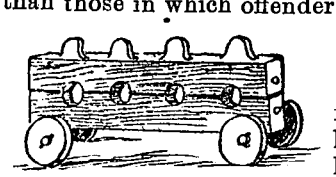
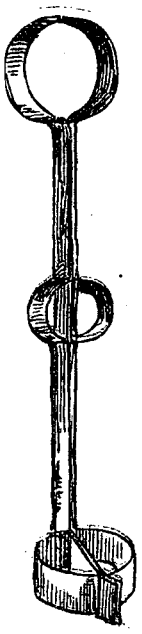
A HAPPY THOUGHT.



FOR THE HEAD—KNOBBY CROWN.

The plain, every-day rack, for simple stretching purposes, was without the spiked roller. As shown by this copy of an old print, they hauled the victim taut and left him to suffer.

THE PLAIN RACK.



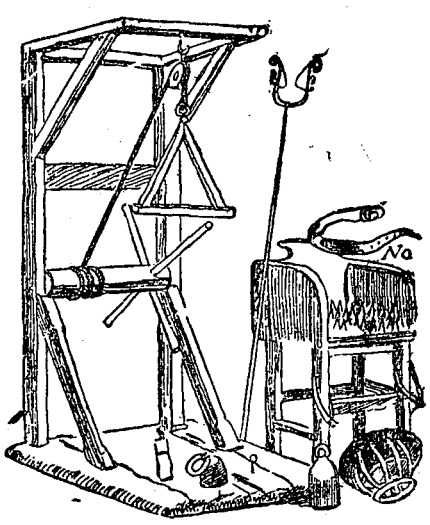
Stocks for ordinary offenders were less diabolical than those in which offenders against heaven—that is to say, the church—were fastened; nevertheless, the agony inflicted by them must have been something horrible. Whether the four apertures in these stocks were used for confining the feet of two persons at the same time, or whether they received both the hands and feet of a single individual, I hav no way of knowing.

THE STOCKS.

The collar of torture is as described in the foregoing quotation from Ingersoll, except that in some specimens the iron spikes on the inner side have springs back of them to maintain a constant pressure on the neck of the wearer. The dead spikes would appear to be bad enough, but rendering them alive and perpetually active by means of the springs is an ingenious refinement of cruelty that I was not prepared for. I imagine that a sensitive person looking upon this instrument could almost feel the points puncturing the skin of his neck. It made me run my finger around inside my collar to press it away from my throat.

The scavenger's daughter noted by Ingersoll is a horror, but how about torture stocks with accommodations for the neck as well as for the wrists and ankles, like this?

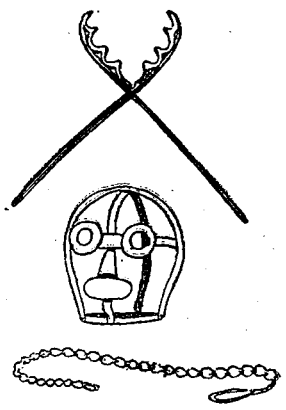
TORTURE STOCKS.



Then the rack, like the wagon bed with the windlass at one end for stretching the joints of the sufferer and drawing him forward and backward. This apparatus in the present collection is furnished with a spiked wooden roller placed across the bed under the victim's middle. The spikes on one of them are sometimes blunt and merely bruise the flesh, but this roller can be exchanged for another (see headpiece, "The Rack") called the "spiked hare," the points of which are sharpened, and these would puncture a man's flesh to a depth of two or three inches if he lay upon his back. If turned on his face, they would disembowel him.

But the rack was not the only system in vogue for stretching men's limbs and joints. The accompanying illustration, which shows another method, is from a historic engraving of "Geleyn Cornelius, hung by his thumb with weights to his feet, 1572." Cornelius was afterwards burnt. The engraving from which I obtain the picture of Cornelius hanging by the thumb is inclusive enough to show the victim's torturers seated at a table playing cards! No doubt it is historically accurate.

GELEYN CORNELIUS.



A third stretching machine appears in "A Specimen Group." The feet are either weighted or lashed to ring-bolts in the floor. The wrists are made fast to the triangle, and then—the windlass is turned! Alongside "Fearful Eliza," as this stretching gallows is called, is a chair. Will you take a seat long enough to reconsider the views you have expressed about the whale story? Will you sit down and reflect that after all Joshua may have "held-up" the sun for a day? The spikes in the seat will prevent you from slipping out, while the strap will see to it that you do not arise until you have had plenty of time to think of your latter end.

A SPECIMEN GROUP.

The crown just in front of the chair in the "Specimen Group" is of iron, susceptible of being heated. Back of the chair is a constable's thief-catcher. It is not spiked inside like the heretic-catcher, stealing being a minor offense compared with a failure to be orthodox. Presumably, if the fugitive had only committed murder, the instrument would be lined with fur.

Among the instruments of torture is a mouth-opener used on blasphemers. It is made of two small iron plates. These are inserted between the upper and lower teeth and spread apart by turning the deadly screw. The jaws being thus forced open molten lead was turned down the throat or the tongue caught with pincers and either slitted, torn out, or cut off. The pincers used for this purpose have hooked teeth like the fangs of a serpent. The vicious little group which I have labeled "a trinity" includes the pincers for removing the tongue. The second member is a mask (put on red-hot); and the thing that looks like the skeleton of a snake is a metal scourge. This trinity was in its time of material service in stimulating the worship of that heavenly Trinity in whose name the implements were manufactured and applied. There was a perforated iron spoon for dropping hot lead upon naked bodies.

A TRINITY.

The instruments for flaying do not indicate that a victim was skinned after the fashion adopted by butchers of cattle. The man or woman was strung up by the hands or feet, while the skin, with the flesh adhering to it, was dragged off with pronged hooks.

Some of the torture implements are of polished steel, damascened with pious inscriptions. The shackles especially are punctured with holes in the form of a cross. Among the irons used for branding, the letter "U" predominates, which in most languages means unbeliever. The little coal stove in which the branding iron was heated, together with the bellows used for blowing up the fire in it, are exhibited. Executioners' swords are numerous and ornamental. The average blade is some two feet nine inches in length by two and three-fourths inches in width. The end is blunt as though broken square off, and the handle is made to be grasped with both hands. The condemned one sat in a chair, with bowed head; the executioner whirled his blade in the air and if sufficiently strong and expert severed the neck at a blow. The swords are piously inscribed with the names of the deity and Christ, or with rhymes that may be freely translated about like these:

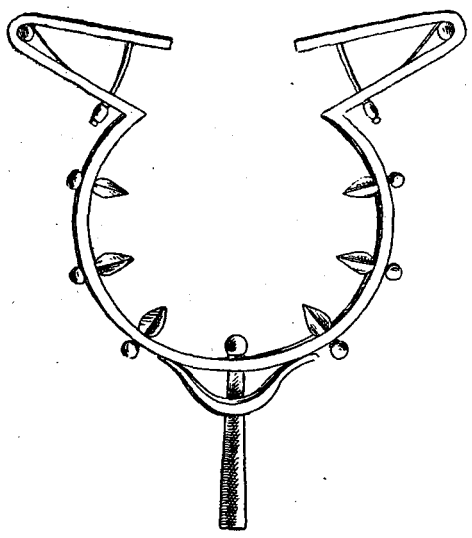
O God, this sinner to thy kingdom take
That he may taste of joy, for Jesus' sake.

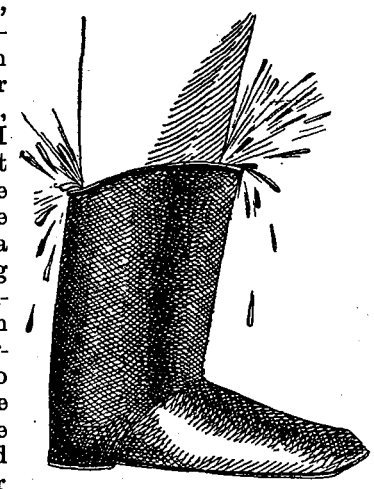


Or,

Christ is the judge, and I the instrument,
To execute God's law from heaven sent.

Or again,

When I upraise the fatal knife,
God give the sinner eternal life.



They had a heretic and witch catcher—a hoop on the end of a pole. The ends of the hoop at the opening were so arranged that they opened when the thing was pushed upon the neck; then they sprung together again. Some of them were provided with a spike in the ferrule, with which the constable could prod the culprit's shoulders as he pushed him along.

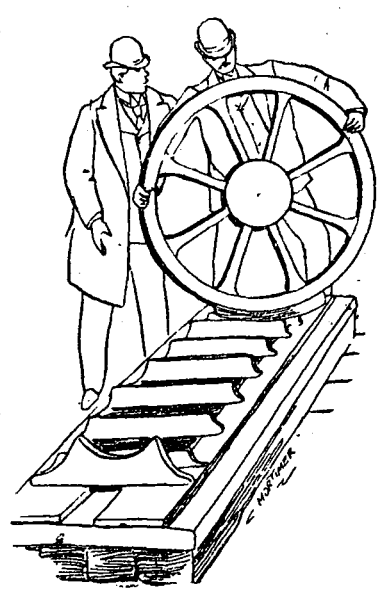
Large iron boots, to be put on red-hot or filled with melted lead after they were donned, occur frequently. I present an exact drawing of the "Iron Boot." The spattering lead is a vision of the young artist who accompanied me through the chamber of horrors, thrown in to make the picture more realistic. Wire mail mittens and hose were used for extorting confessions, and were always worn hot. The Spanish gag to prevent prisoners from crying out while undergoing torture looks somewhat like a bell slit into sections. The appliance being thrust into the mouth, a spring is released, which spreads the sections and distends the jaws. This religious device is called a mouth-pear. Another gag resembles a policeman's club, but the lower end of it is composed of hinged sections which are spread by turning the handle. It is a distinguishing characteristic of the devices for harassing unbelievers that they are almost universally lined with sharp points or spikes. There is a belt made of wire and called the "penitent's girdle," with teeth on the inside like those of the "card" used on cattle, only they are straight. The penitent's crown, collar, armlet, wristlet, and manacle are all made with special reference to puncturing the skin and flesh.

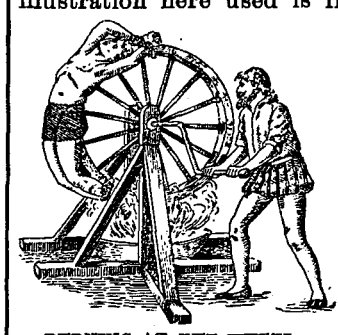
THE IRON BOOT.

THE HOT MITTEN.



MOUTH-PEAR.

For blasphemers an iron brank or mask is provided. It was heated before being placed on the head of the wearer. This device is highly recommended "by the holy Inquisition." It has funnels at the orifice of the ear for the more convenient introduction of melted lead.



RECOMMENDED BY THE HOLY INQUISITION.

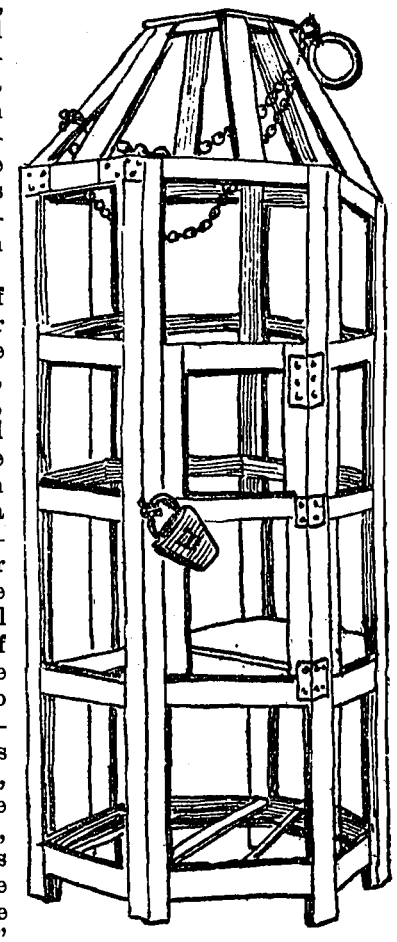
"Breaking on the wheel" is illustrated with a bed made like a corduroy road. The cross pieces are six inches apart, and the upper sides of them are sharp. The victim is laid along this bed, and bound down. The executioner takes a wheel with a heavy iron at the lower portion of its circumference, stands astride the condemned, and brings the iron down upon him at points above the spaces between the cross-pieces, breaking every bone in the victim's body.

BREAKING ON THE WHEEL.

I am indebted to the New York World artist for the illustration of the wheel and bed. The process of burning on the wheel, of which the illustration here used is from an old and rare engraving, shows us that sometimes the executioner varied the monotony of crushing a man's bones by roasting his flesh.

BURNING AT THE WHEEL.

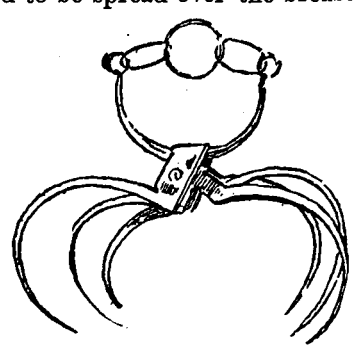
One instrument for execution is an upright plank, the top end beveled on both sides like the point of a cold chisel, or like an inverted V. The offender sat astride this upright plank, with heavy weights attached to his feet, and was gradually split in halves. That is the "Spanish Donkey."



A twin brother of the Spanish Donkey is a sort of quartering machine, composed of two planks pivoted where they cross in the middle. Upon these a man might be stretched as shown in the accompanying cut, and the planks turned at right angles to each other, so that the victim was not only crucified but torn limb from limb. This cut is from an ancient print.

QUARTERING MACHINE.

The "cradle of unrest," used to induce children to testify against their parents, is a cradle, covered inside with wooden spikes. The head-rest or cushion, also spiked, is movable, and the torture inflicted upon a child or youth rocked in this diabolical machine would doubtless make him commit perjury in self-defense.



Instruments of torture thus far described were used impartially, it is presumed, on both men and women, but there are a few which may be put in a special female department. For example: the "Ducking Stool Cage." Inside of the cage will be seen a seat; to this the offending woman was bound. Then, suspended by the ring and chains, the cage was lowered into the water, and the inmate "ducked" until half-drowned. Before life was extinct she was hauled up, only to be doused again as soon as she had recovered her breath. It was held by the priests, who ruled the home, that in this manner the lady would be made amiable and chaste, so far as other men were concerned, and complaisant toward the servants of God.

THE DUCKING STOOL CAGE.

There are in the collection a large assortment of collars for scolds, and masks and branks for witches, but a device that seems about as abominable as anything to be imagined is the so-called "chastity belt." Some of these belts are wound with cloth, and show by the stains on them that they have been actually worn. But one is of rough and rusty hoop-iron, and there are teeth on it like those of a saw, pointing inward. Christian women should turn with a tender yearning toward the time when the church ruled the world and prescribed punishments, and long for those happy days to come once more.

If not enough has been said let the women gaze on this horrible piece of ingenuity, the spider. It is a cluster of steel hooks pointed like needles. It is designed to be spread over the breast of the woman; the hand of the torturer grasps the central ring, drawing the points together, and then the flesh is torn away. And the Father of Mercies permitted this thing to be done in his name and under his all-seeing eye.

As the church made a virgin the vehicle for bringing its alleged founder into the world, it naturally made another one the instrument for putting its enemies out of the world. Hence was invented the "Iron Virgin." This chaste creature is preserved in a glass case. She is probably eight feet tall and nine feet in girth. She wears a cloak of wood and iron, which opens in front, revealing an interior lined with spikes shaped like harrow teeth, seven or eight inches in length and sharp as bayonets. Iron handles swing the virgin open and disclose the spikes. The figure stood above a trap-door opening into a moat or ditch, so that when the spikes let go of it the corpse dropped into the water and floated away. The spikes are not as numerous as some sketches of the virgin would indicate, but they are located where they will do the most damage. Two are apparently intended to enter the eyes, others the chest, and still others the abdomen. The virgin was the avenger of offenses against the church, such as doubt or unbelief.

This relic dates from some time in the fifteenth century and its habitat was Nuremberg. It is the only one ever made, and it is not in a remarkably good state of preservation. The wood, probably four hundred and fifty years old, is rotting, and the nose of the virgin has disappeared. The iron is rusty and crumbling where the wood has fallen away from it. The whole image, in fact, is typical of the faith in whose interest it was conceived and constructed, though it has outlasted the power which made it a terror. Despite her decay, the iron maiden's embrace would still be deadly. The spikes that once punctured the brain and heart of the heretic retain their ability to pierce, though the hands that actuated them have been dust for centuries. The doors might still swing inward to enfold the form of the unbeliever, but there is none that dares to close them upon him in the name of God. To the Christian the figure must be a melancholy emblem of the golden days of the church that can no more return than the exhumed monsters of prehistoric times can be reanimated and made to walk the earth.

Such are a few of the instruments of torture and death in the collection I have attempted to describe. Visitors walk about the hall, catalogue in hand, with funereal quietness, as though the place were a graveyard. At stated intervals they are called from a contemplation of rusty relics by the ringing of an unmusical bell. It may be a little startling to persons who happen to be reading the description of Exhibit No. 632: "This bell was rung while the condemned was taken to the block or scaffold." But it rings now only to call the visitors to their seats and listen to a lecture, by Professor Freeland, on what they have been contemplating. So that, if we class the ordinary stereotyped musée lecture among instruments of torture, as inflicting cruel and unusual, and therefore unconstitutional, punishment upon American citizens, we have to admit that the function of this bell has been mitigated. It ought sometime to toll the funeral knell of a religion which lags superfluous, whose fundamental dogmas have been discarded, and whose most effective means of grace have become the showman's stock in trade.

THE EXECUTION BELL.

A Letter From London.

An obscure preacher belonging to the sect of Wesleyan Methodists, being, as is the way with preachers, anxious to gain notoriety, took upon himself with this object the task of delivering a funeral sermon onthe decease of the National Reformer, and in the course of his remarks made the time-honored assertion that men who profess Atheism do not become stronger in their belief as time goes on, and to support this statement inferred that such was the case with the late Charles Bradlaugh, and to prove this stated that a member of Parliament told him that he frequently conversed with Mr. Bradlaugh on religious subjects, and on one occasion the latter said to him that he wished he were half as good as his brother, who had recently been converted. Mrs. Bradlaugh-Bonner of course questioned the truth of this most remarkable statement, and wrote to the member in question, asking him if he really told the parson such a tale. No answer was returned direct, but a letter was sent to the man of God saying that the narrativ had been somewhat garbled, and that Charles had said on a certain occasion, "My brother James is a good fellow." Although Mrs. Bonner pointed out that her father never had a brother James, and had no very remarkable affection toward his brother, the "evangelist," who could scarcely be called "a good fellow," as he was always libeling the Atheists, this lying parson had not the good manners or common sense to get out of his lie by saying he had made a mistake, but informed Mrs. Bonner that she was not honorable enough and ladylike enough for him to continue the correspondence. No doubt this wretched, convicted liar will go on glorying in his infamy, and be looked upon as a hero by the congregation he humbugs, for of such is the modern kingdom of heaven.

It must hav been somewhat ludicrous to see that other notorious liar, Price Hughes, at the Labor Conference. He talked very big outside the chamber, and evidently meant to upset the whole bench of bishops; but, as soon as one of the crew insisted that the "living wage" question was not to be discussed, the brave Hughes roared very meekly, and humbly supported the bishops. He has a thick, impervious hide, so he was not affected by the contempt shown him for his despicable conduct by other and honester parsons, who would not knuckle under to the church dignitaries, as they call themselvs. It seems to me a great piece of impudence for the clergy to discuss matters solely relating to the workers, for precious few of them can ever see that the working classes hav any rights, only duties, which they are called upon to always carry out, and never to forget to carry themselvs lowly toward their betters, the betters also being members of the loafing and sweating community.

The laborers, however, are not quite so well inclined to humble and abase themselvs before the representativs of wealth as they were even a generation back, and are beginning to discover that, while capital cannot exist without labor, it is possible for labor to exist without capital, and it is only a question of time when co-operation of labor, or some form of Socialism, gains the day and rules the world, or some considerable portion of it. Christianity and individualism are in the same boat, and as they hav ably supported one another in days gone by, they are declining together, and will eventually sink into oblivion.

Saladin has apparently been caught napping, otherwise I cannot account for his opening his columns to a parson who has only used them for the purpose of abusing better men than himself. It is always the way with parsons, they can never argue a case on its merits. This particular genius has for some months past been going to prove the deity, etc., of Jesus Christ, and has not yet commenced on the subject. It is always well, theoretically, to allow free discussion, but when it comes to the practical part, it means cutting out interesting matter to admit the ravings of some clerical lunatic, which are neither interesting nor instructiv. Over the columns of a high-class periodical black beetles should not be allowed to crawl. J. D.

For fear man would eat of the tree of life and liv forever God turned him out of the garden and placed a flaming sword where it would frighten him. Since that comes his son and offers all the millions of millions free board with the governor. Either he has built an addition and changed his mind materially or el e somebody has made a mistake.

The "Fall" of Man.

Read what constitutes the very foundation of our religion, and ask yourself, How can it be thus?

We are taught that God made the universe himself from nothing. He then made man from the dust he had just created, and that man (not being created perfect) proved a failure. If man had been made perfect, he could never have fallen.

Who, then, could have been to blame for man's imperfections except his maker? As the Lord God furnished his own material and did his own work, who but himself could he blame for the "fall?" The Lord's intentions must have been good, for he is said to be "all-wise, all-powerful, and all-merciful." And as there can be but one "first cause," God or Jehovah, as the Bible tells us, who was or could be to blame for all the sin, suffering, and death of the world but Jehovah himself? The wiseacres who pretend to know God's business tell us that God gave us a free agency to do as we wish, and in doing so we sinned and lost our hold on God's love through the seductive influence of a being called the devil. Where the devil came from, I know not; but do know that Jehovah must have known before he made Adam that he would fall, and if death was to be the consequence of the fall, I fail to see where God's mercy comes in when he forced Adam from inanimate dust into the world, knowing he would suffer death at his hands.

We learn that the devil proved nearly or quite equal with the Lord, and overthrew the good work the Lord had done by enticing Eve, a lady the Lord God had made, and who was young and void of the "knowledge of good and evil," (Bible) to partake of a forbidden apple and thus offend his majesty by disobedience.

God must have known that the devil was in lurking on purpose to frustrate his design, and that both Adam and Eve would fall; that he, the Lord God, would have to inflict punishment on them, to satisfy his own infinite displeasure.

What do you think of a story that thus degrades the God of our universe, and goes on to say that God pronounced a curse upon the trinity of the garden of Eden episode, as well as upon all their posterity?

What mortal man or "frail mother" would have so seen their daughter being led astray and do so little to protect her innocence as did the Lord God, who it is said is infinite and divine?

Allow me to ask where the devil and his antagonistic spirit came from if God did not create him? Who has made anything but God? Please follow the foolish story a little farther and see how the Lord became angry over his own failure in business and avenged himself on the trinity of disobedience. He pronounced judgment upon Eve that both she and her posterity should "bring forth in sorrow," and to Adam, that he should "earn his bread by the sweat of his brow," and caused Satan, the snake, to "eat dust and crawl on his belly all the days of his life." Could all this have been a real live, sure-enough God, to have got mad so easily and to allow his temper to explode in such a furious manner and yield injustice to the children of his own creating? Pray tell me how a snake could propel himself otherwise than to crawl on his belly? Surely he could not walk off upright on his tail.

Is it not true that every one of the mammal family brings forth in sorrow as well as the human female? Did Jehovah curse the whole animal kingdom simply because Eve ate an apple? Must the whole animal as well as vegetable kingdom devour its own to pacify the wrath of deity?

Can you believe such a story of a creator that made the billions of worlds that swing in space, our own at the velocity of over one thousand miles a minute? Could he that decorated the heavens with the twinkling beauties of night, that has strewn the milky way with the flowers of mystery, that fills the birds with twittering song, makes the heart of mothers rejoice for their first-born, that sends the sun's eternal kiss to cover nature with smiles and spread the carpet of green at our feet, get mad at his own error and force his own to suffer and die?

I ask is such, the God that required of the Jews the sacrifice of their first-born child, the one to hold sway over the intelligence of coming generations, and make dark and dreary the lives of coming man? Don't believe it.

If the story ended here it would do little harm, but the kite has a tale contingent, and goes on to say, that as man has fallen and had some one to cause him to fall, he must also have a savior to help him rise, showing that man is a creature of necessity and susceptible of influence for either good or bad (which is the only truth shown in the whole legend). The rule seems to work both ways, yet the devil and the savior were not the same individual, but both came in a mysterious way, and from a source of which we know not, but "with wonders to perform," for when God was once angry, some one had to suffer and die. It seems rather hard that in everything the God of the Jews did, some thing or some one must die at the wind-up to make all things look sacred and divine.

If there had been no fall we would have needed no savior and no consequent preaching of the gospel to keep the devotees in grace to pay the ministry; but as truth is stranger than fiction, the latter was first accepted.

Man is a creature of destiny formed by the law of "cause and effect;" is forced into life by no act or desire of his own; is forced through life a being of control from his prenatal existence to his death, and at last (as the story goes) we must catch in hell all the misery we are lucky enough to escape on earth, to pay the penalty of sin for one man and woman whom God created over six thousand years ago—unless we believe (a thing beyond our control) and be baptized to satisfy the will of a God who is embodied with the attributes of omniscience, omnipotence, omnipresence, and mercy.

Our home and family should be our heaven; truth and justice our redeemer; earth our paradise, and peace our god. A. D. SWAN.

Freethought Progress.

Several secular papers hav said some good things lately. The Hutchinson (Ks.) News givs a fair synopsis of Remsburg's lecture, "False Claims." This must hav surprised some of its Christian readers: "In the matter of charities, the church, he said, made false claims to a monopoly. He referred to the public charities of ancient Peru, Greece, Rome, India, and among the Saracens where endowed hospitals were first established. Coming down to modern times he showed that the bequests and charities of Liberal thinkers would compare very favorably with churchmen, and instanced the public and private gifts of Girard, Smithson, Lick, Sandford, Cooper, Tyndall, Ingersoll, etc. · · · His discourse at least tends to enlarge the horizon of one's information." A correspondent of the News in the same issue hits the missionary humbug a smart rap in a weak spot.

Referring to efforts in behalf of Sunday closing the Santa Ana (Cal.) Standard emphasizes these facts: "1 They are not to secure or guard any right or privilege of the people. 2. They are in the interests of Sunday sacredness, and to secure the recognition of Sunday in such a way as to giv it vantage ground from which its friends may intrench it in the law and place it on a legal basis. 3. The methods practiced in obtaining them, and the representations concerning them, are often fraudulent and deceptiv. 4. Being used in the interests of a religious institution, their influence, as far as any is exerted, is to place power in the hands of the church, which will result in the destruction of the liberties of the people."

The Chicago Advance, having spoken of "The rescue, in the interest of all who labor and are heavy laden, of the sacred rest-day from the attempted over-sloughing of it by the World's Fair management," the New York Evening Post comments: "This somewhat enigmatic expression apparently means the indorsement by the public of the attempt to secure Sunday closing of the World's Fair. We dissent entirely from the theory that there was any such indorsement. As a matter of fact the Fair was open every Sunday after the first few weeks, and although no effort was made until the last month to attract the people on that day, tens of thousands always improved the opportunity to visit Jackson Park. What is far more important, Sunday opening vindicated its wisdom in the opinion of all candid persons among those who had been doubters. There was never any drunkenness or disorder, and not the slightest bit of evidence was offered to indicate that a single human being who attended the Fair on Sunday suffered any harm. Towards the end of the season the outcry against the system died out entirely except with the most fanatical Sabbatarians. By the time the next World's Fair is held, the people who advocate closing it one-seventh of the time will be as much out of date as are already those who would close public parks on Sunday, abolish free concerts for the people on that day, and shut up the art galleries and museums which are now open on the first day of the week. Public opinion has settled this question, and the victory for the cause of sound morals deserves to be celebrated." This victory can best be celebrated by keeping before the people the principle of religious liberty. The legal victory in the higher courts was won by the Sabbatarians. Yet the fact of Sunday opening was of great weight and value.

Commenting upon the Bonner-Rees correspondence the Halifax (Eng.) Evening Courier says: "The genesis of a misrepresentation is often of a very astounding character. When Mr. Bradlaugh was last in Halifax, he had occasion to emphatically deny the charge of an opponent at the meeting, who retailed the oft-told story that Mr. Bradlaugh had publicly challenged the deity to strike him dead. It will scarcely be credited, but this very denial by Mr. Bradlaugh has since then grown into the myth that the last time Mr. Bradlaugh was in Halifax he challenged the deity to strike him dead. Comment on such a glaring piece of mendacity is needless."

Robert Buchanan, the well-known author, writes to the London Star: "I am a man who openly and frankly declines to label himself 'Christian,' because he has no sympathy whatever with the Christian program, and no faith whatever in the Christian theology or morality. I go still further than that. I affirm that the sins and blunders of orthodox Christianity, great as they hav been, are venial in comparison with the hypocrisies and vanities of the heterodox, or 'essential,' Christianity; and I shall continue to preach the faith that is in me, in defiance of the 'essential' Jew with his tongue in his cheek, and the 'essential' Christian who has 'hoisted himself with his own petard.'"

The People's Paper, of Versailles, Ind., observes: "The government need not hav the chaplains about. The government might do less praying and more work; it would be better for the people. The people like to do their own praying, and the Constitution guarantees to every man the right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. What right a president or a governor has to say to the people, Fast on such a day or pray on such another day, we can't see. Those officers hav a monopoly of all the good things of this world, and want to make us take ours in the next."

In two editorials recently the New York World has spoken out in meeting about Sunday laws. These are among its remarks: "The courts are constantly monkeying with the Sunday laws and rendering decisions first one way and then another, until a person may well be puzzled to tell whether they liv in the present century or a hundred years ago. In some places people are being prosecuted for selling Sunday newspapers, and now the court of appeals decides that it is a penal offense to go out fishing on Sunday. Yet the newspaper keeps people out of mischief on Sunday more than the Bible itself, because it is far more extensivly read, and it is impossible to imagin an amusement more quiet, harmless, and innocent than fishing. The old Sunday laws are only a little less behind the age than the fagot, the ducking-stool, and the whipping-post. · · · Now, why should not this law be repealed? It exists solely for the purpose of enforcing the religious observance of a day. · · · It is the business of the state to protect all men equally in their perfect religious liberty and beyond that to keep its hands off. · · · To forbid it [fishing] by law merely because the theological notions of some persons condemn it is to impose one man's conscience upon the conduct of another without reason or right. The law ought to be abolished."

The London correspondent of the New York Times writes: "Huxley's collected essays, now being issued in popular form, are probably leading all else here in steadiness of sale. The fourth volume, just out, contains a preface which has attracted marked attention. It deals with the Oxford 'Helps to the Study of the Bible,' which work it subjects to a merciless sweeping attack, ending with the declaration that it would be a parallel if he (Huxley) issued 'Helps to the Study of Zoology,' in which the progress of science during the past fifty years was ignored and every recent authority passed over in silence."

The supreme court of Montana, in the case of the Montana Catholic Mission Society of Jesus versus Lewis and Clarke County, decides that "an institution of public charity itself is not exempt from paying taxes on its property, but that certain of its property is exempt; also that the property is exempt which is actually used for an institution of purely public charity. · · · The constitution exempts property used exclusivly for institutions of purely public charity. The legislature in the revenue act used the same language. An intention to use the property for the purposes of purely public charity is not sufficient to constitute the use contemplated by the constitution and the law. · · · The law describes the property that is exempt and not the institution which owns the property. Otherwise an institution of the kind described might hold exempt from taxation all property of any character and of any amount in value, whether it used that property exclusivly or at all for purely public charity. The judgment of the district court of Lewis and Clarke county is affirmed." Montana is decidedly in the lead just now. Our readers will call to mind in this connection the opinion of Attorney-General Haskell on the use of the Bible in the public schools, from which we quoted liberally last week.

Churchly Purpose and Performance.

Evidently England is a long way from being civilized; militant Christianity is still dominant in many parts of the island. Mr G. W. Foote, editor of the Freethinker, and president of the National Secular Society, recently attempted to lecture in Ryhope. Previous to his coming a Christian lecturer had incited the faithful of that colliery town to violence against the Infidel. He was hooted and jeered the moment he entered the hall. The cool and plucky protagonist of Freethought talked for nearly an hour, occasionally getting a moment's hearing, but the confusion was appalling. At last the gas was turned off, and Mr. Foote and his friends had to grope their way out as best they could. Part of the crowd followed him to the miner's cottage to which he went to await the time for departure on the train, but they lacked courage to make an attack upon the building. ∴∴ "The Medici," an opera by the Italian composer, Leoncavallo, is in trouble in Vienna. Leoncavallo had made Giulano Medici murdered by two priests. This is too much for Austria, so two noblemen are to be substituted as the criminals. Alas! the poor Austrian nobility! ∴∴ Justice Grantham, of England, seems desirous of wearing the mantle dropped some time ago by Sir George Jessel, the Master of the Rolls. Recently he directed the jury to discharge a man accused of an assault upon a little girl. And why? Because, as the child knew nothing about God, Christ, or the Bible, his judicial mightiness would not take her testimony! ∴∴ Mrs. Frank Smith of Cortland, Ohio, lately went insane through religious excitement.

In the Kansas City barber-shop Sunday fight the Sabbatarians secured conviction in the first case tried, F. R. Hale of the Midland hotel being tried before a jury and fined $25. ∴∴ The Michigan Federation of Labor wants the Sunday-running of all freight trains, except those carrying live stock, prohibited. How about fruits, etc.? Labor can secure a rest day without any Sunday nonsense. ∴∴ In St. Louis the retail clerks hav appealed to the Ministers' Alliance for help in Sunday closing. And yet there is no doubt that these clerks are as ready as others to go into the country, and to buy confections, cigars, drinks, and papers on Sunday. ∴∴ In Minneapolis the ministers and a few foolish papers are trying to dictate to the city government in regard to Sunday-closing. ∴∴ At Leavenworth, Kansas, a barber was fined for Sunday work. His "crime" will cost him more than $100. How long are these clerical scoundrels to be permitted to rob honest men? ∴∴ At Old Portage, Ohio, two men were fined for Sunday trapping. ∴∴ In Tacoma, barbers are determined to close by law all shops which refuse to close voluntarily. For the "general good," of course. The old dog in the manger trick. ∴∴ A bill prohibiting the running of mail and all other Sunday trains has been introduced in the legislature of South Carolina. It has the support of the Columbia Register, Governor Tillman's organ.

Lectures and Meetings.

COLONEL INGERSOLL will lecture in Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 8, 1894, at the New Park Theatre. Subject, "Abraham Lincoln."

S. P. PUTNAM'S lecture appointments:

Boston, Ingersoll Secular Society, Jan. 7th, 14th.
Northport, L. I., Jan. 18, 19, 20.
Newark, N. J., Jan. 21.
Ohio Liberal Society, Cincinnati, Jan. 28th, 29th.
Delphos, O., Jan. 30th, 31st, and Feb. 1st.
Chicago, Ill., Feb. 18th, 25th.

Those who desire lectures at any points between New York and Chicago, and in the vicinity of Chicago during the month of February, will please write at once to Mr. Putnam, care of THE TRUTH SEEKER, New York.

J. E. Remsburg will start on a tour through Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, and New England early in January.

THE Brooklyn Philosophical Association holds meetings every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in Long Island Business College, South Eighth street, between Bedford and Driggs avenues. Program of lectures for January:

January 7th—Mr. T. B. Wakeman: Subject, "Cosmic Evolution and the Unemployed."
January 14th—Professor Eames: Subject, "Ethics versus Dogma."
January 21st—Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.: Subject, "Microbes: Their place in Nature."
January 28th—Mr. John Swinton: Subject, "John Brown of Ossawatomie."

THE Pittsburg Secular Society meets in Curry University Hall, Sixth street, near Penn avenue, every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

THE First Secular Church of Portland, Ore., meets in Central Labor Council Hall, 170½ Second street near Yamhill, every Sunday at 7.30 P. M. Sunday-school in the same place at 10:30 A.M.

"HAWAII: Should We Annex It?" was the subject of Mr. Henry Nichols last Sunday at the Brooklyn Philosophical Association. The lecture was full of historical facts, brought together gracefully. So far as the association is concerned the question is by no means settled. Mr. Wakeman speaks next Sunday.

J. E. REMSBURG recently filled his seventh engagement at Ft. Worth, Tex. Referring to his lecture, the Ft. Worth Gazette says: "The lecture on 'Bible Morals' last night at the City Hall by Mr. J. E. Remsburg was a strong one from his standpoint. He was introduced by Col. A. Harris. In his preliminary remarks Mr. Remsburg said there were many beautiful and grand truths in the Bible, many proverbs and facts of great value to the race. But other nations had their Bibles also, and there were very many good things in them. Each nation, however, denounced the sacred books of the other. He would not be understood as condemning the Bible without reserve, but he would not accept it as an infallible book of morals, and that for many reasons." After giving a lengthy synopsis of Mr. Remsburg's various indictments of God's book, the Gazette concludes as follows: "The lecturer was greeted with a fine audience of some three hundred ladies and gentlemen, whose undivided attention he held while he completely deluged them with an avalanche of quotations from the Bible and from profane history to prove his propositions. His language was chaste and choice and his methods cool and deliberate."

THE WOMEN'S LIBERAL LEAGUE, of Philadelphia, meets in the Skerrett Building, Ridge avenue and Green street, Tuesday evenings at 8 o'clock. Admission free. All are welcome. Program of lectures for January:

January 9th—Diana Hirschler, "Union of Practical Progress."
January 16th—Ralph Raleigh, "The Coming Woman."
January 23rd—Miss Mary O'Reilly, "Child Labor in our Own State."
January 30th—Wayland Smith, "Principles of Theosophy."

THE Ohio Liberal Society meets in College Hall, 168½ Walnut street, Cincinnati, Sunday evenings at 7:45, prompt. Admission is free. Program for January:

January 7th—L. A. Fealy: subject, "Madame Blavatsky."
January 14th—Chas. C. Reemelin: subject, "The Earth and Man as an International Totality."
January 21st—debate: subject, "Christ's Blood Cleanseth from all Sin." Affirmativ, Prof. J. S. Van Cleve, Ph. D.; negativ, Prof. Chas. Augustine.
January 28th—Samuel P. Putnam: subject, "The Glory of Infidelity."

"Take no heed for the morrow" was a part of "the glad tidings of great joy" which alarmed the Jewish authorities quite properly.

Letters of Friends.

Another Case of Blackmail.

GLOBE, A. T., Dec. 4, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: I like your paper very much. The cartoons are excellent. But what I wish to speak of now is this: Here in our town sometime ago a man died. As he was a "sinner" and his wife a Catholic, a certain priest, hearing of it, went to console the widow. He told the lady that her husband was in purgatory and that he could pray him out and would do it for $100. The contract was made. The widow has paid $20 of the one hundred and the specified time is nearly up. The priest says if she doesn't pay the remainder he will let the soul return to purgatory.

May THE TRUTH SEEKER liv long and prosper. Yours for truth and honesty,

F. M. COOPER.

Don't Blindfold Your Reason When You Open the Bible.

ST. PARIS, O., Dec. 9, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $2—$1 for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and the other for Bell's "Handbook of Freethought," the "Crimes of Preachers," and Paine's "Age of Reason."

I hav been a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER for several months, and think its pages are imprinted with matter which will find a welcome in the minds of those who wish to remove superstition, credulity, and ignorance, and implant, instead, science, education, and truth.

It occurs to me, if people in reading the Bible would exercise their reason and not be afraid to think for themselvs, the belief in its inspiration would surely seem to be the most consummate nonsense. Could not a being able to perform such miraculous feats as creating the planets, etc., create a more harmonious book? In observing the partiality of God toward certain nations of believers we see enough to show that he is of human invention.

Woman Kisses the Hand That Smites Her.

NORTH ENGLISH, IA., Dec 15, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: I would subscribe for the good old TRUTH SEEKER if it were not for the fact that I am traveling on the road nearly all my time, and I get home only once in three months. It would not do at present to hav the paper go to my home post-office, as my wife is a Catholic, and she has told me she would burn every copy she could get her hands upon. I make this statement to explain why I hav not long since become a regular subscriber to the paper. If I was at home nearly all the time I should hav the paper anyhow.

I was a Catholic myself until about five years ago. On my travels I met Mr. H. S. Blinn, of Council Bluffs, and he started me to thinking a little for myself. Then I met Mr. A. H. Petty, of Correctionville, Ia., with the result that I am now an Infidel instead of a slave of priestcraft I reason with my wife and beg her to giv up superstition, but thus far it's of no use.

Please send another bundle of sample copies. A COMMERCIAL TRAVELER.

Knows a Liberal Proposition When He Sees It.

COLFAX, WASH., Dec. 4, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: You hav done the thing up in fine style in offering Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" and THE TRUTH SEEKER for $6 50. It has solved the question with me. I wanted the book and could not do without the paper, and money is very scarce in this part of the state. The great Jehovah saw fit after giving the people a bountiful crop to continue his blessings in the shape of a continuous rain, till two-thirds of the grain crop is rotting in the stack or in the sacks after threshing, while thousands of acres of grain standing in the fields will never be cut; and as we are in the same boat with the rest it made us feel rather blue, but we had to come to time when we saw that very liberal offer of yours. I think every Liberal in the country should take advantage of it and get Mr. Putnam's book; I know it will be grand.

Inclosed find money order for $8.75 for the following order: Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," THE TRUTH SEEKER, "The Story Hour," and "Apples of Gold." V. J. BORRETTE.

Sunday Laws the Beginning.

LEXINGTON, KY., March 4, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: Recently several stores, usually kept open on Sunday, were closed for the better observance of that holy time. It is probable that priests and their assistants hav always known that they were practicing upon the credulity of the human race, for their ceremonies hav been shamefully childish and at all times an insult to human reason.

The great cardinal remarked that they were religious when they were mere infants, so of course piety was to them like the rest of their toys; but when they find that this plaything rules the world, bringing money and comfort to the clergy, has one of them the honesty to admit that the cruel, inefficient God is a myth, not fit to excite worship or command respect?

Why should these little encroachments on our liberties be considered so dangerous? Because we know what occurred long ago, when religious restrictions became unusually severe; when a few differences in doctrin caused a fierce outbreak of pious rage; the bloodhounds of war were let loose upon the delinquents by the church-power; neither age nor sex was spared, and the hills ran blood from their summits. Something About Deposits in the "Overworld" Savings Bank.

BELVIDERE, ILL., Dec. 11, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: It is gratifying to know that there are a great many Christian people who, notwithstanding the brutal features of the creed they profess to believe, are yet naturally so superior to it that they cheerfully respond to appeals for charity. During these hard times, when there are so many out of employment and so much suffering in consequence, they not only contribute to the wants of the poor themselvs, but they also try to induce others to do so likewise, whether Christians or not. In furtherance of this noble object they sometimes quote this scriptural promis: "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord." At the same time it is intimated that, as a rule, any such loan to the Lord will be repaid in the next world and not in this. To the pious believer in God's promises it is evidently not a losing speculation to largely invest in charitable deeds, since they are confidently assured that the security is first-class; but to the unconverted, the unbeliever, the ungodly, or the wicked sinner it is certainly a tantalizing and worthless promis, for this reason: Suppose that a common sinner, charitably inclined, should giv assistance to those in poverty—and it is a pleasure to know that there are a great many such sinners who do so, and do so solely from an impulse of sympathy for suffering humanity, and with no expectation of ever getting their money back—and this common sinner should shortly afterward die in an unconverted state; then, according to Christian theology, he would go straight to hell. Now here is where the first difficulty arises: Being in hell, how could he manage to get his loan to the Lord repaid? There being a great gulf fixed between him and heaven, over which it is impossible for him to pass, how in hell could he apply to the Lord for a repayment of the loan? But since it is said that the Lord can go anywhere, it becomes evident that if the Lord has any honor about him he will go to hell himself or send a deputy to pay this poor, damned, unfortunate sinner the amount he owes him. Now, supposing that the Lord did do the honest thing, that he did go there and pay the poor fellow; then, lo! this other difficulty confronts him: How in hell could he be benefited by it if paid in money? for, if it was in the form of greenbacks, they would burn up; if it was in silver or gold, it would melt; but even supposing it was made fire-proof, who in hell would accept it, or what in hell could he get for it? If he should wish to spend ten cents of it for a dish of ice-cream to cool his parched tongue, where in hell could he get it? Then if he ascertains that it is not possible for him to employ this money in buying any comforts calculated to make his sad condition less miserable, what in hell would be the good of it to him?

But enough; the subject's tough, there is not a bit of use to speculate any further; it should be referred to some one who is not only a good sky-pilot and well posted in the mysteries of godliness, but who is also a good hell-pilot and equally well posted in devilishness. Mr. Editor, would you please call Brother Talmage's attention to this damned conundrum, in order to relieve the anxiety of an ungodly man?

Yours truly, ROBERT SWAIL.

What Is It?

Dec. 10, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: What is spirit, or mind? Some suppose it to be absolutely and positivly immaterial, because it is purely spirit. Others believe mind to be the result of organism, and contend that it cannot exist without a brain, which is the grand organ that secretes thought, even as the liver secretes the bile (which, by the way, is a false theory), as the stomach its gastric juice! This, also, I think a little doubtful. All this we will leave for future considerations. The former of these suppositions is the one generally adopted by the heathen-Christian community who believe spirit to be an immateriality. The latter supposition is embraced by those Christians who wholly rely upon the Bible doctrin of the resurrection of the body for the future existence of the spirit. They are called Materialists because they make out the spirit to be of no substance at all, but merely the result of organized matter. Of this faith was the celebrated Dr. Priestley. This latter position is also adopted by some Atheists, who contend that spirit cannot exist independent of an organized brain; and as they reject the other dilemma of the Christian's hope of the resurrection, so they contend that mind is extinguished in the night of the grave and sleeps to wake no more. Hence the idea of a God as an intelligent spirit they regard as a freak of fancy. Both of these positions as regards spirit I reject, and will giv my reasons for doing so. I reject the immateriality of the spirit, because that which is positivly and absolutely immaterial can, of course, neither possess length, breadth, thickness, nor occupy any space. Indeed it cannot, in this case, possess any form, and that which possesses no form cannot, in the nature of things, occupy any space. And to talk of a thing having an existence which, at the same time, has no form, nor occupies space, is the most consummate nonsense. Hence an immateriality is a blank nothing. On the other hand, if mind is merely the result of organism, and if it cannot exist independent of an organized brain, then who made the first brain? Did it not require an intelligent spirit to organize its several parts, and adapt the eye to light, the ear to sound, and make these organs the inlets of sensation to the inhabitant in that brain? Surely the brain did not make itself, for this would be saying that the brain acted before it existed! But what is mind? Mind is the ruling power of the universe, and the time has come to hav the true, unadulterated material produce such mind as will abolish heathenism and hav a noble type of manhood. This can be achieved only through Freethought principles and literature.

Prayer Contrasted With Nerve.

READ CITY, MICH., Dec. 20, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: Never before had I been so forcibly struck by the absurdity of the so-called power of prayer and the entire scheme of religion as when I noticed Mr. Heston's cartoon in your TRUTH SEEKER of December 2d. Why people to-day in this age of progress and research can, as, alas! many do, resort to so foolish, superstitious, and utterly absurd a practice is far beyond my power of conception. Where would electricity, with its manifold benefits to mankind, be to-day had Benjamin Franklin confined himself within his closet to pray rather than investigating the deep secrets of nature, which underlie every great invention, every grand discovery by which man has ever benefited his fellow, rather than the power of one single being, or even three in one? If all the Franciscan monks in Christendom had got down on their prayer bones and prayed in regular orthodox style until the World's Columbian Exposition was declared open this spring, they would never hav prayed themselvs upon glorious American soil had not Columbus's firm determination guided him to San Salvador. Washington was a man that practiced prayer, but, when he came to cross the Delaware, he crossed it upon what would to-day be vulgarly termed "his nerve." People of reason know quite different, but the ignorant, like the poor, ye hav with you always. It is my firm belief that were children to attain the age of fifteen or thereabouts, with no impressions of religion in any form made upon their young minds, the next generation would be pure, sweet children of nature, as I fancy some were before Christianity set its seal upon the earth to mar what little virtue ages had given to man. And how were we benefited? Christianity gave us the clergy to support; superstitious notions that could be satisfied only by a liberal contribution to the priesthood, with which she founded nunneries and convents for the ruination of the simple, trusting maidens who were so foolish as to believe in them. Every student of history knows that Catholicism was founded for the sole purpose of obtaining wealth without honest labor, while one with half an eye can see what millions must be tied up in the church of Christ and its numerous annexes. The church gets this entirely by prayer, but where do the poor parishioners get it? By honest toil. The vices of Christianity (it has no virtues) are today a big thing to fight. But I am more than pleased that with my eye upon the indicator, THE TRUTH SEEKER, I am able to see decided changes for the better, even within the past year; for I notice people as a rule use their own heads more and the heads of the priesthood less.

WALTER E. GRAF.

One Who Lets His Light Shine.

ESKRIDGE, KAN., Dec. 12, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: I left Clinton, Kan., and came to this place last spring. For many years I hav been an outspoken Freethinker—I love liberty. My nearest neighbor is an old minister, and I had been here but a short time when he inquired as to my religious views. I told him I was a stranger and would rather wait until he could understand me better. But he insisted on the question. I stated my views plainly, which led to quite a lively discussion. He would sometimes say that I was a fool, but I did not blame him for that; I insisted that we should be friends and that he had as good a right to express his honest opinions as I had to express mine, but hoped that he would talk with me in a fair and candid manner, which he finally consented to do, and we discussed the question almost every evening for some time. He would often ask me questions; still he insisted that I would reason everything out of existence. To which I replied: "I cannot reason anything out of existence. I can reason many false theories out of some minds; many superstitions hav been abandoned as man has advanced, and it is only a question of time when orthodoxy must go. You cannot deny that as man has advanced he has lost superstition; that to revise a creed is to kill it; that the old dies and a new one is born; that the old was regarded as a mistake and that if a certain doctrin was necessary unto salvation nearly everybody would be lost." To cut a long story short, the gentleman is with me now and says that I am right.

Another minister of this town called on me the other day and said he would like to hav a positiv statement as to my religious views. I told him that I was what a great many would call an Infidel; that I always believed it best to be honest; that I would like to make the world better. I would like to remove all the pain and woe and suffering from this world. He wanted to know what I thought of the Bible; to which I replied: "I hav read the Bible carefully; I believe it to be an ancient history and of purely human production; the God of the Bible was jealous, envious, malignant, penitent, and revengeful." I told him that I did not believe in the account of creation as given in Genesis—in fact, I quoted many absurdities and contradictions contained in the Bible. He then asked me if I thought everything came by "chance." To this I replied: "Many people know but little of the persistence of force or the indestructibility of matter; in my judgment matter has existed forever; I cannot conceive of the indestructible being created.' He said: "Well, I believe that God created matter." I asked: "What God do you mean? Do you mean the Bible God?" "Yes." "Well, the Bible God is represented as having eyes, ears, nose, mouth, heart, feelings, etc., such as belong to physical organization; that would necessitate matter. Do you think that God created the matter of which he is composed? Where was he before there was any place for him to be?" I asked him many other questions, and finally he concluded that the great divine was right when he said that God was "an invisible organized intelligence." I replied: "Invisible—can't be seen; organized—without substance; intelligence—without a brain. All there is is matter; without matter there is nothing." "Well," said he, "you are an Infidel." I asked: "Will you please tell me the meaning of Infidelity?" He referred to Webster. I then asked him if he believed that Webster was inspired. "Well," said he, "Webster is the standard." I asked: "By what authority, natural or supernatural?" No answer. I continued: "Is it possible that God let the world go for thousands of years without telling his children the meaning of the term Infidelity, and that if it had not been for Webster we would still be in darkness? Where did Webster get his right, and when did I lose my right, to define the term 'Infidelity?'" He asked: "What is your definition?" I replied: "If 'Infidelity' means anything wrong intellectually, it seems to me that the 'Infidel' is a man who is false to his own mind—that is to say, the man who preaches what he does not believe is the real Infidel. It is wrong to apply that term to an honest man, one who expresses his honest thoughts. If such a man is an 'Infidel,' I wish that all were 'Infidels'" Then he said: "If you had a change of heart you might see differently." To which I retorted: "You cannot change a man's heart without killing him, but the mind may be changed." C. V. WILLIAMS.

Let the Galled Jade Wince.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Dec. 15, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: From the antics of our mutual friend Peck in your issue of Dec. 9th, one is led to suspect that he has lately come in contact with something that has disturbed his equanimity. In the essay referred to, Mr. Peck falls into sarcasm, as our other mutual friend Wegg used to drop into poetry, and exhibits quite as much aptitude in the rôle he chooses, as did the individual whose life-purpose it was to subject the nose of the golden dustman to the operations of the metaphorical grindstone, and, it may be added, meets with about the same measure of success. It would seem to the unprejudiced observer that our friend's descent from the high position of a would-be instructor in finance, which he assumed at the beginning, to the very low and swampy ground he occupies at last, where, for lack of arguments with which to meet the objections of those he looked down upon from the altitude of the preceptor's platform, he is obliged to confine himself to absurd conjectures in regard to the objector's diet, is deplorably precipitate and undignified. Friend Peck says that he cannot answer all the letters he has had antagonizing his views, which, considering the fact that his views are somewhat queer and unusual would seem more than probably true. But when it is remembered that Mr. Peck has appeared in your paper several times since his article which precipitated the "earthquake" was printed, without attempting to meet any of the arguments advanced in even those antagonistic articles which were printed, the conclusion is pressed upon one that Mr. Peck either has a very feeble case, or else that there are other lines of mental effort for which our friend is better equipped than he is for debate.

If this be not the case, it would seem as if he might better hav noticed some of the points raised against his position than to hav wasted his space on the desert air of absurd and ineffectiv ridicule of the plaintiff's attorney.

Mr. Peck notices but one of the objections made against him in my paper, and that not to answer it, but to simply remark: "Mr. Roscoe asks me if I would take Confederate money in exchange for cows. This shows that he has studied the money question deeply." Of course this is Mr. Peck's neat and epigrammatic way of intimating that I hav given but little thought and study to the question of finance. It seems queer, however, that our iconoclastic friend, who objects so strenuously against unfair ecclsiastical methods of debate, should hav descended to the same level by wresting that seemingly absurd question from its context, leaving it to be presumed that that was all there was of it, whereas that question followed an attempt to show that Mr. Peck's assertion that "it does not matter what material money may be composed of, if it be only convenient," and that money being only a measure of value, needs intrinsic worth no more than a yard-stick, was and is not true. "We wish to know the length of a stick of timber," said Mr. Peck, "and we apply the yard-stick. The rule need not be of gold or silver in order to measure correctly." I called his attention to the fact that money was not only a measure, but also an equivalent given for the thing measured, and asked him if he would accept Confederate money in exchange for property, on the ground that, being called money, it measured values as accurately as any money could. His brief and convincing reply to this reasoning is, "This shows that Mr. Roscoe has studied the money question deeply." Now, if Mr. Peck had "studied the money question deeply," could he not hav done better than that?

Again, when asked for proof that Ernest Seyd bribed the American Congress to demonetize silver, is that proof furnished when Mr. Peck tells me that I "would do better to use my powerful intellect" in telling why water pours over Niagara Falls, or why a rainbow does not stand upside down. If Mr. Peck calls this kind of thing debate, he should join the church as preacher, in order to hav a pulpit from which to address those who do not think, or if they do, hav no chance to talk back. Then, Mr. Peck, assuming the rôle of "a Lilliputian specimen of humanity," from which he rapidly changes to the character of "a glow-worm under a calcium light"—his first appearance, voluntarily, in that dual rôle on any stage—wishes to know "if every independent government has not the power to make money from or of any material it chooses." Fearing that he may never be an inquirer again, let us hasten to answer that various governments hav made money of various materials according to their pleasure, but that no government has ever yet succeeded in maintaining for more than a short time the value it assigned to its money if the latter had not some commodity basis the intrinsic value of which was generally recognized as being the most stable, sure, and convenient measure of value, unless that money was made of such commodity, fixed in the coinage at its market value. Of course, it is entirely possible to float an irredeemable currency, if no better is attainable, so long as the quantity that would circulate of that better currency is not exceeded. But no nation has ever restricted itself within this limit, and probably never will for long.

In taking leave of Mr. Peck I hasten to remove the one distinguishing difference between himself and "our Bob," and at the same time rehabilitate him with whatever of self-respect my characterization of his financial ideas as idiotic, absurd, and so forth, may hav divested him, by remarking that I did not say or think that he was or is a fool. So far from that being the case, I assert that I hav read articles from Mr. Peck's pen that were really sensible and well thought out. But it is not necessary that one should be a fool in order to write foolishly. It is not neccessary to plunge into a discussion of a question one has not studied and write without reflection, which Mr. Peck has clearly done in this financial question. The head and front of his offending hath this extent—no more—that while assuming the rôle of instructor, he is unable to even attempt to answer the objections of those he looks upon as needing instruction because they differ with him. E. O. ROSCOE.

The Right to Work.

MR. EDITOR: It is remarkable how many persons feel qualified to discuss the relations of capital and labor—to define the duties of one and rights of the other. Some of them seem to think it wrong that anyone should hav more property than another, when it is only such ones who can giv employment to others. Some loudly demand the right to work, as if anybody in this country had denied the right. And sometimes the priest hypocritically flatters the poor by denouncing the rich, while he himself is fattening on their mites and winking at the millionaire with the other eye.

Most of the small writers and talkers on these subjects seem to indorse, without thought, the erroneous notion that all men are born as equals. Without stopping to consider heredity, climate, and other causes operating to produce variety, two palpable facts present themselvs to the observer: 1. That not only is each race and nation materially dissimilar from all others, but the members of any given community differ widely in strength of character, ability, and influence. 2. That in all ages and climes the many hav been led and controlled by the few.

Diversity in mankind, as well as elsewhere, is a law of nature. At one time and place she projects, like a mountain peak, a Confucius; at another, a Buddha; then a Moses, and other prominent personages on down through the Christian Dark Ages to a meteoric Voltaire and a luminous Paine. There hav been times when a Cæsar or a priest, as demigods, ruled the world; and even now, in this age of progress, a pope with a magic thread of superstition lassoes and controls the greater part of Christendom.

In respect to government, the more absolute the monarch the fewer individuals will be found who possess any influence. And right here in our better republic, the individual sovereign who thinks he has a hand in sailing the ship of state, if he takes sufficient interest, goes to the caucus and receives orders from one or more leaders who dictate the nominees and the policy.

Now this disparity of human energy and influence is witnessed more or less in individual effort to obtain the means of living. Every community has its more prosperous class and its working class; and the workingman who, from lack of prudence, skill, or sagacity, has not been able to accumulate anything, is apt to attribute the difference of condition to mere luck. He seldom doubts his own ability, and is often ready to giv advice.

"Do you know, Mr. Longhead," says Mr. Shortsight, "what I would do were I in your place?" "Perhaps not, without trial," replies Mr. Longhead; "but were you I, probably you would do as I do, and were I you, I should do just as you do." One who is not a parent knows just how the child should be treated, and he who never owned a dwelling knows just what the man of means ought to do.

The Shortsights are numerous and of many varieties. Some of them start early in life with the notion that money spent for cigars and beer does them more good than if deposited in a savings bank. Some of them think it necessary to dress like a Longhead, although hardly able to make ends meet. Some, who are scarcely able to support themselvs, take wives to help them raise up large families of such as demand of the Longheads the right to work. Some of them form societies which forbid working for Longheads except on their own terms, and then claim the right to work. Some of them vote for all government extravagances, erroneously supposing the Longheads hav to pay all the taxes. With the expectation of having more work and higher wages, they vote monopolistic privileges to the Longheads. The higher wages attract to our shores millions of hands to share them with us and help to flood our markets with their productions; and when the Longheads hav to stop their mills to avoid loss, there is a loud cry of the right to work. When a builder finishes a contract and has to discharge or lay off the workmen, he is not disputing their right to work.

The right to work is equal with all, but all hav not equal ability. The assertion that all wealth is the product of wage labor is not more than half true. Brain leads the march in every step of enterprise. The savage has strong hands, but for better brains he must wait on evolution.

The workingman who is competent and prudent enough to save something to build himself a home becomes a Longhead. If he can hire men at two dollars a day to help him, he will not offer them four. The job done, the help paid, and the house is the result of the labor and capital solely of Mr. Longhead. Think that over. Why one man hath what another lacks may be figured out from natural facts.

Seeing a number of hand-drillers at work on an extensiv rock, a Longhead invents a steam drill that does as much work as a half-dozen men. Every factory strives for improved machinery. Machinery displaces hand labor, generally produces beyond local needs, and often earns a fortune for its owner.

> Where factory shoes are all the go,
> Saint Crispin's kit hath little show.

Building the Brooklyn bridge gave employment to many men; but only the skillful architect and the capital employed can properly be said to hav built it. The credit of constructing the Suez canal is given the designer (De Lesseps) rather than to any number of Arab sand-diggers. Great enterprises do not create, but rather display, business talent. Previous to our civil war the different branches of business were conducted with comparativ moderation and regularity. Legislation had not then undertaken to abolish wholly the natural law of supply and demand. A competent workman was seldom idle, and more such then than now owned their homes. True, wages were lower; but immigration was less and easily assimilated, taxes were lower, cost of living less, and the difference of condition not so great. During and since the war, however, the rush in fortune-making schemes has resulted in elevating the Longheads and depressing and increasing the number of Shortsights.

Meddlesome legislation, ostensibly for the workingman's benefit, is responsible for much of his hardship. The partial law, intended to lessen some evil, is almost sure to increase it. Instead of asking for more benefit of that kind, he should urge the lawmakers to repeal all such laws, reduce government expenses, and enact a graduated income-tax law.

It is a Longhead who now obtains the patent, who secures the privileged charter, who employs thousands in building and other enterprises, and who knows when his family is large enough.

I disclaim the thought of disparaging or discouraging anyone; but I think it better to recognize the natural law of diversity among men; that to do so will enable us to be more practical in our efforts to remove existing evils and improve our condition.

The Irishman who said that one man is just as good as another and a little better was partly right. I am conscious that some persons are my superiors in ability and worth (the reader will likely agree with me in that), and I also feel that some are below my grade.

I despise flattery, whether coming from the priest who tells his selfish flock that if they believe and giv just as he dictates the Lord will in the hereafter put crowns on their heads, harps in their hands, and listen to their eternal singing; or from the pedagog who tells the boys, in effect, not to waste their time in small matters, but to aim straight for the presidency—that each one of them may win it. In aiming too high we may overlook passing opportunities.

Probably nine-tenths of the workingmen in this country are slaves to some church. Through fear they continue the barbarian custom of helping the Lord, and think that every dime given him relaxes his angry brow. Enough is wasted in this way to build thousands of homes. During the long period of hard times and idleness no case is known of any priest who lost flesh or was evicted for non-payment of rent. Were the sly priest compelled to let him alone, more dimes could be saved for the workingman's home. L. G. REED.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fal River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Happy New Year.

When the old year goes out and the new one comes in,
Let old grudges go too, let new friendship begin:
And remember that kindness and pleasure and mirth
Are hatched, not in heaven, but in folks on the earth,

Though the days be short and the weather be bad,
'Tis the time to make presents, the time to be glad—
The time for feastings and greetings of love—
For the joys of life that come not from above

With a bright blazing fire, and the hose running o'er,
The children a-dancing on the big kitchen floor,
We'll thank our own prudence for the winter's supply—
Not a bit of which comes from the man in the sky.

L. G. R.

A Happy New Year to All.

The old year has gone, and the new year, in all its sweetness and youthful beauty, is with us.

We cannot be very joyous while there is so much distress in our land. But let us hope that present conditions are only temporary, and that soon the wheels of industry will be again in motion—that want will disappear and plenty crown the board. We wish all our friends, and enemies, too, if we hav any, a bright, prosperous, and happy new year.—ED. C. C.

Out Duty Toward One Another.

BY EDWARD DOBSON.

Each day still better other's happiness.
Until the heavens, enjoying earth's good hap,
Add an immortal title to your crown.
—Shakspere.

Dr. Paul Carus truly says, "The ethical problem is the burning question of to-day." True it is, few are aware of the importance of this "burning question," and of what bearing it has on the standard of conduct of the world at large. Perhaps, the chief reason why this is so, is because too much time is taken up with trifles and study of self. It is to be lamented, egoistic feelings seem to predominate over altruistic feelings. Were it otherwise, much of the trouble and unhappiness that now afflict humanity would be alleviated. Perhaps someone says, "Since nearly every person has to look out for himself or herself, is it not natural egoistic feelings should prevail?" True enough, but the many years life has been upon the face of our planet, the many trials and vicissitudes that the race has been subjected to, should hav taught the lesson that altruistic motivs should predominate over all others, instead of the utterly selfish feelings which still characterize the world, in spite of its many organizations and societies "for the protection and welfare of each other." However, a new era is dawning. The future is assuming a brightened aspect, and soon, we hope, instead of being the cold, cruel world it now is, it will become a peacefnl, kind, and loving world—a humanitarian one. Then the main thought will be. not to advance your own interests as much as the interests of your fellow-beings, and the society or community to which you may belong.

The intent of this essay is to show, to a certain extent, how we should act toward one another. It does not seem to be quite understood that we are born to be companions to those whom we meet and know, and to be friends to those who are in need of same. Very few seem to care whether their neighbor is in need of help, or may need words of encouragement. No doubt there are some who will do their best to help others along, but they are scattered like ships on an ocean over thousands of miles in extent. In fact, as it has been said, we should "liv honestly, to hurt no man willfully, and to render every man his due."

Epictetus has written: "There is no true conclusion in these reasonings: I am richer than thou, therefore I am better; I am more eloquent than thou, therefore I am better. But the conclusions are rather these: I am richer than thou, therefore my wealth is better; I am more eloquent than thou, therefore my speech is better. But thou art not wealth, and thou art not speech." What noble reasoning! How absurd to think that speech makes the man, or even that gold or wealth, which, as the "Bard of Avon" says:

'Tis something, nothing,
'Twas mine, 't is his, and has been slave to thousands, should make the man also. If we wish to find out what a man's true character is, we do not generally look to his wealth or to his accomplishments in fine arts, for a rogue may hav the bearing and education of a gentleman. Epicharmus wrote:

'Tis theirs alone, who boast no inbred worth,
To found their claim of honor on their birth,
And strive their want of virtue to supply
With glory borrowed from old ancestry.

No; we look to see how far he is benefiting his fellow-beings; how noble he is; how kind, sympathetic, and generous; we look to see how sincere he may be. Yes, these are the traits that tell. These are the characteristics of a man. When we are born, we are all equal. It is our accomplishments, possessions, and pursuits which seem to make us better or not as good as anyone else; and Epictetus truly points out the truth of this in the paragraph quoted from him. Is the man who livs in luxury any better than he, who is

Scorned and poor,
He begged his bread from door to door.
—Scott.

No; the beggar may hav the characteristics of a man, the other may be one in disguise. So, if we really want to benefit the world we liv in and to be a help to those who may need it, we must be men and women in the true sense. I hav heard a woman say that she "would sooner be a woman than a lady, as a lady means nowadays—that you are wealthy and hav a position in society, or something just the same." There is more truth in those words than one would naturally believe.

Aristotle says in his works on "Government," "I mean to oppose men of account to the common people, the poor to the rich, and to blend both these into one body, and to increase the numbers of those who are in the middle rank, and this will prevent those seditions which arise from an inequality of condition." There is to be much fault found in the way people are divided into classes to-day. The overbearing of the rich, and the discontent of the poor, are one of the obstacles the humanitarian may find in the way of conciliating both these classes, and bringing about a better feeling. Were it otherwise, how easy would be the path of justice, truth, and love, and how much better for the world, though it would be by no means wise to counsel the abatement of conflict in commercial lines, for it is by this conflict we are able to better ourselvs. This conflict should not make enemies of man, as it sometimes does, but should be the means of increasing the harmony between us.

The words quoted from Aristotle contain truth. It is not necessary to "oppose" people to harmonize them. Still, it would be much better were both the poor and the rich more satisfied with one another.

Correspondence.

SKIDMORE, MO., Dec. 13. 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: We hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for a long time, and I like it very much. I go to school. My teacher's name is Mrs. Porter. I am nine years old to-day. I study History, Arithmetic, Physiology, Grammar, Geography, and Spelling. I liv in a very small town about half a mile from the Nodaway River, and there are about four hundred inhabitants in this town. There is only one railroad. I hav a pet squirrel named Bunnie, and three dolls. I think I hav written quite enough for this time. I will close. Good-bye. MABEL WARE.

[What does Mabel think she will do when she grows up?—ED. C. C.]

BALLINGER, TEX., Dec. 12, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write to the Children's Corner, as I hav nothing else to do. My name is Arthur Doose. I liv in Ballinger, and am ten years old. I am in the fifth grade. I study reading, spelling, geography, grammar, and writing. I would like for some of the little Freethinkers of the Corner to write to me. I will close, hoping to see this in print, Your Liberal friend, ARTHUR DOOSE.

WATERLOO, IND., Dec. 10, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I am a little girl six years old. I go to school. I read in the Second Reader. I study Reading, Writing, Spelling, Language, and Numbers. I hav one brother and one sister. I go to Sunday-school some times, but I don't like to go. Papa takes THE TRUTH SEEKER. I am going to read the Children's Corner every week. We liv on a farm, one mile from town. I hav lots of pets. This being my first letter, hoping it will escape the waste basket, I remain your Freethinker friend, HATTIE R. SALTSMAN.

[Few girls of six years can write so nice a letter, so free from mistakes.—ED. C. C.]

MARSH, IDA., Dec. 5, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write a few lines to the Corner. I sometimes go to Sunday-school and church. The gentleman I am stopping with takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I read it, and like it very much. I would rather read it than the Bible. I only read the Bible when I hav nothing else to read. I am fourteen years old. I liv on a mining claim. The weather is very wet here now. We hav no school at present. I like to go very well. For fear of the waste-basket I will close.
I remain your Liberal friend
ARNETOS E. BENAIT.

[Tell us, Arnetos, please, about the mines, and the kind of ore they yield.—ED. C. C.]

LINDSAY, ONT., Dec. 3, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I've thought of writing to you several times, but think I shall make a success of this effort. My name was taken from Mrs. Slenker's story in THE TRUTH SEEKER, "John's Way." My pa was at the great Fair, and attended three meetings of the International Convention of Freethinkers on the final Sunday and heard you speak. He said you are a fine, well-built lady, eloquent and intellectual. He says you are indeed the child's friend and the friend of woman. Hoping to see this in THE TRUTH SEEKER, which pa has taken for twelve years, I am your Freethinker friend,
MYRA MIDDLETON.

[Glad to hear from Myra, and hope she will write again. Her pa is mistaken about the matter mentioned. The editor of the Corner is opposed to anything of the kind. No woman of sense will be so unwise as to injure herself in such a way.—ED. C. C.]

WOODLAND, MO.. Dec. 16, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As I hav not written to the Corner for a long time, I thought I would write again. I go to school every day. My studies are arithmetic, civil government, history, fifth reader, spelling, and language. I hav finished up geography.

They hav four churches around in this part of the country. The Methodists had a meeting first, then the Presbyterian, finished last night. When the Methodist meeting was going on the members would shout and jump and make a terrible noise. And even the preacher would jump. The preacher said that an ungodly man was no better than a mule or a monkey.

Well, I had better close, for fear it is too long. Yours truly, DELBERT LEAR.

[Preachers are apt to make silly speeches, which, as they are of no importance, are not worth noticing.—ED C. C.]

WATERLOO, IND , Dec. 10, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As my little sister has written a letter, I thought I would write one too. I went to Sunday-school yesterday and the teacher told us a story. There was a man went to church and went to sleep, and just as he awoke he heard the preacher say something about commentators not always agreeing with him, and he went home and told his wife that the poor preacher had nothing but common "taters" to eat and he was going to take him a bushel of good ones. Papa heard you lecture at the Congress and he says that if all the children in the United State had heard you they would say you were the grandest woman that ever lived. Charlesworth is going to be here this week. Yours affectionately
GRACE SALTSMAN.

[Another bright girl, whose papa praises us too extravagantly. We hardly dare to print such glowing words. We are only trying to do all the good we can, as we pass through life, to destroy the superstition that is so harmful to our human kind. Many are engaged in the same glorious work, and we are only one with them.—ED. C. C.]

SKOWHEGAN, ME., Dec 17, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: In the school I attend I am the only one who will openly and fearlessly admit being an Infidel. One girl says she only prays when it storms. A Baptist minister called at our school one day, and asked one of my schoolmates if navis, the Latin for ship, was really feminin, why they gave ships men's names? "Well, Mr. H.," said my schoolmate, "you've asked me a question, I'll ask you one. Why do they call them women's names?" The minister's answer was, "Miss M., I bid you good-day." The entire school was shocked at my schoolmate's action, and more, I think, when I defended him, by saying that the caller had no business to ask a question he himself could not answer.

Revival meetings are being held at the Methodist church here. One girl says her mother won't let her go, because the evangelist looks like a "Bowery tough." He said one evening, that the Lord said he'd ought to get mad, and swear at the people.

Colonel Ingersoll was in Lewiston, and my father, who went to hear him, was delighted. We all wished that he could hav come here.

We are Spiritualists, and my uncle is a clairvoyant physician. Grandma has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for some time.

I hav only been to church once in Maine. I then went for my own amusement. I used to liv in Iowa, but I came to Maine last January.

This is my first letter to the Children's Corner. I wrote once, last winter, to the Editor. A Liberal friend, LUCY BIGELOW.

[Lucy is a bright, sensible girl, whose letters should often appear in the Corner. —ED. C. C.]

CLEVELAND, O., Dec. 11, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my first letter to the Corner. I am thirteen; I go to Waring school; I am very much interested in the Children's Corner. My father is an Infidel and a great admirer of Thomas Paine; my father takes THE TRUTH SEEKER every week. In my school all the children hav to write a Christmas story of our own composing. Thinking it might interest the children of the Corner, I will send you a copy. This is my Christmas story:

There were four children in the big sitting-room at grandpa's farmhouse, where they were to spend their holiday. Their names were Fanny, May, Lulu, and Tennie.

"I would like to see Santa Claus," said Fanny, rubbing her eyes, for the sandman had already been around for that little girl, although the clock on the mantle said it was only seven.

"When we go to bed we will keep awake, and see if we can see Santa Claus," said Tennie.

"All right," said Lulu," and away the children went up-stairs to the big, warm bedroom where four stockings hung in a row.

"Now, when the clock strikes twelve keep real quiet," said Lulu, "and we will see Santa Claus."

But, strange to say, before the clock struck eight six little eyes were closed and three little girls were fast asleep. And only one little girl was awake. The clock struck nine, and then ten, and eleven, and drowsiness came over May, and then the clock struck twelve, and—What's that? May starts up with a sudden jump, and there stood the funniest man you ever saw, with a long white beard and a little red face, with rosy cheeks and a little pug nose. He had a little short, rounded body, and a big basket of, oh! such beautiful toys and dolls, books, and ever so many other handsome things, she couldn't tell how much, there were so many other things in the basket. But, before she could hav time to speak, the little old man had disappeared and left May to laugh over the funny sight.

And then, "Oh, see what I hav!" and "Oh, ain't this beautiful?" and "Yes, lovely!" and "May, are you awake?—just get up and see the beautiful things!" And May jumped up, wondering if she really did see Santa Claus, or whether it was a dream. Anyway, he was a funny old man, and May laughs to this day, although she is an old woman now. And so ends my story.

Hoping to see this in print, I remain yours, IRENE YEOMAN.

[A very creditable little story.—ED. C. C.]

Pleasure and Progress.

AN ATTEMPT TO PROVE THAT

The Pursuit of Pleasure is the Sine Qua Non of Intellectual, Moral, and Social Development, and that The Promotion of Pleasure is the Duty of Philanthropy and Statesmanship.

By Albert M. Lorentz, LL.B.

CONTENTS:

Book I.—Pleasure: Chap. I.—Sources of Pleasure. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures. Chap IV.—Social Pleasures. Chap. V.—Pleasures of the Savage, the Barbarian and the Civilized. Chap. VI.—Genesis of religions. Chap. VII.—Christianity.

Book II.—Intellectual Development: Chap. I.—Purpose of life. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures: Knowledge. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Reason. Chap.—V. Ideal Pleasures: Character. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Pedagogical Despotism.

Book III.—Moral Development: Chap. I.—Morality. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures: Prudence. Chap. III.—Material Pleasures: Refinement. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Foresight, Chap. V.—Ideal Pleasures: Civilization. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Vice Caused by Restraint.

Book IV.—Social Development: Chap. I.—Progress. Caap. II.—Protection, Capitalism, and Socialism: Respectivly an Actual, an Imminent, and a Proposed Violation of Individual Sovereignty. Chap. III.—Condition of Agriculture. Chap. IV. Public Schools, the Mene, Mene. Tekel of Socialism. Chap. V.—Province of Government. Chap. VI.—Our Social Disorder.

Here are some of the verdicts on this remarkable production which have been rendered by men who are in every way qualified as judges of books:

This is a spirited, rattling sort of a book that skates right along over the deepest subject without much thought whether the ice is thin or not. It answers the greatest question—What is the use, object, motive, purpose, and summum bonum of life, and the real cause and motive of progress?—by one word, Pleasure!—Thaddeus B. Wakeman.

He sharply attacks, also, modern methods of education, and in this he is most abundantly borne out by the facts, and his arraignment is practically unanswerable. His book is altogether a curious and suggestive one.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The man who wrote this book knows how to write a book, and knows what he is writing about. There is not a padded sentence in the volume, not an attempt to fill up with words for lack of knowledge. The author deals hard blows at shams and falsehoods, and hard blows for realities and truth. We do not see how anyone can read this book and disagree with the leading propositions. The work is good; every chapter is worth reading. It is a work of common-sense Socialism. The chapter on public schools ought to be put into a tract and sent to every teacher in the land. Thousands of sentences are worthy of being framed as political maxims and hung up all over the nation. The book deserves a wide reading, not only for its literary style, which is clear and incisive, but for its bold, honest sayings.—L. K. Washburn.

Here we have philosophy up to date, the advance word of the progressive thinker; not a dry, abstruse discourse, but a common-sense essay in plain words upon the conduct of life, and all illustrated with such an abundance of anecdote and metaphor as add real entertainment to solid instruction. This is an important book, striking at superstition and unreasonable tradition, and upholding individual liberty in defiance of governmental law and social custom. After reading this book one feels that the author will never be able to write another, for he has put all his life and knowledge into this one. Every page bristles with points; there is no padding or filling in, no mere literary embellishment; but clean-cut apothegms abound, and every line is dictated by hard-headed common-sense.—Capt. Robt. C. Adams.

After you read this book you will be as enthusiastic in praise of it as are the eloquent editor of the Investigator and the gallant President of the Canadian Secular Union,

"Pleasure and Progress" has 398 pages, is splendidly printed from large, clear type, on excellent paper, and costs, bound in cloth, $1; paper covers, 50 cents.

A most extraordinary publication. We venture the assertion that nothing like it has ever before appeared in this country, and it is very doubtful if another one like it will ever again be published. We must give the Truth Seeker Company the credit of putting the book in the reach of all. At twice the price it would have been a cheap book. Artist Heston as a portrait painter and designer is a wonderful success, and we judge from our own feelings that nearly every Liberal in America will desire a copy of this most wonderful volume.—[Freethinkers' Magazine.

Mr. Heston deserves to be called the artist-hero of Liberalism. He has dedicated his genius to Freethought, and has done faithful and noble work for the cause of right and truth. But the pictures do not make up the whole of his volume. There are nearly two hundred pages of reading matter that serve first as explanations of the illustrations, and secondly as texts to prove the utter falsity of the church's professions and the hypocrisy of those who uphold them. Altogether the book is one of the best weapons against Christianity and the church that has ever been put in the hands of Freethinkers.—[Boston Investigator.

PEN PICTURES OF THE WORLD'S FAIR.

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

A Full Description of the Fair, Invaluable as a Guide-Book and still more Invaluable to those who cannot attend. It tells WHAT TO SEE and WHERE TO SEE IT; gives rates of admission to the various attractions of the Fair and cost of living in Chicago, with other useful information to the visitor.

It is, besides being a complete Guide-Book, the best description of the Fair yet given—poetic, beautiful, accurate. It describes the inauguration ceremonies, gives the director-general's address, the efforts to close the Fair Sundays and the triumph of the Sunday-openers; describes the various buildings and what they contain, and is, all in all, the very best picture of the Fair that can be painted with a pen.

ILLUSTRATED.

A MAP OF JACKSON PARK, enabling the visitor to make his way around, and the stay-at-home to see where he went.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE FAIR, enabling one to comprehend at a glance the magnitude of the Exposition, the greatest ever known to the present time.

PICTURES OF ALL THE PRINCIPAL BUILDINGS:

Woman's Building.	Art Palace.	Fisheries Building.
Administration Building.	Manufactures and Liberal Arts Building.	Agricultural Building.
Electrical Building.	Mines and Mining Building.	Transportation Building.
Machinery Hall.	Forestry Building.	Horticultural Building.

A visitor to the Fair says of this book—reading it in The Truth Seeker—that it is charming and to one who has seen the Fair vastly entertaining.

Sex in Brain.
Heredity in Its Relations to a Double Standard of Morals.
Divorce and the Proposed National Law.
Lawsuit or Legacy.
Common Sense in Surgery.

At the Woman's Congress at Chicago Helen Gardener delivered as an address one of the chapters of this book. The Chicago Times said of it and her: "But the last address, dealing with the most delicate of the problems of reform, clear, unhesitant, modest, but uncompromising, was listened to with breathless interest by the audience. It was 'Heredity in Its Relation to a Double Standard of Morals,' and it was delivered by the one woman of all others best qualified to speak upon that subject—Helen Gardener. Petite, graceful, eloquent with the burden of her thought, Miss Gardener enchained every auditor, and when she had finished received a perfect ovation, which her courage and devotion had so worthily won. The evening session was highly interesting, but that of the morning will be set down on the tablet of the memory of those present as one of the distinctivly great features of the week's congress."

EVERY Woman Ought to Read It. Every LIBERAL Woman and Man Will Want It.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE.

By Matilda Joslyn Gage.

This is Mrs. Gage's latest and crowning work. It is THE book to show how the church has enslaved woman and kept and keeps her in an inferior position. A glance at its contents will show this:

The first chapter—the Matriarchate—shows that under the old civilizations woman had great freedom, but that the tendency of Christianity from the first was to restrict her liberty. In this chapter Mrs. Gage claims that to the Matriarchate—or Mother-rule—the world is indebted for its first conception of inherent rights.

Chapter II deals with the theological dogmas of original sin and celibacy. Woman, by the church, was not regarded as a human being; marriage was looked upon as vile; wives were sold as slaves; women driven to suicide; the influence of the church was unfavorable to virtue. The celibacy of the clergy produced degrading sensuality, and woman was the victim of these brutes.

Chapter III is on The Canon Law, showing how the church controled woman by making the legitimacy of marriage depend upon its own control of the ceremony. Ancient civilization gave place to Christian barbarism, the clergy became a distinct body—at once a "holy" and an unholy caste. Learning was prohibited to women, husbands prohibited from leaving them more than one-third of their property; daughters could be disinherited, sons could not. The Reformation effected no change.

Chapter IV—Marquette—is on Feudalism and its degradation of women, the rights of "lords spiritual," the immorality of the heads of the church, baptism of nude women in the early Christian church. It also deals with some of the later-day abuses of females, like our Northwestern pineries, the English debaucheries, governmental crinoline-makers, etc.

Chapter V—Witchcraft. In the days of this phase of religious insanity Mrs. Gage shows how the possession of even a little learning was sufficient cause to suspect a woman of witchcraft, that to keep a pet was dangerous, so rabid were the clergy not to suffer a witch to live. This persecution for witchcraft was a continuance of the church's policy for obtaining universal dominion over mankind. Women physicians of the Middle Ages were persecuted, and the "Pilgrim Fathers" continued it in America. The first synod convened in America was to try a woman for heresy, and others were stripped and whipped for not agreeing with the clergy.

The chapter on "Wives" shows how the disruption of the Roman empire was unfavorable to the personal and proprietary rights of woman—that the sale of daughters was practiced in England seven hundred years after it was Christianized—that the practice of buying wives was regulated by law—that women were not permitted to read the Bible—that they were not admitted as witnesses—that civil marriage is opposed by the church.

In Chapter VII is shown how polygamy was sustained by the Christian church, that the first synod of the Reformation convened to sanction this institution, that Luther and the other "principal reformers" favored it, as well as the American Board of Foreign Missions. The Mormon theocracy is shown to be similar to that of other Christian sects.

In the last three chapters Mrs. Gage treats of the opposition of the church to the amelioration of woman's sufferings as interference with her "curse," of woman's degradation by the church to labors unfit for slaves, of woman's "inferiority," as taught by the church to-day, and of how little value Christianity has been and is to civilization.

The work is a burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controled the state. It is also extremely valuable as history. No woman, it seems to us, can read it and remain a supporter of the religious institution which has crushed her individuality, her mentality, and degraded her person. To the woman's cause it opens an Age of Reason. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do.

Gems of Thought.

WE are as much gainers by finding a new property in the old earth as by acquiring a new planet.—Emerson.

FREETHINKERS rage against an extinct Jesuitism, not perceiving that the venomous thing has crept into a Protestant skin. —Moncure D. Conway.

A MAN should learn to detect and watch that gleam of light which flashes across the mind from within more than the luster of the firmament of bards and sages.—Emerson.

LOVE is—I know not what; which comes —I know not whence; which is formed—I know not how; which enchants—I know not by what, and which ends—I know not when or why.—Mlle de Scuderi.

WHO does not see that the same authority which can establish Christianity in exclusion of all other religions, may establish, with the same ease, any particular sect of Christians in exclusion of all other sects?—James Madison.

THE goal for all is truth. The lines of travel may differ, but they will converge. Honor all honest methods by which the journey is accomplished. Let him who will travel in sleepers, with steam harnessed to his chariot, and let him who chooses travel afoot. What we need to acknowledge is the necessity of movement, the imperious declaration of growth, and the vital overarching dictates of mental, moral, and physical integrity.—Horace L. Traubel.

MAN is nature's last and most powerful work; but however high his development or great his achievements, he is yet a child of the earth and the forces that hav formed all the life that exists thereon. He cannot separate himself from the environment in which he grew, and a thousand ties of nature bind him back to the long-forgotten past, and prove his kinship to all the lower forms of life that hav sprung from that great common mother, earth.—Clarence S. Darrow.

IT has always been claimed by the religionist that morality is the outgrowth of religion, and without it the world would degenerate into a condition of barbarity or "total depravity." Where was religion's morality in the days of religious persecution? Where was her feeling of sympathy at the times of the Roman Inquisition? And where would her morality be to-day if the power of the church was not restrained by social law? "Church and state" means what it meant eight hundred years ago—total destruction to individual liberty.—T. C. Widdicombe.

ALWAYS the popular faith has been the last word, the supreme revelation, to those who believe; and always the first doubters —the Uhlans preceding the army of destroyers and subsequent reconstructors—hav been made martyrs to their negation. To be said to doubt the tutelar deities of the city cost Socrates his life—Socrates, who, before all men, taught reverence and preached virtue. To deny that Jesus, the son of Mary, was God incarnate has cost many hundreds of lives. To question the divine mission of Mohammed has been as fatal to thousands as was the denial of the supremacy of Jehovah to the priests of Baal. The world reveres its idols, and looks neither to the fashion of their make nor to the passions they typify. Jealous or cruel, punishing the children for the father's sin, or demanding the sacrifice of the innocent for the redemption of the guilty—these idols are precious beyond all else, and their worship is held as dear as life itself.—E. Lynn Linton.

BUT the main source of that prejudice was revealed by a Russian journal, edited in the interests of the holy Synod, and which reminded its readers that "no restrictions of their [the Jews'] civil rights can outweigh the scandal of their religious privilege." That privilege, the prerogativ of rationalism, has never been forgiven by the bondsmen of superstition. The slave's envy of the freeman, the chain-dog's antipathy to the wolf, are trifles compared with the odium of mental emancipation, the bigot's mingled horror and hatred of the Sadducean who refuses to sacrifice his reason upon the altar of faith. They dread the consequences as much as the motivs of his intellectual independence; they watch him with the grim mistrust that turns upon the guest who insists on remaining sober in an assemblage of Russian topers. Hence the rage that hounded the Waldenses from glen to glen of their mountain-homes, and for centuries hurled a charge of sorcery at the head of every Freethinker. What might not be expected of an adversary who persisted in keeping his eyes open while his opponents submitted to be hoodwinked by their priests? The unfairness of his advantages seemed to forfeit his claim to mercy in this world as in the next.—Felix L. Oswald.

We believe that not only can good be done but money made by any Liberal who will canvass for our book "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated." In fact we know one man who worked at it but a few hours weekly and sold nearly fifty copies in a month. The price is low; everybody knows the Old Testament stories, and nearly everybody would like a book applying nineteenth-century wit and knowledge to them. People like to laugh. Reverence for the Old Testament tales has largely disappeared and jokes at the expense of Jonah and Joseph and Esau and Samson and David, and the other worthies of unsavory reputation, are keenly appreciated. It seems to us that the book will sell at sight. It does here in the store. Liberals out of employment will find this a good way to make an honest dollar.

Silfersdein he come py me undt he say, 'Devy, for dhose Grismas bresent I giv you vorty ber cent. disgount on all dher poy's glothes you vant.'" "That was nice. How many boys hav you?" "I haf no poys. Only four girls."

A BOSTON clergyman tells me that, a short time ago, he was anxious to refer to a book called "Seekers after God." Ransacking bookstores and libraries in vain for it, he finally called to mind that a Chicago friend, also a clergyman, had frequently quoted from it, so he wrote him to look about in Chicago book-stores, and buy the book for him as soon possible. By telegram came the startling reply: "No Seekers after God in Chicago."—Boston Globe.

THEY met by chance in the waiting-room of a railway station. "My friend," began the man with the valise full of tracts persuasivly, "hav you ever reflected on the shortness of life, the uncertainty of all things here below, and the fact that death is inevitable?" "Hav I?" replied the man in the shaggy overcoat cheerfully. "Well, I should reckon! I'm a life insurance agent." "Ah—um—looks as if we were going to hav more snow, doesn't it?" said the other, locking his valise with a snap.—Chicago Tribune.

THE following is told by the late Rev. Hugh Stowell Brown: "At Aberdeen, James Abernethy, a most sedate elder in the Free Church, told me that in Scotland the ministers are, or hav been, so negligent as not to baptize the children for years. The children are great swearers, picking up the accomplishment from the sailors who frequent these islands. A child four years of age was brought forward for baptism, and when the water was sprinkled in his face exclaimed, 'Damn it! what's this?'"—London Freethinker.

AT a prayer-meeting in an Indiana church the other evening a stranger offered the following petition: "Lord, thou knowest I am a stranger here Thou knowest I do not liv here but reside in a neighboring town. Thou knowest I hav relativs in another town, whom I am on my way to see. Lord, thou knowest why I am here instead of there. Thou knowest why I can't get there. Lord, thou knowest just what I want. I want forty cents. Amen." He got the forty cents, and is now a firm believer in the efficacy of prayer.—New York Tribune.

ON Sunday last there was a church parade at which the bishop of Mashonaland officiated. Church parades are not, and never will be, popular. There appears to be a prejudice ingrained into the trooper's nature against the institution, and there is some truth in the saying that the affair is the cause of more blasphemy than devotion. "Fall in there for church parade," is the first thing heard, and then a subdued buzz runs along the line, which, if attentivly analyzed, results in being found to be a conglomeration of such expressions as "Where the devil is my bayonet belt?" "D——n these spurs, they won't fit;" and then there is the long continuous growl of a string of oaths from the man who is looking apoplectic in a struggle to get on a pair of top-boots. In the evening there was a voluntary service in one of the improvised tents, which was well attended, although one's gravity was sorely tried when the bishop, whose discourse was rendered almost inaudible by the clatter of plates made by an enterprising coolie cook in the near vicinity, suggested that someone should "tell the gentleman washing the plates and things that a little less noise would be more edifying."—Diamond Fields Advertiser (South Africa).

"With Daughter's Babe Upon His Knees"

A new edition of that splendid prose poem, "Life," by "the prince of orators," Col. R. G. Ingersoll. It is larger and better than the old edition, and can be framed or placed upon the table as an ornament. In the center of the card appear the portraits of the Colonel and the baby, surrounded by the prose poem, which has been truthfully described as, "one of the masterpieces of the orator and poet, who now, as far as we know, stands alone in the living world." It will make a delightful present, and will be a souvenir not only of intellectual greatness, but of artistic workmanship. It is printed on heavy board, gilt boveled edge. The size is 12x16 inches, and the price only 75 cents, post-paid.

GHOST OF ST. JOHNS.

By M. BABCOCK. Price, 15 cents.

THE HOLY CROSS SERIES.

The Popes and Their Doings. Biographical sketches of the most noted of these vicars of Christ and vicegerents of God, showing what they have done, and what kind of men they were. It contains very plain statements, in very unvarnished language, and the unmasking is complete, proving them to have been cruel, intriguing, and licentious men. Considering the rapid growth of Catholicism in this country, this book cannot be too widely disseminated. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Awful Disclosures of Maria Monk, as exhibited in a narrative of her sufferings during her residence of five years as a novice, and two years as a black nun, in the Hotel Dieu Nunnery, at Montreal. Perhaps not any anti-Catholic book published has created more excitement, and had such a circulation as this work. To counteract its effects the Catholics circulated a story that Maria Monk was "no better than she should be," but investigation disclosed that her "child of shame" was none other than the child of her priest-seducer. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth 75 cents.

Auricular Confession and Popish Nunneries. By Wm. Hogan, for twenty-five years a confessing priest. A revelation of the licentious practices of the priests and nuns in these religious brothels. There is no question that Ex-priest Hogan knew the truth of the tales of vice, seduction, and infanticide he gives in this volume, and equally there is no question that if the people generally knew of them, Catholicism would not be given the vast amounts of money now allowed it by our various city governments. Price, paper, 50 cents, cloth. 75 cents.

The Priest in Absolution. A Review of the system of auricular confession, including copious extracts from the "Confessional Unmasked," from the "Master Key to Popery," etc. The work is a protest against and an appeal to every American citizen to examine carefully and thoughtfully a religious system so invasive of privacy, so powerful for evil in licentious hands, so fraught with danger to female modesty, to the ingenuous openness of youth, and to the freedom of thought, speech, and action. Price, paper, 25 cents.

Priestly Celibacy Exposed. A lecture by the Rev. Geo. Townsend Fox, of Durham, England. Revised American edition, showing the result in parishes of the Roman decree that priests shall not mary. Price, paper, 15 cents.

Sister Lucy and Her Awful Disclosures Respecting New Hall Convent, Boreham, Essex, England. Showing that convents are inimical to chastity, virtue, and freedom. Price, paper, 10 cents.

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA IDENTIFIED AS THE CHRISTIAN JESUS.

An important and remarkable revelation concerning the life and times of Apollonius of Tyana, the great sage and philosopher of the first century. It is here claimed that his life and teachings were appropriated and utilized by the formulators of the Christian religion in the interest of so-called Christianity. The plagiarism is made plain in this brief history of Apollonius, especailly in view of the historical references and comments thereon. It is quite evident that to conceal the plagiarism, the name of Apollonius was suppressed.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll's ARGUMENT IN THE Reynolds Blasphemy Trial,

At Morristown, N. J.

This is the greatest argument ever made in a case of this kind, and will be a model for the Bar so long as the Christians use force to repress free speech. Its legal acumen is unsurpassed, its eloquence never equaled. Wherever Christian persecution is going on this argument should be freely circulated, read to the Christians, and expounded on every occasion.

Darwin and After Darwin.

An Exposition of the Darwinian Theory.

By GEORGE J. ROMANES.

A systematic Exposition of what may be termed the Darwinism of Darwin, and intended to be of service to the general reader rather than to professed naturalists.

Mr. Romanes is well known as one of the most interesting of English writers upon evolution, besides ranking with Professor Huxley in scientific knowledge and ability. And this is a part of his conclusion regarding the great subject of Design, to which the church so often refers:

"Thus whether we look to the facts of adaptation or to those of beauty, everywhere throughout organic nature we meet with abundant evidence of natural causation, while nowhere do we meet with any independent evidence of supernatural design. . . . Adaptation and beauty are alike receiving their explanation at the hands of a purely mechanical philosophy. . . All nature has thus been transformed before the view of the present generation in a manner and to an extent that has never before been possible; and inasmuch as the change which has taken place has taken place in the direction of naturalism, and this to the extent of rendering the mechanical interpretation of nature universal, it is no wonder if the religious mind has suddenly awakened to a new and a terrible force in the words of its traditional enemy—Where is now thy God?"

THE OLD VULTURE AND HER BROOD.

TO NEW READERS OF THE TRUTH SEEKER.

We send this issue of The Truth Seeker to a great many Liberals who are not subscribers, with an earnest invitation to them to become such, and thereby help along the Liberal cause.

We would also respectfully call their attention to the many points of excellence of the Paper.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is the Largest Freethought Journal in the World.

The Cartoons of Heston appear each week, and each picture is worth the cost of the paper a year to one who appreciates plain and telling arguments against ecclesiasticism.

THE TRUTH SEEKER constantly prints the most varied and entertaining Selection of Original Papers of any Liberal Journal Its Contributors are all the noted Liberals of the country. All that Col. R. G. Ingersoll gives to the Public can be found in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and that Poet of Freethought, Samuel P. Putnam, writes more for its columns than for any other. The Liberal speakers send us accounts of their journeys, and the best writers of Freethought freely devote their services to the cause of Liberalism through the colums of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Charles Watts, perhaps the greatest Debater of our time, certainly the foremost Secular orator of England, will send us monthly letters from England with all the news of our movement there and such reflections and pertinent observations as will surely make every English Secularist living in this country and Canada want to read THE TRUTH SEEKER. George E. Macdonald, one of the rarest combinations of humorist, satirist, philosopher, logician, has been engaged to write regularly for our columns. As the "Man With the Badge Pin," he is known to nearly all the Liberals of the country and we are willing to make him known to more.

THE TRUTH SEEKER gives all the news of Freethought, and is always on Guard Against the Encroachments of Ecclesiastics upon the People's Liberties.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is devoted to the defense of Mental Liberty, of American Institutions, and the Preservation of the United States Constitution, so far as regards religious tests and the maintenance of human rights. It advocates the abolition of all laws based on religion or religious observances. It demands the taxation of church property. It is uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of church and state, either in name or in fact.

The Sunday Question is now to the front all over the country. On that THE TRUTH SEEKER will voice the demands of the Liberal minded men and women of the country, and nowhere else will the rights of the people as against Puritanism be found so sturdily defended.

To sum it up, THE TRUTH SEEKER is the biggest, best, and bravest Freethought journal in the world, and if you are a Liberal or Freethinker, you want it and ought to take it. We appeal also to fair-minded Christians to hear our side and then decide. Bigots and fanatics, we suppose, wouldn't take it on any terms.

The Most Magnificent Work Ever Published by the Freethought Press.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The object of this work is to present the Course of Freethought throughout the Civilized World for the last Four Centuries, from the time of Columbus and Bruno to the time of Ingersoll.

It will be a radical Historic Record of the Greatest Developments of the Human Race.

It will reveal Freethought as an Intellectual, Moral, Literary, Social, Industrial, and Political Movement.

It will show what Freethought is in itself and how manifold are its influences, and with what hope and promise we can hail its future triumph.

"Four Hundred Years of Freethought" will Embrace the most Illustrious Pages of Human History,

adorned with the brightest Genius, radiant with the most splendid Poetry, rich with the greatest Inventions and Discoveries and ennobled with Freedom's most shining advance.

Nothing Can be More Interesting,

more inspiring to the Pioneer Workers of to-day—to those who are still in the van for Human Rights and Progress. The struggle is not ended and what is already won must be carefully guarded. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; and from the Past we must ever learn Great Lessons for the Future.

NO LIBERAL CAN AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THIS BOOK.

It will contain the Greatest Thoughts and the Greatest Deeds of the Greatest Men

In One Harmonious and Magnificent Whole,

a vivid picture of man's sublimest evolution, with the added glory of

from the chains and slavery of a barbaric creed and church.

THE FIRST PART of the book will deal with Freethought as a Universal Power, as a Spirit, a Method, a prevailing but unorganized Influence in every Department of Human Growth.

THE SECOND PART will deal with Freethought as an Organized Movement, especially in America and Europe; and this history is of equal importance with the first, and should be justly understood and the Pioneers of our work recognized.

The first part will embrace the following Grand Departments:

Philosophy.	Science.	Education and Ethics.	Literature.		Government and Politics.		Woman's Emancipation.
Bruno.	Copernicus.	Bacon.	Boccaccio.	Lessing.	Voltaire.	Gambetta.	Madame Roland.

THE PORTRAITS OF THESE ILLUSTRIOUS REFORMERS

in every domain of Human Thought and Progress will adorn the pages of this volume.

The Second Part of this volume will be devoted especially to organized Freethought and the Liberal Press in modern times. The Truth Seeker, Investigator, Ironclad Age, Secular Thought, Freethinkers' Magazine, Independent Pulpit, Lucifer, the Freethinker, Agnostic Journal, etc.

It will give a history of the

GREAT INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

at Chicago, the Freethought Federation of America, the American Secular Union, the various state and local organizations, the Canadian Secular Union, the British Secular Union, and other Liberal associations throughout the world.

It will contain the portraits of those who, up to the present time, have been identified with Freethought work—editors, lecturers, officers of societies, and those who, as representative men, have won distinction in other fields of effort. There will be the portraits of

Horace Seaver,	George E. Macdonald,	Capt. R. C. Adams,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Sr.,	Susan H. Wixon,
J. P. Mendum,	E. M. Macdonald,	John R. Charlesworth,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.,	Mrs. Charles Watts,
D. M. Bennett,	L. K. Washburn,	Samuel P Putnam,	Prof. J. H. Cook,	Mrs. Robert C. Adams,
Parker Pillsbury,	Ernest Mendum,	John E. Remsburg,	E. H. Heywood,	Mrs. M. A. Freeman,
Elizur Wright,	Charles Watts,	Franklin Steiner,	Otto Wettstein,	Katie Kehm Smith,
T. C. Leland,	G. W. Foote,	J. D. Shaw,	Stephen Pearl Andrews,	Lucy N. Colman,
T. B. Wakeman,	Saladin,	E. A. Stevens,	James Parton,	Lillian Leland,
Judge C. B. Waite.	J. R. Monroe,	H. L. Green,	Abner Kneeland,	Amy Post.

and other men and women who have contributed to the advancement of Freethought and whose names should be remembered throughout the Liberal ranks. There will also be about

ONE HUNDRED BIOGRAPHIES,

and in these will be given a picture of Freethought progress which will be most interesting and valuable, for it is in individuals that we find the best interpretations of the age.

The Price of This Superb Book is $5.00,

and not for the same amount of money can there be found such an array of facts, such a survey of history, and such a galaxy of Freethought.

Mr. Putnam is now devoting his whole time to this work and it will be published at the earliest possible moment.

The name of every Subscriber who sends five dollars before the work is on the press will be enrolled in this book. DON'T FAIL TO SUBSCRIBE AT ONCE.

This book will contain

Over Six Hundred Pages of Printed Matter and Over One Hundred Portraits.

It will be elegantly bound. It will be a book for the home and the fireside. It will be a book to give to your friends when they ask, What is Freethought—what has it done and what is it doing in the world?

This is the most universal presentation of Freethought ever given to the public, and no Freethinker can afford to be without it. It is a library in itself.

HOW TO GET FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT FREE

SPECIAL OFFER.

We have made arrangements with Mr. Putnam whereby we are enabled to make our friends a most generous offer.

We need more subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and every Freethinker needs "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." Not all are able to pay $5 for it, but everyone can do a little work to obtain a copy—congenial work, that will do great good all around. This is the offer:

Send us Four New Yearly Subscribers at regular rates ($12 in all), and we will send the Getter-up of the Club a copy of "FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT," FREE OF CHARGES.

And further, to aid our friends in getting this book for themselves, we will offer

To the New Subscribers as a Premium,

post free, a copy in boards of

Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated

By WATSON HESTON,

THE GREATEST BOOK OF ITS KIND EVER CONCEIVED.

Or, if preferred, a copy cloth-bound of

W. S. BELL'S

Handbook of Freethought.

With these Splendid Works as premiums there ought to be no difficulty in getting hundreds of clubs of subscribers.

Remember, to the Getter-up of The Club, FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT, free.

To each New Subscriber in the club, a premium of a Dollar Book—either "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought," in Cloth—all free by post or express.

This really brings the price of the paper down to $2 to each new subscriber, as they get THE TRUTH SEEKER one year and a dollar book for $3.

A Club of Four New Subscribers and $12 ($3 only from each) does this.

We want to extend our circulation, and we want to help our friends to help us.

It ought not to be difficult to get four New Subscribers in any town in the country, especially with these Splendid Premiums to assist.

Those who get up these Clubs will receive their copies of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" as soon as the book is issued.

Those who send a Club and Four New Subscribers and $12 before the book is printed, will have their names enrolled in its shining pages.

For $4.50 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and James B. Alexander's Dynamic Theory ($2.75). This is a splendid offer, for every one wants this book. It has over a thousand large pages and more than four hundred illustrations. It is a digest of Science, and every one who studies it cannot help but be well-informed in all scientific matters.

For $4.50 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and "The Freethinker's Pictorial Text-Book" in cloth ($2.50).

For $4 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and "The Freethinker's Pictorial Text-Book" in boards ($2).

For $4 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and a copy of "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," in cloth covers ($1.50).

For $3.50 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," in board covers ($1).

This is a splendid opportunity to obtain books which every Liberal desires to hav, at an exceedingly low price. Old and new subscribers can avail themselvs of it, and we shall be glad if our present readers will call the attention of their friends to the values offered.

Something More About the Bible.

Last week we commented upon some of the extravagant claims made for the Bible by a leaflet issued by the American Tract Society. The subject is continued here:

"No philosopher can account for the rise, progress, and prevalence of Christianity, in opposition to every feeling of the heart, every prejudice of the mind, and every interest of the present life, without admitting that a divine power attended its first promulgation."

No philosopher pretends to account for the rise, progress, and prevalence of Christianity in opposition to the forces mentioned. On the contrary, Christianity has had the aid of feeling, prejudice, material interests, and—what was still more conduciv to its spread—the dungeon, rack, stake, and sword. The religion which could go to the common people as the only faith under heaven whereby men could be saved from the agonies of eternal torture needed no god to drive the superstitious and calculating into its net. Early Christianity did not appeal to reason, it did not appeal to human love—except for those within its own fold; it did not appeal to the spirit of tolerance—for it was absolutely intolerant; it did not appeal to science, nor culture, nor love of country and home. It had two shibboleths: One was Brotherhood, regardless of race, condition, or previous character, but the condition was that acceptance of the Christ must precede acceptance into the brotherhood. The second was, Salvation through Christ. You must believe in the Nazarene or be damned. No matter how commendable your life, you had not a ghost of a chance to escape the flames unless you believed in Jesus the son of God. His blood alone could wash away your sins. Says Lecky, the historian:

"Inquiry, among the early theologians, was much less valued than belief, and appeals to reason than appeals to fear. In philosophy the most comprehensiv, but in theology the most intolerant, system is naturally the strongest. To weak women, to the young, the ignorant, and the timid, to all, in a word, who were distrustful of their own judgment, the doctrin of exclusiv salvation must hav come with an appalling power; and as no other religion professed it, it supplied the church with an invaluable vantage ground, and doubtless drove great multitudes into its pale" (Hist. of European Morals, Vol. I., pp. 447–8).

That the "Brotherhood of Man" in the early days of Christianity meant merely the brotherhood of Christians there is overwhelming evidence. To quote Lecky again:

"All the fierce hatred which during the Arian and Donatist controversies convulsed the empire, and which in later times has deluged the world with blood, may be traced in the church long before the conversion of Constantine. Already, in the second century, it was the rule that the orthodox Christian should hold no conversation, should exchange none of the most ordinary courtesies of life, with the excommunicated or the heretic. Common sufferings were impotent to assuage the animosity, and the purest and fondest relations of life were polluted by the new intolerance" (Ibid., p. 451).

"Truth bears inspection. The more the Bible is candidly studied, the more highly it is valued. Deists are for the most part ignorant of its contents, and immoral in their lives. Those who hav not freely inquired can not fairly decide; and if the scriptures reprove sin, no wonder sinners hate the scriptures."

"Truth bears inspection," which accounts for the fact that the statements made in this tract do not bear inspection. There are no closer students of the Bible than those who hav rejected the claims to supernatural origin made in its behalf. They hav rejected those claims because of their investigations. This is true alike of the declared Freethinkers and of the "higher" critics. Deists—and Atheists—are much more familiar with its contents than are the rank and file of church members and the great mass of the clergy. In this connection it should be borne in mind that, in the words of the author of "A Short History of the Bible," "the only men distinguished for their learning who now believe it to be the inspired word of God, are the men who are, either directly or indirectly, making their living out of it." As to the threadbare charge of immoral lives, that does not count for anything. There are Freethinkers in almost every neighborhood, and their lives are their own defense. Christians hav nothing to boast of in this regard, as compared with Freethinkers. Even if Freethinkers were very much inferior to Christians in all other respects—which they are not—the notorious contempt of the Christian for the basic social principle of equal justice would much more than balance the scales. People who want to exempt church property from taxation, who compel their neighbors to pay for the teaching of religious dogmas which they do not accept, and who deliberately steal one-seventh of the citizens' time through Sunday laws, should keep very quiet about "morality."

We cheerfully admit that those "who hav not freely inquired cannot fairly decide," and this is the status of the average Christian. He has read the Bible—more or less—and he listens to his preacher's ex parte statements. He is not familiar with the most common arguments against the divinity and authenticity of the Bible. The god idea he swallows without thought. Of the naturalistic beginnings and the comparativ history of religions he knows nothing. It is one of the easiest things in the world to get him to declare in the most positiv manner that important passages which you quote from the Bible are not to be found in that volume, which he avers is his chart of the sea of life and his passport into heaven. As a rule—of course there are exceptions—the Christian is a person who was born into Christianity. As a rule—again there are exceptions—a Freethinker is a person who has investigated and thought his way out of Christianity. Who has most "freely inquired"?

"If the scriptures reprove sin, no wonder sinners hate the scriptures." But the Bible itself says that "the devils believe and tremble." The Christian contends that not only does the Bible reprove sin but it reveals a way to escape the consequences of sin. Then why should the sinner hate it? If he believes, he gets a bill of credit on heaven which cancels his indebtedness. If he doesn't believe, why should he hate a book which cannot harm him? All this talk about Freethinkers and "sinners" "hating" the Bible is illogical and nonsensical. It is a decrepit sophism which should be retired on a pension.

"Deism is a cheat; and so hav many of its advocates found it, when a death-bed detected its folly. Christianity is increasingly precious in that trying hour; and, strange to tell, the instance is not recorded of a man who died regretting his faith in the word of God, or warning his friends against the delusion of the Bible."

A man having intellect enough to be a Deist or an Atheist during his years of strength is not likely to be frightened back into Christianity at the approach of death, unless his mental faculties weaken, and in that event his change of views proves nothing. Sickness of mind is no more an argument against mental vigor and sanity than sickness of body is an argument against physical strength and cleanliness. During the progress of dissolution the mind usually shares the afflictions of the body. Whether it does or does not generally depends upon the nature of the disease which is sapping the energies of the latter. It has often happened that those who, when in health, abandoned other creeds for Christianity hav returned to the religion of their childhood when prostrated by sickness. Early impressions are the more lasting.

Men die serenely in any and all beliefs, but Christianity would seem to be one of the poorest of death-bed comforters. Even if one is sure that he is himself of the elect it must be very painful to believe in the last hours of life that so many who helped make the earthward pilgrimage a pathway of peace and joy are doomed to an eternity of suffering; that he will never again look in their dear faces, unless, perchance, he beholds them contorted with the agonies of hell as he gazes from the battlements of heaven. On the other hand, what has the Freethinker to fear? Death comes to him as to all others. It cannot be escaped. No repentance can make good to him what he lost by the mistakes he made. In the words of George W. Foote: "The only terror in death is the apprehension of what lies beyond it, and that emotion is impossible to a sincere disbeliever. Of course the orthodox may ask: 'But is there a sincere disbeliever?' To which I can only reply, like Diderot, by asking, 'Is there a sincere Christian?'" Freethinkers die every day, and they close their eyes as peacefully as any of earth's children can, who all go out of life through the gates of pain.

Yes, men hav died who in dying warned their friends against the delusion of an inerrant Bible. Only presumption and ignorance of rationalism could ask such a question. "Regretting his faith in the word of God"? Well, it is stated that Jesus cried on the scaffold, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

A Lame Defense of Christianity.

Rev. George Pentecost, D. D., missionary and evangelist, perpetrates this anent the speeches of non-Christian priests at the World's Parliament of Religions:

"It was the monk Vivakanadra who arraigned Christianity for its crimes, for its vices and immoralities; who professed horror at the violence, bloodshed, and general wickedness of the propagators of the gospel; who charged them with coming with a sword in one hand to kill and destroy, and a Bible in the other to convert the mild and gentle, the pure and spotless Hindus, to the gross, carnal, and drunken habits of the Christians. The acts of so-called Christian governments, in wars of conquest against the gentle Orientals; their inhumanity in forcing opium and alcoholic liquors upon an unwilling and innocent people; the battle, war, and spoil waged by Western nations, were all charged upon Christianity. The drunkenness, immorality, and violence visible and open to view in Western Christian lands were alleged to be a part and parcel of Christianity and a direct result of the religion of Christ.

"What is to be said to all this? First. That the unrighteous acts of government are in no sense a product of Christianity. There is no such thing as a Christian government, in the sense that the state is directed and its actions authorized by the church of Christ. . . .

"Second. The drunkenness, the violence, the immoralities, the depredation seen in the cities and countries called Christians, are all outside Christianity, and are the sins and crimes against which the whole Christian ministry lifts its voice in the name of God and Christ. The victims of these sins are they to whom the gospel of forgivness, regeneration, and sanctification are directed. As well charge upon the medical profession responsibility for smallpox, cholera, yellow-fever, and leprosy, as to charge these worst works of the flesh upon the gospel of Christ, who came to seek and save men from their sins. . . .

"A man born of Hindu, Buddhist, or Mohammedan parents, and inducted into the rites of these faiths, is Hindu, Buddhist, or Mohammedan, whatever his life or character may be. The answer to this is, that there are good Hindus and bad Hindus. It is not so with Christianity. There may be good and better Christians, but there are no bad Christians. No drunkard, no liar, no whoremonger, no thief, no murderer, can be at the same time a Christian."

Suppose that, for argument's sake, we grant all this—what then? Suppose we admit, as Mr. Pentecost wishes us to do, that our government officials and the "jingoes" behind them who force them into needless, unjust, and robber wars, are not Christians; that our vicious and criminal classes are composed of men and women who are outside the pale of Christianity, and that the economic inequities which are largely responsible for the vice and violence that disfigure so-called Christian lands must in justice be placed at the door of non-Christians—suppose all this is conceded—and what is the logical conclusion? Let us see.

Christianity has been the popular, the dominant, and practically the only religion which Europe and modern America hav known. It is claimed that the races which constitute the bulk of the populations of Europe and America are naturally the keenest, the most receptiv of new ideas, the most energetic and progressiv of all the races which inhabit the earth. It is also claimed that the Christian religion comes directly from heaven, and that all other religions are of merely human origin; that back of Christianity is God and all the hosts of heaven; that this God sent his only son to earth to reveal himself as the redeemer of man and to establish God's church through which alone could come salvation to the children of this world; that in the Bible we hav God's infallible word, his impeccable commands to man; that this God-founded, Bible-charted, and Christ-ruled church is opposed to wars of conquest, to cruelty, to national and individual robbery, to drunkenness, to prostitution, to murder, to all governmental, social, and economic wrongs which breed paupers, the vicious and the criminal, and that if it could hav its way the blood of civilization would be purified and these terrible eruptions on the face and body of society would disappear as the leper's spots are said to hav vanished at the touch of the hand of Jesus, son of God and God himself, founder of the Christian Church.

Well, Why does it not hav its way? If Christianity be indeed a religion of deed instead of faith why is it that the races which for a millennium hav been taught by this one only God-sent religion are in many respects not a step in advance—to state it very mildly—of other races which hav been under the guidance of uninspired teachers of morals? Why is it that as regards war and persecution Christian nations—using the phrase in its ordinary sense—hav always been the most bloody and cruel? You say that the warriors and persecutors were not, are not, Christians. What does this plea avail? Has Christianity no restraining influence? If after the passage of these many centuries nations that hav during all this time been under the direct influence of God's own and only religion are more warlike and less tolerant than nations that hav never known its blessings, is it not time to ask in what its exceptionally elevating power consists? If as regards crimes of violence, and drunkenness and prostitution we are at the best not superior to peoples which worship at the altars of the "false gods," in what respect is Christianity superior to the other world religions as a humanizing and refining and purifying influence?

And again: If Christianity is not to be debited with those who lead nations to war, and those who in private life are vicious and criminal, we cannot in justice debit other religions with the immorality and crime which are found in countries where those religions are dominant. We do not forget that Mr. Pentecost tries to draw a line of distinction here, but the faintest breath of truth instantly effaces it. If those who do not, in Christian lands, respect the rights of others and do not lead moral lives, are not to be called Christians, no matter how strong their faith in Christian dogmas, then those who in other lands lead criminal and immoral lives cannot fairly be called Buddhists, or Hindus, or Mohammedans, no matter how implicitly they believe in the doctrinal creeds of those religions. If Christianity will not accept responsibility for the bad deeds of those who call themselvs Christians, then we cannot in justice foist the bad deeds of those who call themselvs Buddhists upon Buddhism. Taking this view of the matter, it at once becomes apparent that in comparing the great religions for the purpose of determining their relativ value as conservators of order and promoters of sound ethics we must place against their names demerit marks in the negativ ratio of unsocial acts which respectivly they do not prevent instead of in the positiv ratio of unsocial acts which those who bear their respectiv names commit. We hav been pointing to the offenses of those who are called Christians—those who accept the fundamental Christian dogmas—and we hav compared their shortcomings with the shortcomings of similar classes of offenders residing in lands under the influence of other religions, and we hav said that the comparison was not favorable to Christianity, considered as a restraining, moralizing power. Now comes Mr. Pentecost, who emphatically avers that this is not fair, that all crimes and immoralities are diametrically opposed to the teachings of Christianity and that, therefore, there can be no bad Christians.

Accepting this view for the nonce, we ask why it is that Christianity, claimed by its adherents to be the only God-given religion in the world, has not been able to make a better showing for itself as a police power and teacher of ethics? Why is it, that if it is, as claimed, so opposed to wrong-doing that no bad person can be a Christian, that the sum total of vice and crime in Christian lands is so enormous, equalling, if it does not exceed, the sum total of vice and crime in lands of equal or greater population under the sway of other world religions? Mr. Pentecost says that "the victims of these sins are they to whom the gospel of forgivness, regeneration, and sanctification are directed," and that Christ "came to save men from their sins." This being so, why is it that there are tens of millions of "sinners" in countries where this gospel has been preached for many centuries? that there are as many in those countries as there are in countries where the gospel of Jesus has not been preached? If God's gospel can show no richer fruits than the gospels of man, where is its superiority? Why not concentrate all the forces of Christianity in one supreme effort to redeem the sinners in Christian countries instead of sending missionaries to lands which seem as well able to take care of their own undeveloped classes as Christian people are to take care of theirs?

Mr. Pentecost forgets—conveniently, perhaps—that the moral codes of the great religions are parts of the common property of the race. They did not come to man through revelation but by evolution. They are the experiences of our ancestors voiced in aphorism, maxim, and law. They are subject only to the slightest and slowest of modifications as the race toils painfully onward through the centuries, its field of observation widening as the clouds of superstition grow thin under the rays of the sun of knowledge and its eyes become accustomed to the increasing light. It is not their differing moral systems that chiefly distinguish religions. It is when dreamers or schemers begin to formulate theories about the supernatural that they segregate men into sects. In so far as religion enjoins men to deal justly with their fellows because only thus can social order and individual safety be secured it is a beneficent factor in society, but when it tells men that the social law of reciprocity is suspended in the case of the man who cannot believe some tenet of the creed, then religion becomes a curse. If a man must believe—or pretend to believe—before he can hav the protection which is extended to even the common criminal who believes, human life is not safe for one moment. Religion has never cared for the purely human virtues when some fictitious duty to God required their sacrifice.

This is particularly true of Christianity. To save from hell the souls of the few it has been the murderer of the many. Mr. Pentecost cannot wipe out the record; he cannot convince intelligent and unprejudiced people here nor in other countries that the religion he preaches was not directly responsible for the witchcraft delusion with all its horrors; for the wholly unjustifiable Crusades; for centuries of the most atrocious persecution; for numberless wars of unexampled ferocity; for the degradation of woman; for the defense of American slavery by appeals to the Bible; for bigoted opposition to the temperance movement in its days of struggle; for Jew-baiting, and for numberless other colossal wrongs that were the legitimate fruits of its supernatural dogmas and other-world morality.

If you catch a preacher committing a crime, it does not save him from justice any more to accuse you of being in league with the devil.

Wanted—New Subscribers.

We solicit the kind attention of our friends to the need which exists of increasing the subscription list of THE TRUTH SEEKER. There are several reasons for this, which our readers will readily see. First, It will do a world of good, by making more Liberals and by interesting those already liberal in the work of Freethought. The church is making great encroachments upon our liberties, and the people need to know about it, in order to defeat its tyranny. And those who read THE TRUTH SEEKER are a hundred times more interested and activ than those who do not. Second, It is a duty we owe to our fellow-men to giv them the light of reason we hav obtained. Liberalism makes for true civilization, and freedom from fear of an angry God makes men happier and better. Every Liberal should do all he can to lift up his neighbors from the darkness of superstition to the glorious plain of mental liberty. And, as Mr. Wakeman says, referring to the resolution regarding the Liberal papers passed at the late International Congress: "They are the very life of the cause of intellectual and practical emancipation of the people. As such they are to be built up and sustained by constant care, payment, encouragement, and solicitation for subscribers for them." Third, An increase in the list will relieve the readers from the occasional "duns" we are compelled to send out in order to get money with which to pay bills. If we can obtain two or three thousand new subscribers, the increased revenue will make the business work of the paper easier, and we can continue to improve the paper without fear of financial embarrassments.

To reward those who will do a little for us in this matter we hav arranged to take a large number of Mr. Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," and to every one who sends us four new yearly subscribers at the regular rates of $3 ($12 in all), we shall send a copy of that magnificent work free. Those who send the club before the book is on the press will be enrolled among the original subscribers and patrons in the book.

And to make it easy to get these four new subscribers we will offer them as a premium either of two spendid works—The "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought" in cloth binding. Our readers know the value of these books, and that about every Liberal in the country would like a copy of one or the other. Either one of these, as may be chosen, will be given to the new subscribers obtained in these clubs of four, and a copy of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" to the one who gets up the club and sends the money and names.

We cannot afford to make this premium to single subscribers, but to enable old subscribers and single new subscribers to obtain these and other desirable works at a great reduction, we hav made a list of premiums in connection with subscriptions to the paper, to be found in the first column of the first editorial page of THE TRUTH SEEKER. We are willing to do our part toward making the obtaining of good Liberal works easy and cheap, and hope our readers will take advantage of the terms offered.

Once more we ask that a favorable eye be turned in our direction, and a helpful hand extended. As the resolutions of the International Congress expressed it, Boom the Liberal papers and you boom the Liberal cause.

The devil, hoofs, horns and all, is reported to hav been seen in Jersey City, where he came for the soul of a young woman who had made a bargain with him. The Herald sent a reporter to get the "facts," and he fills a column with interviews, the conclusion reached being that, as regards the young woman, there "ain't no sich a person." When people get sufficient sense to admit as much concerning "the devil," they won't make such fools of themselvs as some Jerseyites do now.

"Blessed be ye poor, for yours is the kingdom of God," is a promis said to hav been made by one "Jesus of Nazareth," but Nazareth is a long cry from Bloomfield, New Jersey, where Grace Episcopal church has turned out of its choir a well-educated gentleman for the heinous offense of being a coachman!

"I promis to study the Bible to find out what it teaches about public and political questions and to govern my voting and political conduct by it." If you want to take that pledge, send your name to the Christian Patriot, Morristown, Tenn. This is another of the church-state straws. We should be pleased to hav this Tennessee theocrat tells us what Jesus meant when he said, as reported, "My kingdom is not of this world."

Rev. P. E. Wilkinson is pastor of a Methodist church in Chicago. Recently while he was praying a young divinity student in the congregation went to sleep and did not awaken for sixty hours. We do not know what is the moral of this, unless it is that people should go home and go decently to bed instead of remaining in church, subject to the soporific influences of prayer, thus running the risk of putting their friends to the trouble of carrying them out in a recumbent position and calling a doctor.

The rejection of the Bible God is only the first step. Eliminate Jehovah and yet the moral equation is not demonstrated. It makes no difference whether any particular God ever commanded the crimes laid at the door of the tutelary divinity of the Jews. The crimes were committed, the suffering was endured. All nature shrieks in agony. If an intelligent God created the cosmos he is responsible. Every argument from sympathy and ethics is as valid against any omnipotent God as against the Idol of the Twelve Tribes. It is vain to appeal from the God of the Jews to the God of nature. Postulate a conscious, omnipotent, omniscient personality and "there is blood upon the hand still and all the perfumes of Araby cannot sweeten it."

"The report is published that the project for beatifying and canonizing Joan of Arc is likely to come to an abrupt termination, as no evidence is forthcoming of extraordinary virtue or of miracles wrought by her. If that is the difficulty, we might as well giv up the hope of having any more canonized saints. The evidence for their miracles will become less and less."—N. Y. Independent.

So much for the Protestant view of exclusivly Catholic saints and miracles. But how about the alleged miracles of Jesus, the common property of Protestant and Catholic? Is there any evidence for these miracles? We venture to say that if the miracles attributed to Jesus were credited to some later Catholic saint the Independent would be found among the disbelievers. Why is there such a great difference in the length of two strings, one measuring a foot and the other twelve inches?

Christianity, resting on a basis of traditional or book authority—the case respectivly of the Catholic and Protestant churches—is necessarily opposed to the development and integrity of the individual. To be sure, Protestantism claims to be the champion of the right of private judgment; but this claim is conditioned upon whether the individual's use of his own judgment leads him to accept or reject what she accepts or rejects. He may put his own interpretation upon any part of the Bible, but he must not reject the book as God's revelation to man. Wherever and in whatever department of human activity the genius of Christianity dominates the mind of man the individual must be subordinated to a power outside of himself. Between the individual—between his right to grow, his right to think for himself, his right to investigate and discover—and Christianity there is war, war without truce and without end.

This is the latest church-state scheme: A bill has been prepared and will be introduced in the Iowa legislature as a substitute for the present prohibitory law. It provides that the council of a city or town may grant to a corporation of not less than twenty-five resident freeholders an exclusiv franchise for the term of ten years for the sale of liquors. Prescribing how the corporation shall be managed, etc., it provides that after a five per cent. semi-annual dividend is paid, the remainder of the profits shall go to the city or town, to the school district and to the Young Men's Christian Association! Is the "Hon." D. Nicholl, who drafted this precious bill, more dunce or knave? But why should we be surprised by his antics, when the state makes a present to the church of a receipted bill for the full amount of its taxes and Congress makes a loan to the World's Fair management on condition that the Fair be closed on Sunday? The Iowa Freethinkers, nevertheless, should keep a sharp eye on Nicholl and his bill.

John Wesley, a gentleman more or less esteemed by our Methodist brethren, including Rev. Mr. Buckley, of the Christian Advocate, once upon a time stated it as his solemn belief "that the giving up witchcraft is in effect giving up the Bible." Were the gentleman living at the present time and still of the same way of thinking he would doubtless be ready to welcome as zealous accepters of the true faith the Mojave Indians, of California. The Mojaves believe that the squaw who has twins is a witch and a consort of evil spirits. So when a young wife among them recently gave birth to twins a grand council was at once called. The husband tried to save his wife and babies, but the medicin man—the priest—insisted that the custom of the tribe must be observed. Accordingly the babies were brained with a club and the mother burned in her house. The Mojaves hav not been rationalized by Freethought, hence they appear to be nearly the only uncorrupted spiritual descendants of Wesley and the Puritans who can now be found in the United States.

"To believe, to believe alone, is to liv. Skepticism as a habit, as a condition, is a sign of deficient vitality. It is a vastly nobler fear which dreads lest it should lose some truth than that which trembles lest it should believe something which is not wholly true. 'Seek truth and pursue it.' Of course, seeking the truth you will hate and avoid the lie—that goes without saying—but not to avoid the lie, but to find the truth."—Phillips Brooks.

"To believe, to believe alone," may or may not be a sign of superabounding vitality, but it is surely an indication of deficient mentality. Phillips Brooks was an eloquent sentence-weaver and a popular idol, but if all who preceded him in the course of life had believed everything and doubted nothing he would never hav been Bishop of Massachusetts. He would not hav been even a man. He would never hav heard of "the one true God." The logic of his "argument" for faith would necessitate the unquestioning acceptance of everything ever taught, no matter how contradictory or self-destructiv. A man who should attempt to condense into equal space more puerility and silliness than Phillips Brooks has crowded into the foregoing paragraph would hav a herculean task indeed.

Sunday mails are now to be attacked with all the available forces of Sabbatarianism. The Sundayites claim to hav petitions representing 10,000,000 adults in favor of Congressional action against Sunday carrying and distribution of mails. Of course this is not so, for 10,000,000 adults would stand for 25,000,000 of our population, supposing that half of the 10,000,000 are women. This is said to be the largest petition ever presented to Congress. If it is, it knocks at least 15,000,001 off the 40,000,000 long claimed to hav petitioned for the closing of the World's Fair on Sunday. It is clear that somebody is again trying to demonstrate that "Christian veracity is the equivalent of Punic faith." But, judging by the eagerness with which Congress swallowed the Munchausen tales of the Sunday closers, the enemies of Sunday mails will hav little difficulty in convincing that credulous body that they hav 10,000,000 petitioners behind them. While they were about it they might as well hav claimed 20,000,000. One lie is as good as another when reinforced by plenty of pious affidavits as to its truth, and your congressman is on the run to sav his seat. What representativ shall we send to Washington to expose and defeat these reactionists? There is no time to throw away.

Freethought and Secular Notes from England.

During the past month several events of considerable importance to us as Freethinkers hav occurred in England. The lecturing field, Parliament, and the church hav furnished us with materials for reflection, from which many valuable conclusions may be drawn.

CHRISTIAN VIOLENCE.

At many of our open-air Freethought meetings the defenders (?) of Christianity behave like the lowest rowdies rather than as respectable members of society. In former days they frequently caused disturbances in our halls and they did not hesitate to insult our lecturers in the street. In some cases these servants of the Lord, who are told in their Bible to "abstain from all appearance of evil," hav so terrified hotel-keepers that on some occasions it was impossible for our speakers to obtain either shelter or food. Although public opinion and an improved sense of justice hav compelled these orthodox fanatics to modify their brutal conduct, still the same kind of thing in a lesser degree has been revived in Newcastle-on-Tyne and in other towns, where Mr. Foote has recently addressed large meetings much to the discomfiture of church bigots. As I intimated in my last notes the president of the National Secular Society has adopted the plan of allowing free admission to certain portions of the hall at his lectures, and Christians hav marked their appreciation of his generosity by doing their best to break up his meetings. At one evening gathering a crowd of these Christian roughs insisted upon entering the hall at the conclusion of Mr. Foote's lecture, and on his rising to reply to opponents these pious people, notwithstanding they are enjoined in the New Testament to "let all things be done decently and in order," persisted in drowning his utterances by hideous cries such as are only excusable in the lower animals. Now, what becomes of the boasted influence of the Bible and of the holy spirit on such Christian minds? Evidently the love for Jesus does not inspire his followers with justice for and decency towards their fellow-men. What would be said of Freethinkers if they were guilty of such base conduct in the churches? Not only would they be punished "according to law," as "evil doers," but they would, and justly so, be condemned by all respectable and right-minded individuals. These actions of the wildly religious enthusiasts deserve to be held up to public execration. The right of free speech has been dearly purchased by the brave Freethinkers of the past and it must now be defended at any cost. Of course we recognize it as a part of our mission, as Freethinkers, to civilize such semi-savage natures and to try to teach them to think, to reason, and to listen to argument; but, like John Wesley, we hav sometimes to go through much rough work in our endeavors to accomplish this desirable object.

AN INDICATION OF SECULAR PROGRESS.

Since my return from America I hav delivered the annual lecture for the Birmingham branch of the National Secular Society, in the Town Hall of that city. Between two and three thousand persons were present, fully one-third being ladies. Mr. Cattell, who has taken part in the Secular movement in Birmingham for nearly half a century, writes me as follows:

DEAR WATTS: I congratulate you on your return from America, and also on your splendid reception at the City Hall. Walking home from the meeting with an old friend, we could not but compare notes on the progress of the Secular cause during the past thirty years. At our gatherings held three decades ago, under the most favorable circumstances, an assembly of forty grown-up persons at my lectures was considered a "crowded meeting," even those being more than were found at that period in the Unitarian chapel. The increase of hearers from scores to hundreds, and from hundreds to thousands, shows unmistakably signs of advance. I do not mean to imply that the whole of your audience of nearly three thousand persons agreed with your views, but the great point is that they were present, and that they listened without expressing dissent during the delivery of a discourse wherein views were expounded that many of them heard for the first time. The words attributed to Galileo are indeed true and applicable to Secularism—"Still it moves." CHARLES C. CATTELL.

LIBERTY OF BEQUEST.

Mr. Manfield, who succeeded Mr. Bradlaugh as member of Parliament for Northampton, has introduced into the House of Commons the following bill, which is of special interest to all English Freethinkers:

A BILL TO SECURE THE EXTENSION OF CIVIL AND RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

WHEREAS, It is expedient to remove the disabilities under which persons suffer who are desirous of endowing, creating, and maintaining charitable and other trusts for religious and ethical inquiry, so as to further extend civil and religious liberty;

Be it therefore enacted by the queen's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. This act may for all purposes be cited as the Civil and Religious Liberty Extension Act, 1893.

2. Nothing contained in this act shall affect or be deemed to repeal or contravene in any way such parts of the act nine George the Second, chapter thirty-six, relating to mortmain as remain unrepealed, or any other act amending or altering such act; and the provisions of all such acts now in force shall apply to all trusts created under this act.

3. After the passing of this act, notwithstanding any act, rule of common law, rule of equity, or rule of practice of any court of justice now in force to the contrary, it shall be lawful for any person to create and endow, or create or endow, any trust for inquiry into the foundations and tendency of religious and ethical beliefs which from time to time prevail, or for the maintenance and propagation of the results of such inquiry. And the method of application of bequests made for the purposes aforesaid shall be, on the part of those responsible for their administration, subject to revision at intervals of thirty years.

4. Such trust, whether created by deed or will, or by other instrument, shall be deemed a charitable trust, and shall be administered and given effect to in all respects in as full and complete a manner as in the case of religious and charitable trusts now recognized by law; and the doctrin of Cy-près shall be applied to it when circumstances shall arise requiring the application of such doctrin.

The bill is supported by several well-known M. P.'s, but it cannot make further progress this session, inasmuch as it has been "blocked" by a pious Tory, which means that it must remain as it is until next session. When, however, it does become law —and there is no doubt but it will—Secularists in England will no longer be legally robbed of bequests left them for the promulgation of their principles.

RELIGION IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

We are having in England a similar trouble with our public schools (termed here board schools) that obtains in America. Theologians, being unable to stem the tide of education, are doing their level best to pollute its stream with orthodox doctrins, that can only perplex the youthful mind and thus interfere with the reception of true secular instruction. The majority of the members of the London school board hav issued a circular informing the teachers that the Bible is their text-book of religion, and that from it the children must be taught their relation to God, the Creator, God the Redeemer, and God the Holy Ghost and Sanctifier. This is theological audacity with a vengeance, for it has long been an accepted fact that the text in the New Testament that groups these three Gods together is either an interpolation or a forgery. Where does the moral come in when such misleading instruction is issued for teachers to perpetuate error and delusion among the rising generation? The Roman Catholics are determined not to be behind in their demands. They are, therefore, asking for money from the state with which to pay their educational expenses, on the ground that they are rated for schools which they consider "hurtful and dangerous."

It will thus be seen that in England the battle for free and unsectarian instruction in our public schools is not yet completely won. Still we do not despair of victory, inasmuch as public opinion is clearly opposed to all encroachments of the church upon the education of the young. Theological restrictions and priestly domination hav had their day; the era of mental freedom is dawning in our midst.

PROFESSOR TYNDALL.

The month of December, 1893, will be remembered as the time when death robbed the world of the services of the eminent scientific expounder, John Tyndall. Next to the late Professor Clifford, Tyndall was the most out-spoken Freethinker of the present generation; his writings, with those of Darwin, Spencer, and Huxley, hav done more to modify the bigotry of the age than those of any other men. The fame of Tyndall's Belfast address to the British association, which was a modest defense of the truths of Materialism, has traveled throughout the civilized world, causing great excitement and giving much tribulation to the theologians whose tenets he called in question. His bold proposal to test the efficacy of prayer in curing disease thoroughly staggered those who professed to believe in supernatural aid. He suggested that the patients of one ward of a hospital should be placed under scientific treatment, while the sufferers in another ward should rely upon prayer, but Christians lacked sufficient faith to try the experiment. It may suit them to preach that prayer is a helper in the hour of need, but when that time arrives, science, the Secular providence, is preferred by those very people who are constantly advising their credulous followers to "put their trust in God." For reasons of his own, Tyndall objected to be called an Atheist, preferring what he termed the milder word, Agnostic. Yet in his lecture on "Man" (pp. 27 and 28) he pays the following tribute to the honor and fidelity of Atheists: "If I wished to find men who are scrupulous in their adherence to engagements, whose words are their bond, and to whom moral thriftiness of any kind is subjectivly unknown; if I wanted a loving father, a faithful husband, an honorable neighbor, and a just citizen, I should seek him and find him among the band of Atheists to which I refer. I hav known some of the most pronounced among them not only in life but in death—seen them approaching with open eyes the inexorable goal, with no dread of a hangman's whip, with no hope of a heavenly crown, and still as mindful of their duties, and as faithful in the discharge of them, as if their eternal future depended upon their latest deeds."

BRADLAUGH'S DEATH.

As the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER hav already been informed, religious slander has not left untouched the last hours of the life of the late great English leader of Freethought. These cowardly manufacturers of "Infidel Death-bed Stories," who could not answer Mr. Bradlaugh while he lived, hav, with pious zeal, sought to defame his memory now he is dead. The facts of the case were given in this journal, dated Dec. 2, 1893. It will be there seen that the Rev. Allan Rees, to impart to his slander the semblance of truth, professed to discover what never happened—Mr. Bradlaugh's change of opinion upon religion; and he mentioned the name of a brother of the dead hero who never existed. When his wicked falsehoods were exposed, this occupier of the "coward's castle" declined any further correspondence upon the matter. This reckless preacher of "a religion of truth and justice" is a fair sample of theologians, who, with an audacity that ignorance and fanaticism alone could inspire, libel Freethinkers who hav had sufficient intellectual ability to think for themselvs rather than to be contented with the mental laziness of blind belief. If the Bible be true, "all liars shall hav their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone" (Rev. xxi, 8).

FALSE CLAIMS FOR CATHOLICISM.

The Rev. Dr. Vaughan is the archbishop of Westminster, a cardinal of the Roman Catholic church, and the pope's representativ in Great Britain. As it was said of Jesus, the cardinal has "opened his mouth" and spoke to the multitude, urging the claims of his church, which he says has "always" been a friend of "education, progress, and liberty." This is indeed a reckless statement in the face of the ignorance which so extensivly abounds among the Roman Catholic population, and of the present unprogressiv condition of Catholic countries. The mention of "Roman Catholic love of liberty" recalls to mind the history of the rack, the thumbscrew, and all the other cruelties and tortures to which Bruno, Galileo, Vanini, Hypatia, and other noble martyrs were exposed. Instances of Roman Catholic "liberty" are furnished by the fires of Smithfield and of Oxford and also by the massacres of the Inquisition and St. Bartholomew, where the warmth and force of Catholic "love" were experienced by those who dared to differ from the "mother church." It is a curious fact that this apocryphal history of the Roman church was related by the archbishop in the famous city of Coventry, where it is said that a certain man called "Peeping Tom" had the misfortune to lose his eyes because, contrary to orders, he "peeped" at Lady Godiva, as she rode in a nude state on a milk-white steed for the purpose of saving the liberty of the city. I do not indorse this story, but it is quite as credible and better attested than Dr. Vaughan's story about the claims of his superstitious and intolerant church, which has ever been and still is the bitterest foe of all the elements that are necessary to the existence of civilization. He coolly observed that the English people hav imported from Germany their skeptical views of Christianity and their ideas of Atheism. Had the cardinal studied the history of English Freethought he might hav known that our heresy as to the Christian faith, and our Atheistic philosophy, existed long before we became acquainted to any great extent with German ideas. He alleged that in England "ultra Socialism, Anarchy, and Atheism" were allied and that the Secular societies, which he admitted "hav made, during the past few years, considerable development and expansion," encouraged the violence which now destroys the peace and safety of home and country. We take decided exception to thus coupling our Secular prcpaganda with Socialism and Anarchy, for it does not claim alliance with all forms of Socialism, and certainly it repudiates every form of violence and outrage as strongly as the archbishop himself. Secularists both publicly and privately show that they are more averse to such methods than many of Dr. Vaughan's own followers hav proved themselvs to be in many towns we could mention.

A SOCIAL WAR.

England has just passed through a crisis that for months has paralyzed trade and shaken our commercial system to its very center. This tremendous conflict was caused through a dispute between the colliery owners and the hard-worked miners. This is not the place to discuss which side was to blame for the deplorable state of things which threw thousands of men out of employment, and reduced hundreds of families to a state of starvation. The whole business revealed a lamentable condition of affairs under what is called Christian civilization and brought to view the degraded position into which the vast multitude of the workers in mines hav been forced by the social system that obtains in England. Fortunately this war is over for the present, and peace has been secured in the only way which we, as Freethinkers, could approve—namely, by a conference, presided over by Lord Roseberry, between the two parties concerned. Still it would hav been far more sensible to hav had such a conference before instead of after the mischief had been done. Such a mistake will probably be avoided in the future, as "conciliation boards" are to be legally established for settling disputes between employers and employed. The important fact has been discovered during this crisis that "the secret of England's greatness" is not the Bible, but coal. All the Bibles in the country could hav been locked up and the people would not hav materially suffered in consequence. Not so with coal that was kept from the population and untold misery was the result. Long before peace had been proclaimed meetings had been held throughout the country to pray to God that he would put an end to this social war, but nothing came of it. The Lord of heaven took no notice. Men, women, and children continued to heroically bear the pangs of hunger, and ultimately secular effort had to achieve what prayer failed to accomplish.

"A LIVING WAGE."

Another important result arising from the above unfortunate conflict is that the question of a "living wage" for the toiling masses has been brought to the front. It is curious to notice the position taken by many of the clergy in this matter. Some of them affirmed that the only solution of the difficulty was to accept the "living wage" prescribed long ago by "the young carpenter of Nazareth." It is certainly paying that young hero a poor compliment to connect him with a decided historic failure, for it is confessed that after nearly nineteen hundred years no fair wage is being received by the working classes to-day. But apart from this, these clergymen urge that men ought to be paid as "Christians" and not according to the value of their work in the market at any given time. A man's income is not to depend on the wage fund or upon the number of applicants among whom the fund is to be distributed. No matter how rapidly the population increases and the demand for labor decreases, the "Christian wage" has to be paid, each man having what he wants to provide for himself and family. While we should most heartily rejoice to see the last clause enacted, the question arises upon the "Christian" principle, how is the thing to be done? These reverend gentlemen failed to tell us how, in the absence of the wage fund and the demand for production, the "Christian wage" was to be found. Would a portion of it come out of the hundred dollars received weekly by many parsons or from the two hundred dollars a day which are now paid to some bishops? These preachers of "Blessed be ye poor" could well spare some of their income and then hav a decent "living wage" left for themselvs. Why did not these clerical "helpers" advise the miners in the language of Jesus to "labor not for the meat that perisheth," and assure them that their heavenly father would feed and clothe them as he did the fowls of the air. If "the young carpenter of Nazareth" could speak to-day, he might exclaim to these clergymen, "O ye of little faith."

SECULAR LEGISLATION.

The Secular teachings of self-help and provision are receiving valuable support from a measure now passing through the English Parliament, entitled "The Employers' Liability Act," which provides compensation to workmen in case of accident and to their families in case of their death through the carelessness or neglect of their employers. All such legislation strikes at the root of the old conception that God could be relied upon in the hour of death or in the time of danger. Men no longer rely upon prayer to protect them against accidents, neither do they depend upon succor from heaven in time of sickness. Thus science has become recognized as being the only available providence of life. This is so even among those who profess the strictest religious doctrins, for they rely in all their business pursuits and in their domestic arrangements upon the methods of science rather than upon assistance from heaven. This Secular policy not only benefits individuals, but it also confers advantages on the general community, who thus do not suffer through the neglect of persons who otherwise would put their trust in the delusions of theology instead of in the revelations of science. In my next "Notes from England" I shall mention more Secular legislation, which, under the name of "The Parish Council Bill," is now engaging the attention of the British House of Commons. This bill seeks to protect the rural population from the power of the clergy, which for ages has kept them in a state of abject dependence and of mental servitude. In England, as in America, Freethought is making rapid strides, and Secular philosophy is shedding the glory of its wisdom among all classes of society.

CHARLES WATTS.

Birmingham, December, 1893.

To Robert G. Ingersoll.

Thou hast peered at all creeds of the past, and each one hath seemed futil and poor
As a firefly that fades on a marsh, as a wind that makes moan on a moor;
For thy soul in its large love to man, in its heed of his welfare and cheer,
Bids him hurl to the dust whence they sprang all idolatries fashioned by fear.

Not the eagle can gaze at the sun with more dauntless and challenging eyes
Than thou at the radiance of truth when it rifts the dark durance of lies.
From thy birth wert thou tyranny's foe, and its deeds were disdain in thy sight;
Thou art leagued with the dawn as the lark is—like him dost thou leap to the light!

Having marked how the world's giant woes for the worst part are bigotry's brood,
Thou hast hated, yet never with malice, and scorned but in service of good.
Thy compassionate vision saw keen how similitude always hath dwelt
Between fumes poured from altars to God and from flames haggard martyrs hav felt.

What more splendid a pity than thine for the anguish thy race hath endured
Through allegiance to specters and wraiths from the cohorts of fancy conjured?
At the bold pomps of temple and church is it wonder thy wisdom hath mourned,
Since the architect, Ignorance, reared them, and Fright,
the pale sculptor, adorned?

But sterner thy loathing and grief that the priesthoods hav shamed not to tell
Of an infinit vengeance enthroned in the heart of an infinit hell;
That they shrank not to mold from void air an omnipotence worship should heed,
And yet clothed it with ruffian contempt for the world's multitudinous need!

Thy religion is loftier than theirs; nay, with vehement lips hast thou said
Its foundations are rooted in help to the living and hope for the dead.
All eternity's richest rewards to a spirit like thine would prove vain,
Were it sure of but one fellow-mortal that writhed in unperishing pain.

Like a mariner drifted by night where tempestuous
wracks overshade
Every merciful star that perchance might with silvery pilotage aid,
Resolution and vigilance each close-akin as thy heartbeat or breath, Dost thou search in thy courage and calm the immense chartless ocean of death.

There are phantoms of ships that lurch up, and thou seest them and art not allured
By their masts made of glimmering dream, by their bulwarks from cloudland unmoored;
For the helmsmen that steer them are mist, and the sails they are winged with, each one,
By the feverish hands of fanatics on looms of delusion are spun.

At the vague stems are visages poised that in variant glimpses appear . . .
Here the swart and imperial Osiris, the crescent-crowned Mohammed here;
Or again, mystic Brahma, with eyes full of omens, monitions, and vows;
Or again, meek and beauteous, the Christ, with the blood-crusted thorns on his brows.

But thou sayest in thy surety to all: "Empty seemings, pass onward and fade!" . . .
Not by emblems and symbols of myth wert thou born to be tricked and betrayed;
For aloof o'er the desolate blank thou discernest, now dubious, now plain,
The expanse of one sheltering shoreland, worth ardors untold to obtain.

Full of promis, expectancy, peace, in secure sequestration it lies,
Undismayed by a menace of storm from its arch of inscrutable skies. . . .
Canst thou reach it, strong sea-farer? . . . Yes! for the waves are thy bondsmen devout.
Look! they wash thee safe-limbed on its coast, clinging firm to thy tough spar of doubt!

Roam at large in its glorious domain; from its reaches night half has withdrawn;
Over inlet, bay, meadow, and creek broods the delicate damask of dawn;
Roam at large; 'tis a realm thou shouldst love; 'tis the kingdom where Science reigns king;
In its lapses of grove and of greensward sleeps many a crystalline spring.

To the eastward are mountains remote, with acclivities towering sublime:
The repose of their keen virgin peaks mortal foot hath not ventured to climb;
In their bastions and caverns occult, in their bleak lairs of glacier and stream,
There are treasures more copious and costly than fable hath yet dared to dream.

Thou shalt see not their splendors, for fate may retard through long ages the hour
That in bounteous bestowal at last shall mankind inconceivably dower.
Yet thy prophecies err not, O sage; thou divinest what wealth shall outpour
When exultant those proud heights of knowledge posterity sweeps to explore.

Not for thee, not for us, those dear days! In oblivion our lots will be cast
When the future hath built firm and fair on the bulk of a petrified past.
Yet its edifice hardier shall bide for the boons fraught with help that we giv—
For the wrongs that we cope with and slay, for the lies that we crush and outliv!

And if record of genius like thine, or of eloquence fiery and deep,
Shall remain to the centuries regnant from centuries lulled into sleep,
Then thy memory as music shall float amid actions and aims yet to be,
And thine influence cling to life's good as the sea-vapors cling to the sea! —Edgar Fawcett, in The Arena.

Sunday Laws.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: It is no more than fair that you grant me a little space to say what I hope will be my last words of a personal character. In my recent article, published in your paper, I simply compiled what the several Secular societies had said in defining their opinions and at the same time declared that I am in favor of a Secular Sunday, established by authority of law. This called out in THE TRUTH SEEKER two full columns of editorial matter, published a week before my article appeared!

Now, this editorial is a curiosity. I only notice one paragraph: "A minority of the wage-workers, and here and there an unassigned gentleman like Dr. Westbrook, hav eaten of the ecclesiastical gulls' seed scattered by the priestly caste to catch the unwary." Now, here is "richness" for you! I am utterly at a loss to know what is meant by an "unassigned gentleman." I hav examined Webster's unabridged and my law lexicons in vain, and so must giv it up! Will the Editor please tell me what he means by an "unassigned gentleman?" Then I am puzzled by the "gulls' seed." I turn again to Webster and find this quotation from Mr. J. G. Wood: "Why the word 'gull' should be employed to express stupidity, I cannot at all comprehend; for the gulls are very knowing birds indeed, and difficult to be deceived!" Now it may be that those "unassigned gentlemen" know more than their critics in consequence of eating this gulls' seed! "They are very hard to deceive." A few years ago Punch gave his readers a recipe for making "gooseberry fool." It ran something like this: "Carefully skin your gooseberries, extract the seeds and wash the pulp in three waters, for six hours each. Having done this with the gooseberries the fool is perfect!"

Now, I do not call anybody a fool, but I do say that the discussion of this Sunday question has, on the part of the extremists, been very much like making "gooseberry fool" according to the recipe given by Punch. The subject has been washed over in so many waters that there is nothing but water left! In conclusion, allow me to add that it is not true that I was ever in favor of closing the Chicago Fair "by an act of Congress." I simply claimed that the commissioners having made a contract with Congress by accepting the $2,500,000 on condition of closing, they were bound to keep the conditions of that contract and close on Sunday. To take that money and then open on Sunday was a piece of villainy that I can find no language strong enough to describe. But all this is now "ancient history" and the question seems to be, "Shall Sunday be established by law?" I am ready to take the affirmativ of this question and to meet any honorable opponent in legitimate controversy, who, instead of dealing in vulgar personalities, will write like a gentleman, assigned or "unassigned." Who among our Freethinkers will accept this challenge? R. B. WESTBROOK.

Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 2, 1894.

[Why J. G. Wood should suppose that the word "gull" is used to denote stupidity in the bird or in the one who gulls we do not pretend to know. Of course everybody but Dr. Westbrook saw that the ecclesiastics were the gullers, not the gulled. If Dr. Westbrook still believes that "Sunday should be established by law," after the absolute demonstration to the contrary in the editorial mentioned, his case is hopeless and further discussion useless. —ED. T. S.]

Three Pointers.

A Christian young woman in our neighborhood has learned a new song. She keeps time with her foot to the cradle while she sings:

Sleep, my child; thy troubled mother
Weeps while none her tears can see.
The one she trusted as a lover
Never will be known to thee.

There is always something pathetic connected with such cases, and none but the evil-minded will rejoice at such happenings. I would not allude to the circumstance did it not hav a moral attachment to it.

Christians would convey the idea that those who experience religion and join the church are more virtuous, hav more self-respect, and exert a more wholesome influence in society than those outside. This girl was brought up in one of the strictest Presbyterian families in all the country round. From the time she was old enough to fold her hands in prayer she has been taught to pray. She has been taught that God is always near to those who call on him; that he is a father to the faithful; that when clouds darken and danger thickens God always dispels the clouds and turns away the danger. She has been taught from early youth that God exercises parental supervision over, and holds as in the hollow of his hand, those who put their faith in him.

Oh, the wickedness and delusion of such teaching! On account of such teaching, instead of using their reason and better judgment, thousands hav trusted to this unseen helper, but when the hour of danger came—when too late—they found that they had been leaning on a broken reed.

No doubt this girl had uttered the prayer many, many times—"Lead us not into temptation"—and yet when the hour of temptation came she was no better off than those who had not prayed at all.

When the train is derailed, when the vessel sinks or the boiler explodes, God never happens to be within helping distance. At the very moment he is most needed he fails to materialize. He always has business in another direction. He is getting up a blizzard, or bringing on a drouth or a flood, or laying a mine for an earthquake, or putting a fuse to a volcano.

How many hopes hav been blasted, how many hav been disappointed, because they had been taught that God will help those who put their trust in him in the time of danger? Yet there are thousands of lessons which unmistakably teach that those who pray fare no better than those who do not. In this regard there is no difference between those who pray and those who swear. I would rather hav the advice of a farseeing, cool, calculating man than to hav an interest in all the prayers that were ever uttered.

When reason and sound philosophy are taught in the place of myth and superstition, men will trust to their own powers and not to a phantom which can render no assistance in the hour of trial and danger.

The impression is abroad that those who belong to the church and pay the priest and make long prayers are more honest, moral, and trustworthy, and exert a more healthy influence in society than those who do not. To prove the fallacy of such doctrin is the object of this article.

Some time ago Mr. A. lost between thirty and forty blooded sheep. Some of them had been registered and had tags attached to their ears and had the owner's initials stamped upon their right sides in black paint. Mr. B. had fifty sheep in an adjoining lot. About the time the sheep were missed Mr. B.'s sheep were taken away. Mr. A. inquired if his sheep had not got into B.'s flock. No, he said, he had no sheep only those which belonged to him. The sheep were advertised in the village paper from week to week and much time spent in looking for them.

At length he got intelligence that Mr. C. had his sheep. When asked how he obtained them he said he bought them of Mr. B., the man who had the fifty sheep in the next lot. The tags were torn from the ears and the initials of Mr. B's name stamped with red paint over the initials of Mr. A.'s name, and also on the other side of the sheep.

But why such tedious mention of a matter of no general concern to the public? Because this man, Mr. B., could pray longer, open his mouth wider, spout more holy froth, jump higher, bellow louder, and paw up more Methodist dirt than any other man within a hundred miles of here. He gave $1.000 to build the church: he owns thirty or forty cows, sixty or seventy horses, and two or three hundred acres of land. He is the great mogul of the Methodist church.

Why, he is the first mate on "the old ship Zion," takes the observations and keeps the log-book when the captain is otherwise engaged. He has general supervision of the celestial regions, tells the angels when to roost, furnishes straw for their nests, when they want to set examins their eggs to see that none are addled; when the young angels are hatched, watches them to see that "Old Clootie" does not catch them before they are able to fly. He not only has charge of things above, but is the chief director in God's holy temple below. When he bends his knee, God almighty stamps his foot on the golden pavement, and says "Whist," and then there is silence in heaven. Having turned the calcium light on this vicegerent of the great supernal director, let us philosophize a little.

Did the command, "Thou shalt not steal," hav any effect on this holy nincompoop when he was stamping the initials of his own name over those of the owner? Did the admonition, "Do unto others as you would hav others do unto you," sway his mind when he was pulling the tags off the ears of the sheep? Did he pray, "Lead us not into temptation," when he sold sheep which he knew belonged to another?

A man said not long ago that he knew all the Christians, but he knew of only one man with whom he would trust his pocket-book with uncounted money, and he was an Infidel. That Infidel will hav to go to hell, while this holy shepherd will buy or squeeze his way through—get a pass from the church, and secure a harp and crown after all. Why, this nondescript half man, half celestial, whose dwelling-place is somewhere between earth and the seventh heaven, has labored with me and told me what a great amount of good I might accomplish if I would only change my views (be a high-pressure hypocrit).

Did the command to not covet his neighbor's property deter this pious snob from stealing? Will any amount of praying take the rascality out of him? Will reading long chapters in the Bible make him honest?

As long as Christians teach such holy slush, and make the church the headquarters for sneak-thieves, mongers, wine-bibbers, liars, extortioners, hypocrits, and perjurers, it must be expected that such men will turn up.

When the church instills into the minds of the young a higher sense of honor, and teaches self-respect and a due regard for the thoughts and rights of others, we may expect to lift the coming generations to a higher plane of morality.

But think of the horror and stupidity of singing:

He will forgiv, if you only believe.

And the young are made to think that belief is of more importance than reason, intelligence, honesty, and morality. Yes, the church teaches that if a man only believes, he can be admitted when he knocks at the gate of St. Peter, even though he hav a hangman's noose about his neck.

. . . . . .

Some nights ago I was riding with a gentleman and looking at the stars.

"What bright star is that yonder," he asked.

"That is not a star," said I; "that is the planet Jupiter."

"What do you think," said he, "about God creating the heavens and the earth in six days out of nothing?"

I said, "If you could wing your way through space with the speed of lightning, and pursue an undeviating course for millions of years, you would undoubtedly see suns, planets, and stars as we do from our present standpoint. These are all material bodies, and to suppose that they were created out of nothing in any time, long or short, is the height of absurdity."

"That is just what I think," said he.

To my surprise I found that he had scaled the walls of superstition, and was an out-and-out Atheist.

I asked him if he had ever read any writings upon the subject.

"Never a syllable," said he. "I hav reasoned myself into the position which I occupy."

I told him I would send him some Freethought literature. He said it would not be a favor if I did. He told me that he did not wish to take a bone of contention into his family; that his wife was the daughter of a Methodist minister, and had never dreamed that he did not believe in a God and the Bible with all the attachments.

I was at his house over Sunday. He brought up the carriage, and his wife went to church. He pays the pew-rent and I presume attends church himself.

There are thousands in his condition in this country to-day. In the church and out of it are men and women who hav reasoned themselvs out of the old superstition, but wife or husband, church or business, or Mrs. Grundy holds their noses down to the Christian grindstone, and then makes them pay for turning the stone.

But the point I wish to make is this: This man's wife is a Christian dyed in the wool. She has not reasoned herself into Christianity—she will never reason herself out of it. She is simply a good Christian; she has never been taught to reason. Like other good Christians, her mind has been molded to a pattern. Like a set machine, it can only run in one groove. She can hav no conception of the freedom of thought. The business of the church is to turn out Christians, not to produce thinkers. To her mind there is a great being up among the clouds or beyond, and she could be led into any excess or absurdity if she could be made to believe that it would be pleasing to the great imaginary being above the skies. True Christians can hav no innate sense of right and justice. They will kneel in human blood when they think it agreeable to God. They hav been led to commit the most ferocious acts by being made to believe that God looked on approvingly.

If the woman above alluded to should learn that her husband was a doubter, she would know that he is an object of God's wrath, and would be damned. From that moment, instead of the loving, tender husband, he might become to her a human scorpion.

Oh, the rarity of Christian charity.

Now mark the difference. He does not believe in her God or her religion; yet he indulges her in all her superstitious freaks and Christian absurdities. She differs from him, and it does not create a ripple; but for her to know his real belief would create contention and strife. Christianity must ever be intolerant.

So it has been through the ages. So it must always be as long as a system exists which reduces men and women to a state of mental slavery. The mind must be free to investigate everything—to mount as high as heaven or dive us deep as hell.

JOHN PECK.

Observations.

Mr. John R. Charlesworth recently argued, in a communication to THE TRUTH SEEKER, that the state cannot be called a necessary evil because, to so characterize it—every person born into the community being a part of the state—would be equivalent to saying that every person is an evil. His remark led me to say, in substance, that since delivering Freethought lectures is a calling in which Mr. Charlesworth excels, he would do more good by confining himself to that work than by branching off into economics, upon which subject he does not express himself so convincingly. If I had known, as I hav since learned, that Mr. Charlesworth makes a distinction between state and government, I should hav understood him better and might not hav evoked the reply he has sent to the Editor. From this reply, now before me, Mr. Charlesworth's definitions of state and government are learned. He says:

The state means that individuals shall be brought into closer relationship, each with the other; while government means authority.

Mr. Charlesworth admits that he is not outside of the category of those who are given to the confusion of terms, which saves me the trouble of telling him so, and which is so apparent that he hardly needed to mention it himself. He adds that the writer of "Observations" confounds state with government; but the confusion is in Mr. Charlesworth's mind, not in mine; for when I say state I mean government, or the same thing; whereas when Mr. Charlesworth says state he means society, which, as Thomas Paine said, is not only different but has a different origin. "Society," says Mr. Paine, "is produced by our wants;" that is, by our dependence on one another; and consequently, as Mr. Charlesworth puts it, "individuals are brought into closer relationship, each with the other." It was the state that prosecuted Paine in England and drove him to France; it was society in America that ostracized him and drove him to New Jersey.

The state makes outlaws: society, outcasts. If the secretary of the Freethought Federation will read chapter one. Part II., "Rights of Man," on "Society and Civilization," he will see that his definition of state is identical with Paine's definition of society; and if he will read Herbert Spencer he will find that that philosopher's use of the word state is pretty much the same as his own use of "government." But even if Mr. Charlesworth had been accurate in his use of terms, it would be necessary. in the interest of truth, to say that he is wrong in his statement that every person is a part of the state. In the first place, the person born into a community has no voice in the government for twenty-one years after his entrance (I am speaking about our own country, which is exalted as the best example of a state); and if the person happens, which is an even chance, to be your aunt instead of your uncle, she will never hav any authoritativ voice at all. Infancy and sex thus exclude about five-sixths of the population from participation in the directing of state affairs. The delegation of the governing power to representativs and "public servants" shuts out nine hundred and ninety-nine one-thousandths of the remaining one-sixth, and the assumed power of rings and bosses further reduces the popular influence.

When I get ready to admit that the child is an appreciable part of the state I shall also be ready to acknowledge guilt through Adam's sin, and to claim salvation through the murder of Jesus Christ.

I hav reason to believe that the periodical resurrection of the joke first suggested the idea of human reincarnation. The "Not for Parsons" column of THE TRUTH SEEKER a week or two ago contained an anecdote about a certain Boston clergyman who sent to a brother clergyman in the Windy City for a copy of a work entitled "Seekers After God." The Western preacher, having made diligent search, reported that there were "no Seekers after God in Chicago." Now, that joke was born in England more than one hundred years ago. It suffered under George the Third, was doubtless crucified by people who can't tell a story, died and was buried, and descended into the newspapers. whence it arose in the third generation and has just been set up by the right hand of the compositor. Its birth was after this wise: The government of England, in the year of grace 1793, had taken in hand the suppression of the political works of Thomas Paine; and all public officers were instructed to be on the lookout for stray copies. The town crier of Bolton, being sent abroad on this errand, made the following return to his masters: "Hav been all around this place and find in it neither the rights of man nor common sense."

The joke has left something of its truthfulness in the sepulcher, for it very accurately described England at the period alluded to; whereas there are known to be lunatics in Chicago.

The respected Dr. E. B. Southwick, of Sherman, Mich., being one of those who "dream while awake"—that is, a Spiritualist—writes to me saying: "Your criticisms in THE TRUTH SEEKER are a sort of necessarv evil." I mention this in order to thank my venerable friend for preserving the word "necessary."

Judge Westbrook, of Philadelphia, has been set to the unrewarded task of pawing law-books and dictionaries to find out what is meant by "unassigned gentleman"—a term applied to himself in an editorial appearing in this journal. I can help the judge out by relating a romance of Puget Sound. You must know, then, that along in the fifties, when white men first penetrated that district, a simple siwash maiden of the upper Stillaguamish country, having become the wife of a pale-face, became also the mother of his last child. The uncorseted daughter of the woods had expected that her offspring would favor its father as to complexion if a bov or its mother if a girl; and such was her confusion when she noted its bilious tint—neither white nor salmon-colored—that she at once consigned her tenas (so the siwash kid is termed) to the cold waters of the Stillaguamish river. When solicited by the husband for an explanation of her unnatural conduct, she replied in these memorable words, familiar to the wahwah of Snohomish county: "Yoka halo siwash; yoka halo Boston; yoka delate blankity-blank." The closing compound, though not found in dictionary or law lexicon, conveyed, in her simple patois, the woman's idea that the infant, being no Indian and no white man, was one of the genuin unassigned.

Now the color of the child, like the character of Dr. Westbrook's Sunday, was referable to physiological causes; and it is no wonder that the Editor, needing a descriptiv term for the advocate of such a Sunday, was obliged to go outside the accepted vocabulary to find it. In one way the offspring of the forest differed from the Sabbatarian conception of Judge Westbrook. It was not prescribed by statutory law.

When District-Attorney Fellows, of New York, publicly announced that he had named Mr. Hugh O. Pentecost as his assistant, I thought that the ex-editor of the Twentieth Century should be congratulated. All the papers attacked Mr. Pentecost, and the New York Tribune went so far as to say that the appointment was "an insult to the intelligence of the community." Of course everybody knew that it was not intelligence but the editor of the Tribune that had been offended, but the outcry had its effect, and Colonel Fellows reconsidered his choice of an assistant.

Up to this time Mr. Pentecost had observed silence and retained the good-will of his old friends. He might be assailable for inconsistency in working for the enforcement of laws which he denounced as unjust, still the fact is generally recognized that a man with a family to support must look out for the main chance. Some of his former sympathizers even accepted the appointment as an indication that the political world was growing more tolerant. They called it a concession, and being of a class more accustomed to abuse than to favors, they were in a position to appreciate this one. The press denunciation did not lower him in their estimation—they were used to that. It was left for Mr. Pentecost to "insult the intelligence of the community" and to precipitate himself down the toboggan-slide from the hight where he enjoyed the respect of a few to a depth of self-abasement where he must feel that he forfeits the esteem of everybody. He has recanted without hope of reward here or hereafter. Having been kicked, he turns to caress the foot that hoisted him. "I now know," he says, "that we liv in a world in which the government and the social system which prevail are the best that human beings in their highest wisdom hav been able to construct. Whatever may hav been my former beliefs, I am now as firm a believer as any one in the practical necessity of the governmental system we hav and enjoy." Mr. Pentecost is also now prepared to say, in vindication of his political orthodoxy, that the evidence against the Chicago revolutionists, Engel, Parsons, Fischer, Spies, and Lingg, connected them and all of them with the throwing of the Haymarket bomb, and that their conviction, death, and damnation were just.

If Colonel Ingersoll, while a candidate for office, had said: "I now know that we li in a world in which the religion and the ecclesiastical system which prevail are the best that the divine being in his infinit wisdom has ever been able to reveal; and whatever may hav been my former beliefs, I am now as firm a believer as anyone in the necessity of the ecclesiastical system we hav and enjoy"—if Colonel Ingersoll had made such a confession at one time, adding that the burning of Bruno was a righteous act and the persecution of Paine a necessity, he would hav been governor of Illinois. We should hav had the satisfaction in his case of knowing that he had vanquished his enemies, though by the humiliation of his friends; but what would hav been the measure of our disrespect if he had made his recantation after being defeated! It would be the same measur that is now felt toward Pentecost to the extent that he is of sufficient importance to be worthy of it.

Political agitators, sincere though misguided enthusiasts. hav helped the world; so hav religious fanatics, indirectly or negativly; but I never heard of any good results from the crawfish.

A newspaper in whose editorial utterances I hav no confidence, and which is therefore unworthy of respect, says: "The ghost of free silver coinage appears to be laid." I do not mention the paper, because the sentence lost all its originality shortly after it was uttered, and its truthfulness some time before. But even if the ghost of free silver were laid, we hav enough other ghosts to competently fill its place. Over the great West stalks the shade of departed Prosperity, and it arose when silver was slaughtered. There and everywhere is the shadow of Industry, slain by those who struck down its parent, Silver. There are the apparitions of once flourishing communities, the soul of Plenty, the spirit of Enterprise—relics of material prosperity drained of its lifeblood by this crime of legislators. If these, again, are not enough, let me introduce to you the gaunt specters Want, and Hunger, and Misery, that we are trying to meet and appease with the hypocritical smirk of Charity. When the Inquisition was torturing a victim, restoratives were applied again and again, in order that he might be racked once more. That was Charity, and it is all the nation has to offer in place of the freedom it has assassinated.

DURING the last week in December, J. E. Remsburg delivered a course of five lectures in Paris, Tex., the home of Colonel Peterson, who many years ago published the Freethought journal Common Sense. J. F. Miles and Colonel Peterson, TRUTH SEEKER subscribers, arranged for the meeting, which was quite a successful one. The third night Mr. Remsburg spoke he was frequently interrupted by a man in the audience. As the man was intoxicated no attention was paid to him. The offender proved to be Colonel Boyd, editor of the Paris Daily News and one of the chief pillars of the Methodist church. The next morning Colonel Boyd called at Mr. Remsburg's hotel, came to his room, and humbly apologized for his conduct of the previous evening. He said that his conduct was outrageous, and he regretted it the more because he had just come from prayer-meeting.

THE Brooklyn Philosophical Association had Mr. Wakeman last Sunday to speak on "The Cosmic Evolution and the Unemployed." The lecture was mainly devoted to cosmic evolution and the question of sociology, being a criticism of Mr. Spencer for his attitude toward the question of sociology, where he recognizes the individual before society. Mr. Wakeman wanted Mr. Skilton, when writing next to Mr. Spencer, to try and bring him around to recognize society before the individual, and Mr. Skilton promised he would do his best. Mr. Wakeman's idea is, first the cosmic world, then biology, then society, next ethics, and then the individual. He said this order was accepted by most of the scientists of Europe and America, except the Spencerian school.

If one man prays for rain and another for dry weather, and it rains, the one considers his prayer answered and talks about it in prayer-meeting, while the other claps his hands and shouts, Amen! having entirely forgotten his own prayer which was not answered.

Letters of Friends.

It Is a Civilizer.

SIDNAW, MICH., Dec. 24, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $3, for which send me the best paper published on this earth. I hav been reading THE TRUTH SEEKER for about a year and a half, and I find it a civilizer.

Yours for truth and liberty,
ISADORE CARON.

It Grows Better Every Year.

Dec 26, 293.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3 for the paper for another year. I hav taken it fourteen years. It grows better every year. We cannot do without it. My wife joins me in wishing you and THE TRUTH SEEKER family success the coming year.

Yours for reason, right, and truth,
E. H. GAULT.

One More Gathered Into the Fold.

ONEIDA, WASH., Dec. 14, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little late in paying up my subscription, but I hav been trying to get a new subscriber for you, and hav at last succeeded in obtaining one. Inclosed please find $5 in payment for my subscription and for one new subscription.

Wishing you success, I remain,
Yours truly, MISS E. G. NELSON.

Another Greeting for Our New-Old Man.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Dec. 17, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $3 for one year's subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER, in continuation.

Please present my compliments to Mr. G. E. Macdonald and wife. I am still sorry that they left San Francisco, but I wish them every kind of prosperity in New York or elsewhere. F. B. PERKINS.

Norwegian Freethinkers Want "Rodhuggeren."

CROOKSTON, MINN., Dec. 28, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $3 for one year's subscription. Two months ago Torkel Oftelie and myself started a radical People's party paper, printed in the Norwegian language. As THE TRUTH SEEKER might suppose, the paper is just as open to the Infidel as to the preacher.

OLE E. HAGEN.

Did Not Say What Route They Would Take.

GOLDTHWAITE, TEX., Dec. 18, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $3 for THE TRUTH SEEKER for another year.

I went to the Methodist church last night to hear the minister hold forth. He said a good many people around here are going to hell, but he failed to tell us who they were and which way they would hav to go to get there. W. C. CARSWELL.

Hard Up for a Baptismal Font.

WARRENSBURG, MO., Dec. 30, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: I herewith send $3 for renewal of subscription. Times are hard and water scarce. We had to resort to a lime slack tub to baptize a negro in yesterday just before the sheriff sprung the trap to launch a good Christian into heaven. He went the usual route of all murderers. Long liv Heston and THE TRUTH SEEKER.

O. D. WILLIAMS.

Do Not Like Prayer Tests.

HUMBOLDT, IOWA, Dec. 29, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find order for $3.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER and two copies "Crimes of Preachers."

I often challenge the preachers and other Christians to get down and pray for any one thing and see if they can get their prayer answered. They dare not pick up the glove. B. C. PARSONS.

We Do Not Know of Any.

MODESTO, CAL., Dec. 25, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $5 to renew my subscription and for one new subscriber. I would not be without it under any circumstances.

I would like to ask through your paper if there are any Bible believers among the astronomers of the present day. I do not see how there can be.

I sent Mr. Putnam $5 for one copy of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought."

Yours truly, E. H. BEMIS.

A Lover of Burns and Ross.

VILLAGE GROVE, COL., Dec. 16, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: I am glad I am alive yet, to thank the Truth Seeker Company for the good work they are doing in the world. Mr. Heston with the pictures is doing more than one man.

I will inclose $4.75 for another year for THE TRUTH SEEKER and two books, W. Stewart Ross's "Janet Smith" and "Lays of Romance." I like his style and his books. My prayer-book is Robert Burns's "Poems." He was the greatest poet that ever lived on earth.

DONALD MCDONALD.

Cannot Afford to Miss a Number.

LA HOYT, IA., Dec. 26, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: Send me a copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER of December 2d, for mine failed to reach me, and I can't miss a number. We had Remsburg to giv us two lectures in Mount Pleasant last July, and if we can raise the money we want Franklin Steiner one week, sometime in the future. Away with the clergy, who are ever ready to trade promises of a happy life after the people are dead for this world's goods.

Yours for Freethought and liberty,
E. E. WHITE.

But Not All Who Bow Believe.

KENTON, O , Dec. 26, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: Please send the paper for another year. I like it very much. It would be impossible for me to do without it. I hav been reading it for eighteen years. I think it has no equal in bringing truth and light into the world. Please find inclosed $5 for the last and the coming year.

I am living in a Christian community surrounded by churches. Revivals are being held everywhere. And I believe that any person who goes to church and bows down at the altar is in the first stage of insanity. JOHN SCHWEMER.

He Means to Open the Eyes of the Blind.

OTO, IA., Dec. 22, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find draft for $6 for the accompanying list of books. I still keep the light shining.

I took a trip to the World's Fair, but not in time to take in the Freethought Congress. Was back to my old home after being away twenty-eight years. The people seemed to hav gone back instead of forward. So I thought I would throw a a few firebrands into their midst by sending a few of your books. I would recommend that every Liberal when he renews order some new books to help keep the cause alive. Yours for truth,

S. R. DAY.

Expects to Soon Lay Down His Staff.

OGDEN, UTAH, Dec. 23, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $5 for the paper for the coming year.

I am truly sorry that I cannot order and distribute more Freethought and Spiritual publications. The Ogden people are wholly absorbed in orthodoxy and politics, while our Freethought people and Spiritualists are lost in the crowd and generally divided between the two thieves of the people's rights, Republicans and Democrats.

My subscription cannot last much longer; last Sunday completed eighty-two years of life, and the frosts of winter hav whitened my locks, and, though I am yet well and activ, I am looking for the day when I shall be called over to meet our dear old friend D. M. Bennett; and I will look for him, too. JOHN A. JOST.

A New Year's Offering for Which He Gets Value Received.

LOTUS, CAL., Dec. 19, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: The near approach of another new year reminds me of a duty that rests upon me—viz., to contribute my yearly mite for the purpose of keeping the glorious flag of liberty afloat above the cross, and to discharge the said duty I inclose herewith a money order for $12.50, which you will apply as follows: Hand $5 over to friend Putnam to pay for a copy of his forthcoming book, "Four Hundred Years of Freethought;" then apply $3 on subscription to the best of all papers, THE TRUTH SEEKER, and for the remainder send books as per inclosed list. I am satisfied that Putnam's book will be well worth $5, and so will not take advantage of your offer of it and the paper for $6.50.

Yours as ever, G. W. RAMSEY.

A Weapon Dangerous to Superstition and Intolerance.

GLENN'S FERRY, IDAHO, Dec 29, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: Please find $1 for six copies of "Self-Contradictions of the Bible." The Christians, or Bible teachers, are dishonest. They quote different passages of the Bible to support certain doctrins. They do not quote the Bible to show or make evident what the Bible teaches; to prove or disprove the same proposition. They dare not be honest in this; if they did, they would explode a mine, which would be self-destructiv. The Bible makes God everything and nothing.

This little book puts the parallel passages on both sides of this God's character as uttered by himself, and is the artillery which annihilates all who dare attempt to array God as a host or power. All it needs to make Liberals is to be well informed, and especially on Bible contradictions; speak out courageously, circulate Liberal papers and Liberal books.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is a two-edged sword with a fearful point. It cuts both ways, and the thrust is deadly. Long may it liv and everywhere may it go.

JAMES STOUT.

That Wretched Attempt to Belie the Dead Bradlaugh.

VERA CRUZ, MO., Dec. 9, 1893

MR. EDITOR: I say all praises to the woman who has courage enough to defend the steadfastness and goodness of a deceased father against the calumnies of church bigotry. Charles Bradlaugh has been dead about long enough to make the mouths of church liars begin to water. The good deeds in life and record of nobility he left to mark the time in which he lived with beauty and truth must be overshadowed with saintly lies to keep his record from going to posterity in its true light. Every good deed and word from a true and noble man must hav a church falsehood on top of it for believers to nurse. Like those who lived in the time of Voltaire, Paine, and others, and could not meet the sledge-hammer blows of argument struck by such intellectual giants during life, the two pious venders of slush to the faithful in England hav in their eagerness to outstrip what they call Infidelity gone beyond the bounds of decency and truth and forced the relations and friends of the dead to the sad duty of defending the truth against the aggressiv falsehoods of Christian champions. S. B. DAVIS.

Advice that "Sammy" Wants to Take.

EAST ROCHESTER, O., Dec. 21, 293.

MR. EDITOR: As my subscription has about expired, and as the old TRUTH SEEKER and I hav been good friends for the last twenty years, I cannot make up my mind to say "Stop the paper." Therefore I inclose money order for $3.25, the 25 cents for "Crimes of Preachers."

The cause of Freethought is gradually on the increase. I take notice that the masses of the people do not talk the same as they did a few years ago. When I began to defend our cause I could get up a breeze any time and at all times, but now the most rigidly righteous say they do not wish to advertise Infidelity, and then they walk away.

One word politically: I hav been waiting for the last fifteen years to get a chance to vote a Freethought ticket, and hav failed; hav now identified myself with the Populist party, and there I expect to stay until something better comes along.

A word to Sammy: Don't work too hard on that new book. Remember Bennett; take lots of recreation; it won't hurt to wait a little while, and we all can afford to do it. I know that a man of the nervous, fidgety make-up that he has cannot confine himself so closely and do justice to himself. Go slow, Sammy; take lots of play.

ENOCH WICKERSHAM.

Moses, Ezra, and the Pentateuch.

COPPERAS COVE, TEX., Dec. 16, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed I send you money order for $3 to pay my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER. If you knew how hard I hav got to hustle to pay for it for this year you would hav an idea in what estimation I hold it. I also would ask your excuse for being behind time, which I hope will never happen again.

In Draper's "History of the Conflict Between Science and Religion," page 221, it is stated that we are told by Ezra (Esdras ii., 14) that he (Ezra) by the aid of five others wrote the Pentateuch in forty days. I hav looked through the book of Ezra in one of the A. B. S. Bibles, and I cannot find any such or similar statement in it. Could you explain where I can find said statement of which Draper speaks?

ARTHUR SCHUBERT.

[There are four books ascribed to Ezra (Grecized into Esdras). Of these are Ezra and Nehemiah in the authorized English version. In the Vulgate and the Thirty-nine Articles of the Anglican church they are called the first and second books of Esdras, and the apocryphal books, now commonly known as first and second of Esdras, are there called third and fourth of Esdras. Draper's printer made the reference read to the second chapter and fourteenth verse of Esdras, when it should hav been to II. Esdras, fourteenth chapter and thirty-ninth verse. But the entire chapter should be read in connection. See the Apocryphal Old Testament.—ED. T. S.]

The "Young Man" Gets Great Praise.

CORRECTIONVILLE, IOWA, Dec. 24, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: I hav never written you (except for a renewal of my subscription) before, so I thought I would say that I remember seeing you about the first day of last October, also several others who seemed to me to hav some marks of intelligence about them. We hav had one of those specimens with us during the last few days, by name Franklin Steiner, who gave us four lectures in our Opera House. By the way, he seemed to awaken considerable interest in our "church circles," and caused more Bible reading since he was here than has been done before in one year. One of Mr. Steiner's lectures, "The Great Religious Conspiracy Against the Republic," so enraged one of our "sky pilots" of the "water-mark persuasion," who has the "enviable reputation" of being a "converted Jew," that he rose by invitation of Mr. Steiner at the close of the lecture, to answer some of his "wishy-washy" remarks. He said there was nothing said that amounted to anything, but before he got through with his remarks, he said he agreed with the "young man" in a great deal that he had said, and gave notice to the audience that he would answer the lecture on the following Monday night, when he knew that the lecturer would be gone. He made some uncalled-for remarks, such as calling him a "traitor to his country." But when he got through speaking, which was inside of twenty minutes, Mr. Steiner answered his attacks very satisfactorily to all present. On the whole, we think the reverend gentleman is quite willing to let the "young man" alone.

We hav had as lecturers in the last few years, Professor Jamieson, J. E. Remsburg, and Mrs. Judge Krekel, but we think Professor Steiner has caused more commotion among the sanctified than any one of the others. He givs evidence of being a young man who has been a great student of history, and he is quite a polished orator. Fraternally yours,

A. H. PETTY.

Scientific Education for the Masses.

LEAVENWORTH, KAN., Dec. 15, 1893.

MR EDITOR: In a former communication I promised that if you were so kind as to refrain from consigning it to the oblivion of the wastebasket, I would write again, but I hav been waiting for the "spirit" to move me. I think it must hav been traveling on a way-freight; but it has come and gone, and so has Grover's Thanksgiving day, and we hav eaten our turkey and mince pie, and been duly thankful to—U. S.—for it, and our chaplains hav given thanks to God in our behalf (they get paid for giving thanks and we don't) for all the blessing and calamities which hav been showered down upon us during the year.

THE TRUTH SEEKER should appear on our library table regularly, but sometimes it is only conspicuous by its absence

Whether it is stolen and suppressed by some pious person, or jayhawked by some graceless Infidel, who wants to hav it all to himself, I cannot say. I think the chances are about even.

In my fertil brain I hav originated a scheme, or plan, of work, which I expect to get in operation about the first of March next, or as soon as I can get ready for it, and I will describe it, so that perhaps some Liberal brother may go and do likewise. By that time, I will hav a series of lectures prepared (two of them are already finished and type-written) on biology and psychology, beginning with the protozoa and tracing life and mind from the speck of protoplasm to man. I will also hav a naturalist's microscope to illustrate the wonders of cell and insect life, and last, but not least, I will hav a small library of Liberal and scientific books to "let out" to those who are not able or do not wish to buy. The lectures will be free, but for exhibits with the microscope, and for the use of books, I will charge a small fee. I will sell the books whenever I can do so. The lectures will be in plain language, that the common people can understand, and the books also will be of those written for the people rather than the scientists.

My plan is educational rather than controversial, and I will not provoke opposition unnecessarily. I will hav a few religious books and novels for those who cannot appreciate anything else.

The main point which I keep in view all the time in my lectures is to prove conclusivly that man is a unity and not a duality. If man has no immaterial soul, he needs no immaterial religion to save it. I will go into country neighborhoods or small towns, where I can lecture in the schoolhouse, get a boarding place where I can hav a room for my books and microscope views, and stay a week or two, or as long as it pays.

When I find a place where there is enough raw material, I will persuade them to organize a permanent "Secular Library Association" for the advancement of knowledge. Now, you hav the outlines of my scheme. I hav not applied for a patent, and it is open for criticisms in the shape of additions or amendments. After I hav tried it, I will let the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know how it "pans out."

The Kind of Work That Tells.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., Dec. 27, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: Within find names and addresses of four new subscribers, to whom please send THE TRUTH SEEKER and books mentioned. This entitles me to Mr. Putnam's book, "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." So, please, put me down as good for one, and do not omit to hav my name enrolled on its pages. Financially, I was unable to subscribe for same at present, but your liberal offer was the keynote in finding a way of securing it. Thanks to my little missionary work with my books, which are always "on the go," as also by continually having my paper on the desk at office for the benefit of anyone who wishes to read it, and by placing them on the seats of the cars on our line with my name on the rim, so that passengers may know where to find this ungodly man, I hav made new acquaintances and succeeded in securing these new subscribers. As I was willing to pay something for the book, and also determined to secure new subscribers, I concluded to giv the paper and the books for less than you even offer, and making good the difference myself; but I am satisfied that after my friends hav tasted of this healthy brain-food for a while, they will admit having been rewarded tenfold for their little outay, and will renew their subscriptions at the expiration of their present term without looking for a reduction or premiums. I am in hopes of sending more subscribers later on who cannot very well subscribe just now, owing to lack of work and scarcity of the almighties; in the meantime they are welcome to my paper until they can secure it for themselvs.

I hav about fifty more TRUTH SEEKERS on hand—those of '93—which will be distributed within the next four months. For a long time I was in the habit of saving them, but, although I do not like very much to part with them, I long ago concluded to distribute them and enlighten others. If you hav any papers or tracts for distribution, please send some and I will make good use of them; I am satisfied there are thousands of Freethinkers right here in this city, and yet, I am sorry to say, we cannot boast of a Freethought society. But some day, and that very soon, I hope, our silent brothers will arouse, organize and act, unless they are willing to be governed by priests and preachers, pious legislators, and aldermen and fanatical Sunday-law cranks.

ERWIN AUFFURTH.

P.S.—I wrote above lines this morning, and am just taking up the Evening States to see what the city council has been doing at last night's session, and behold! the very first announcement is this:

The ordinance prohibiting the belting and switching of cars on St. Claude street, between Washington avenue and Press street, between the hours of 10 A.M. and 1 P.M. on Sundays was passed.

Holy Moses in the bulrushes! how will all this end? I understand there is a building on that street where the goody-goody people assemble on that day and during those hours mentioned above to offer their prayer to the great unknowable "I am," who is nowhere to be found; and, so as not to disturb these worshipers of superstition, traffic and commerce must be stopped. No doubt these Christian alderman(iacs) saw that planet "Venus" yesterday in broad daylight and, believing it to be the star of Bethlehem, predicting the second coming of Christ (by the way, where is the proof of the first coming of Christ?), they wished to be on the safe side, and will probably pass some more laws of a similar nature while awaiting his arrival. Only for the inconvenience these goody-goody people would suffer, they would hav an ordinance passed next prohibiting the running of electric and horse-cars on Sundays; but as for above reasons they may not interfere with the running of the cars, there is no telling how soon they will demand that the ringing of the gong and the bell be prohibited on Sundays. The loss of a few human lives, which may occur owing to the suspension of these signals of danger, does not amount to a row of pins in the eyes of these wise and pious people.

The "Old," the "Middle," and the "New" Astronomy.

NEW YORK, Jan. 1, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: The scholarly and genial Thaddeus B. Wakeman, at the Science Sermons Society in this city, Sunday evening, December 31st, delivered one of the grandest generalizations on the subject of Astronomy to which I hav ever listened. This gentleman's astronomy is up to date quite as much as his theology. Astronomy is a subject to which attaches greater interest, perhaps, than to any of the other sciences, because it is the oldest or one of the oldest of the sciences, and it deals with that part of the universe in which the Christian mythology places their heaven, with its mansions and golden streets, and their hell, as far as I know, which likewise supplies an indispensable wing of the Christian system of theology. So when astronomers turn their telescopes and spectroscopes on the regions in which these places of such unusual human interest are supposed to be located, and do not find them, it makes things very lively for the church, at least for those who tell of these wonderful celestial phenomena with great emphasis, but who in reality know no more what they say than the veriest babe that never looked through a telescope.

Briefly, the lecturer said that the "old astronomy," previous to 1600, depended upon the eye, and it was taught that the multitude of heavenly bodies were created and placed in the skies From 1600 to 1800 he called the period of the "middle astronomy." The astronomers of the middle period depended upon the telescope and evolved the nebular hypothesis, which astronomers of later times claim to be mere theory, without any facts to substantiate it. Consequently, it appears that the nebular hypothesis is being rejected.

The most interesting portion of his address, which contained a twenty-weeks' college course condensed into an hour and a half, covered what is being termed the "new astronomy," that dates from about 1860 up to the present time, and was ushered in by the discovery of the spectroscope. The spectroscope is a little instrument by which the ray of light coming from any star is separated into its component parts, and the real character of the substance emitting the light is determined. So, instead of working on mere suppositions, as in the past, astronomers now seek one or more facts upon which to base an hypothesis.

In the place of the theories of creation and the nebular hypothesis. there is now being substituted what is known as the "aggregation hypothesis" This hypothesis hangs on the possibility of our sun and other suns in the universe being fed by comets and meteors passing near the sun and being drawn into it by the attraction of gravity. His conclusion was that the heat and light of the sun would not die out for millions of years, if ever, because, according to that theory, the universe is the "feeding ground" of the sun.

Mr. Wakeman mentioned that ether is a colorless substance, not matter, and may arise from the decomposition of atoms. If I understood him aright, radiation from the sun and other flaming bodies produces ether, which, in the course of time, returns to matter and may be sifted upon the earth or other body, as it is estimated that five hundred thousand tons of matter yearly fall upon the earth. Mr. Wakeman is a most excellent medium between the ones who make original investigations and evolve astronomical theories and those who are less well informed.

If one wishes to be up to date in theology and astronomy, and not remain clinging to exploded theories, he should embrace every opportunity possible for hearing this lecturer. That he is idolized by those accustomed to hearing him was clearly shown at the Manhattan Liberal Club last Friday evening, when Mr. Wakeman was pronouncing one of his favorite benedictions. A gentleman, apparently a stranger, arose and wanted to ask a question. Mr Wakeman asked if it was allowable to ask questions during benediction, which was answered by the renewed applause each time the stranger tried to state his question, and he was finally obliged to be seated without stating his objection to Mr. Wakeman's remarks. Some Signs That Are Truly Astonishing.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN., Dec. 25, E.M. 293.

MR. EDITOR: About three years ago I listened to a "Professor" of Astrology. He was before an audience of Spiritualists in Portland, Ore., and seemed to hav many believers. But to convince the skeptics, he quoted Gen. i. 14. "And God said, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven, to divide the day from the night: and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days and for years." Then the professor asked: "What did God mean when he said these heavenly bodies that are lights in the firmament of the heaven were to be for signs, and for seasons, if there were no signs in the sun, moon, or stars? What was the use of such signs if they could not be read and understood by men?" Then he got excited and shouted at the top of his voice; and with tremendous gestures he said, "There are such signs and they are understood." He continued to shout and affirm with no other proof that he "knew there were such signs." Well, as strange and unreasonable as it may seem, it only confirmed me in my skepticism regarding astrology. So I replied the next Sunday in substance that in Isaiah vii, 10, 11—'moreover the Lord spake again to Ahaz, saying, Ask thee a sign of the Lord thy God. Ask it either in the depth or in the hight above." "Now, what does this mean?" as our Christian friend would ask after quoting something from the Bible. It seems to prove that there were people who believed in signs in the depth below—I don't know whether it was at the bottom of the ocean or the deepest places under ground man had been—as well as others who had faith in signs in the hight. While I must confess ignorance to what those signs were, it seems to me those in the depth below would be as valuable as those in the hight.

Ahaz was a good man and would not tempt the Lord. Could he? But the Lord his God gave Ahaz a sign and Isaiah prophesied that a virgin should conceive and bear a son; that the son should eat butter and honey; that he should know to refuse the evil and choose the good, and before the child should complete his education in that way "the land thou [Ahaz] abhorrest shall be forsaken of both her kings." This is called a prophecy by one of the major prophets. It is claimed by Christians to be a foretelling of the coming of Jesus Christ. As near as my memory serves, Thomas Paine proves that it was an attempt to inspire Ahaz with confidence to do battle, well knowing that if Ahaz was defeated or killed there would be no one to expose the pious imposition, and if Ahaz succeeded then he would herald Isaiah as a great or major prophet. So Ahaz went to war with the king of Syria and the king of Israel, and the result was (according to 2 Chron. xxviii) that Ahaz was defeated and dethroned. A hundred and twenty thousand of his people destroyed, Jerusalem was plundered, and two hundred thousand women, sons, and daughters carried into captivity. That proved the falsehood of the prophet or the sign, whether it was in the heaven above or on the earth beneath or the waters under the earth. Matt. xxiv, 30, 34, says: "And then shall appear the sign of the son of man in heaven and then shall all of the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." · · · "Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass till all of these things be fulfilled." And although that language is ascribed to Christ, whom the Trinitarians regard as God, yet it has never been fulfilled, and either Christ is a liar or he was mistaken, mentally deranged, or else he did not say those words. That was another sign that failed. Perhaps it was a dry time. All signs fail in a dry time, I hav heard said. Many generations hav come since that prophecy is said to hav been made. Will someone tell what that sign was and whether it was seen in the heaven? Matt. xii, 38-40: "Then certain of the scribes and of the Pharisees answered, saying, Master, we would see a sign from thee. But he answered and said unto them, An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas. For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." And that sign failed if we hav a correct account of Christ's body, put in Joseph's tomb on Friday evening and was out of there Sunday morning "early while it was yet dark or at the rising of the sun." So it was there only two nights and one day. You see this sign was in the depth beneath and not a star sign Matt. ii, 1, 2: "Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem, saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we hav seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him. · · · Then Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, inquired of them diligently what time the star had appeared. And he sent them to Bethlehem, and said, Go and search diligently for the young child. · · · When they had heard the king they departed; and lo, the star, which they saw in the east, went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was. When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy." This may seem like wisdom to many, but it proves to me that there is ignorance as great now as there was when the last quotation was written. There was a star sign, but who can conceive anyone so foolish as to follow a star; or how could they when light traveling so fast that it would come from the sun to us in eight minutes requires one year and a half for it to come from the nearest fixed star? So that the star seems fixed except for the revolution of the earth which makes it appear to go around the earth. Who but an idiot would try to keep up with the apparent motion of either the sun, moon, or stars? How could a star stop over where anybody's baby was born? Such folly as this confutes itself. I hav good reason to believe such professors and wise men do not know as much as children of fourteen in the first class in astronomy in any of our high schools.

A Little Girl's Recipe.

I don't see why the big folks, all
Need go to cooking school,
For it's easy enough to make a cake,
If you make it by this rule:

First, you must hav an apron
That you're not afraid to hurt,
For in this recipe we use,
For flour, sifted dirt.

Then dig, with an iron spoon,
A hole in the cool dark ground,
And put in dirt and water,
Stirring it round and round,

And then a handful of pebbles
You'd better put in the dough,
What are these for? In this recipe,
Pebbles are raisins, you know.

And when you get it all thick enough
You make it into a cake,
Then put it on a nice, clean board
And set in the sun to bake.

Dear me! I'd most forgot to say
You must sprinkle with sugar (or sand).
And when they're done, no better cakes
Will be found in Babyland.

That's all! You see, to learn to cook
You don't need to make a fuss.
Though mamma says, when she comes to the door,
"Why Bessie, child! What a muss!"

Our Duty Toward One Another.

CONCLUDED

How these quarrels between them disgust one. You never hear the end of them. Why? Because those who could make the advancements which would cause harmony will not do so, and because those who can get advancements made to them will refuse them unless they get everything and leave the others nothing. What an absurdity! you exclaim. Decidedly Absurdity is no name for it. But Menander reminds us:

No good in life the race of man can see,
Spring from one root as branches from the tree;
But near the good, we find the evil still,
And frequent good arises out of ill.

While Theocritus kindly counsels the discouraged with:

Yet courage, friend! to-morrow fortune's ray
May shine with comfort, though it lowers to-day;
Hope to the living, not the dead, remains;
And the soft season brightens after rains.

Some dav we may hope for the conciliation between what are known as the "upper and lower classes," and until it comes those who would help each other and be humanitarians can always find a lesson to learn in the way of being kind, good, and unselfish.

It is sad, but nevertheless true, there are many who would sooner die than liv their "allotted time." The reasons why are many, and it would be useless to name them here. Paul Carus says: "Life is worth living, if but the aim of life is high enough to giv value to the work of life." Quite true. Our duty, then, is to see that "the aim of life is high." To show, in the words of Aristophanes, that Evil events from evil causes spring;

And what you suffer flows from what you've done.

To see that our fellow-beings are free from pain and sorrow. "To sow and scatter seeds of kindness." To watch and hope for the emancipation of the world from that cruel monster and master, selfishness. "Oh, if we but only knew the way!" We know the way. It is to be men — to be women. To cherish the liberty and rights of others as we would cherish our own. Ah, yes! to look upon the world with a kindly eye. Not to scold, but to encourage. Not to surrender hope, but to hope on—on to eternity, if it need be.

Hope, like the glimmering taper's light,
Adorns and cheers the way;
And still, as darker grows the night,
Emits a brighter ray. —Goldsmith.

The world is more willing to be reformed than we are willing to reform it. Let us set about it with a good will. To show the discontented that contentment awaits them. To show the man of work rest is for him, not in after life, but in this life. (What takes place after life will hav little effect upon us; we will be unconscious of it all.) To show the discouraged that their hopes are to be realized, and to giv happiness to all. We will not only show but giv. We hav no Utopian ideas which can never be. All that we want can be, and that only by the united efforts of a united people.

While saying be good to others, we must be good ourselvs. It would be a paradox to make others good when we are bad. This is one of the first lessons to learn—be good. "We cannot expect to be happy if we do not liv pure and useful lives," says Sir John Lubbock, and we can very well agree with him. In fact, it should be easy for us to liv good lives if we intend preaching to others to do the same. But how often is the preacher the opposit to what he is preaching? And how often is the sinner the saint, and the saint the sinner? are questions natural to the mind.

"Seek not to hav things as you choose them, but rather choose them to happen as they do, and so shall you liv prosperously," said Epictetus. Alas! philosophy has little to do with the actions and thoughts of people. If it did, how different would be to-day, and how different the to-morrow. The darkness, intellectual and ethical, we are groping in would be changed into a bright and glorious light, and philosophy, the sun, which would be unexcelled in grandeur, and which would put such warmth into us as would make our lives happy, and our surroundings cheerful, and our fellow-beings the happiest of mortals. Will that day ever come? Perhaps. Let us be full of hope and enthusiasm, for this is half the battle. Let us not dream, but act. And let us not grumble or fight with each other, but increase the harmony between us. Oh, for the time when an ideality will be a reality; and kindness, love, and happiness universal traits. We should also think that Mine honor is my life, both grow in one,

Take honor from me, and my life is done.
—Shakspere.

How can we be of use to our fellow-beings? In hundreds of ways. We may never be at a loss as to where kindness is wanted, where encouragement is needed, and where want is waiting to be filled. We can never be of any use to each other if we hav only egoistic feelings and principles. We must all be prompted by love of humanity. None are too bad, and none are too good as to be able to help those who may be bad. "The good man is not of necessity happy, but the happy man is of necessity good," exclaimed Archytas.

Now, the chief thing that is needed to bring all this and to make the people humanitarians, and to work for the benefit of the world, is education. It is only by education we may ever expect to do anything. It is only by education that we expect to accomplish what we want. Whatever way a person is taught, that is the way they go. It is a lack of education that generally makes reforms and new ideas so unpopular at first. When they become familiar and a part of the people's daily life, they incline favorably toward them. Half of the trouble that afflicts the human race is due to lack of knowledge, and what is that but want of education? Where you see education more in vogue than anywhere else, there you will find the better place, there you will find more happiness, more progress and civilization. Educate the people, if they will not educate themselvs, not by coercion, but by gentle persuasion.

Deep wrapt in error is the human mind,
And human bliss is ever insecure,
Know ye what fortunes yet remain behind?
Know ye how long the present will endure?
—Pindar.

Correspondence.

COOPERSTOWN, N. DAK., Dec. 14, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my first letter to the Corner. I enjoy reading the Corner very much, and I am nine years old. I go to school, and I study reading, writing, spelling, arithmetic, geography, and philology, and I hav one brother and three sisters. I liv in North Dakota on a farm, and we hav very cold winters here, but we hav lots of fun coasting and sliding on snow shoes. Father takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, and he thinks there is no paper like it. I hope my letter wont find the waste basket. JAY KUHNS.

PORT TOWNSEND, WASH., Dec. 16, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON AND CORNER: A few weeks ago I received a sample copy of the Independent Pulpit, and hope some time to subscribe for it. My friend Annie Barthrop and I hav read it over and over again until the leaves begin to come out, and so hav to keep it together with a pin. I get the Freethinkers' Magazine every month, and enjoy reading it very much; and in volume XI. I found a good proof that there is no God.

Annie and I are the only Freethinkers in our class at school; but we know that the smartest men and women in our city are Freethinkers.

I hav read "The Story Hour," "Apples of Gold," and many other books on Freethought.

Wishing you all a Happy New Year, I remain your Freethinker friend,

LOUISA IFFLAND.

[Annie and Louisa are numbered with the jewels of the Corner.—ED. C. C.]

PETERSBURG, IND., Dec. 7, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Some boys were pushing a car that stood on a switch. It went slow at first, for the track was level. Soon it went down grade and began to go fast. Another boy below tried to put a rail on the track to stop it, but the rail hit him and broke his leg, and the car ran to the end of the switch, and, after breaking a wagon, it fell off the bank and broke in pieces. I think this is like the church: some people bothered with what did not belong to them, and it is now going down grade and will soon be breaking honest people's necks. It is easy to walk along with one's hands on the car while it is going, but to start it at first, or to start it back where it belongs, takes brave work.

I am fourteen years old; go to school, and study reading, spelling, geography, grammar, arithmetic, and history. We hav to learn a declamation and write a composition every month. I want to learn to write stories and help others to start right. Every girl wants to be good sometimes, and when I see a soft little chicken I just want to hug and kiss it. And oh! how nice it makes me feel when I hav tried to please anyone and am praised for it. My Sunday-school teacher tells me it is Jesus who causes all this, but I think little girls thousands of years ago felt the same way. And I don't think it is right for big, fat preachers to claim all that is beautiful in the world and say it is Christ.

My mother died when I was nine months old, and I hav one sister. Papa is an Infidel. My sister and I keep house. At school my general average last month was 93, while Mary's was 98.

I like the funny pictures in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I read the Children's Corner. Papa takes the Independent Pulpit, Freethinker, Little Freethinker, and Ironclad Age. We used to take the Open Court.

I hav no pets, because I could not take care of them.

This is so long maybe you won't print it, and if you don't I will write a shorter letter next time. I am going to try to get some other girls to write to you.

Your friend, ESTELLA WEAVER.

[The writer of the above has sensible ideas. She is a good reasoner, and no doubt will make her mark in the world. Estella's letters will be always welcome.—ED. C. C.]

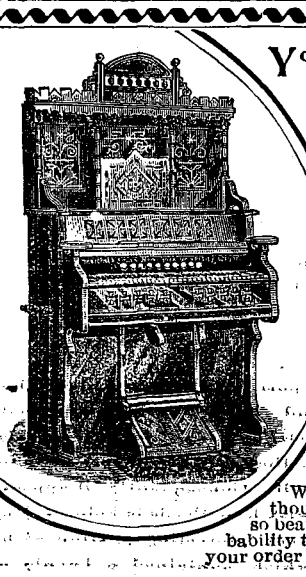
ARCH BEACH, CAL., Dec. 12, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I steal a moment from this busy day to hav a chat with you and the Cornerites. Alas! I only wish it was a real "chat," and not a make-believe one. How delightful it would be for me to slip in and call on you among your books, magazines, letters, mucilage bottles, and other editorial accompaniments for a few minutes. It would no doubt bother you, but then how pleasant for me, you know. After returning to the dear, quiet, humdrum little home, what a picture and what a kind, gentle voice to remember!

But as that cannot be, let me tell some of the Corner friends about the place where I liv. Away out here in the southern part of California, about sixty miles from Los Angeles city, you will find it on the map. Half a mile from the ocean, nestled up among the hills and surrounded by trees—eucalyptus, willow, and sycamore—is our house. We are ordinary country people, advanced inasmuch as we are stanch Freethinkers, whose library is mostly comprised of Liberal books and papers. Our farm is small, but we raise all kinds of vegetables, and hav fruit and nuts. Apples, figs, olivs, walnuts, and almonds are our chief resources. Horses and cattle feed in our pastures and chickens in our barnyard.

With pleasant surroundings and a comfortable dwelling, I think farmers are the most independent of people. Of course, in a dull year, as the last has been, farmers, like everybody else, suffer. But there is no bankruptcy and ruin, such as many city merchants hav to endure.

I hav not many Liberal friends here with whom to exchange opinions verbally; such are few and far between, so I would like to hav some Liberal girl or boy, between the ages of sixteen and twenty, write to me. Sometimes I get lonely, having to choke back my thoughts for fear of offending some Christian friend by speaking out. But I assure you I'm not generally very considerate, for I love to confound believers, though one person gets no sympathy unless he has Liberal friends, and is only laughed at for his outspokenness. So far out of the world one cannot do much for the cause, especially if their funds are not large, even though their good-will be plentiful. But we can read the wholesome literature of the day; that hav I been doing this evening, and the table is literally strewn with TRUTH SEEKERS and the grand, educating, elevating books it advertises. And the New Testament lying near me looks sadly out of place. I hav been reading in it—like the good girl I am—but find within its covers nothing to compare with those other books. In fact—whisper it not in Gath—I hav been reading it simply to jot down the mistakes, absurdities, and contradictions in the gospel of Matthew.



But my letter must be getting tiresome. In closing I giv three cheers for the brave TRUTH SEEKER and finder, and long liv all our orators, lecturers, workers, and all good people. May the next Freethinkers' Congress be soon. Many kind regards and good wishes to yourself.

HARRIET E. THURSTON.

Pleasure and Progress.

AN ATTEMPT TO PROVE THAT

The Pursuit of Pleasure is the Sine Qua Non of Intellectual, Moral, and Social Development, and that The Promotion of Pleasure is the Duty of Philanthropy and Statesmanship.

By Albert M. Lorentz, LL.B.

CONTENTS:

Book I.—Pleasure: Chap. I.—Sources of Pleasure. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures. Chap IV.—Social Pleasures. Chap. V.—Pleasures of the Savage, the Barbarian and the Civilized. Chap. VI.—Genesis of religions. Chap. VII.—Christianity.
Book II.—Intellectual Development: Chap. I.—Purpose of Life. Chap, II. Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures: Knowledge. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Reason. Chap.—V. Ideal Pleasures: Character. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Pedagogical Despotism.
Book III.—Moral Development: Chap. I.—Morality. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures: Prudence. Chap. III.—Material Pleasures: Refinement. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Foresight, Chap. V.—Ideal Pleasures: Civilization. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Vice Caused by Restraint.
Book IV.—Social Development: Chap. I.—Progress. Chap. II.—Protection, Capitalism, and Socialism: Respectively an Actual, an Imminent, and a Proposed Violation of Individual Sovereignty. Chap. III.—Condition of Agriculture. Chap. IV. Public Schools. the Mene, Mene, Tekel of Socialism. Chap. V.—Province of Government. Chap. VI.—Our Social Disorder.

Here are some of the verdicts on this remarkable production which have been rendered by men who are in every way qualified as judges of books:

This is a spirited, rattling sort of a book that skates right along over the deepest subject without much thought whether the ice is thin or not. It answers the greatest question—What is the use, object, motive, purpose, and summum bonum of life, and the real cause and motive of progress? —by one word, Pleasure!—Thaddeus B. Wakeman.

He sharply attacks, also, modern methods of education, and in this he is most abundantly borne out by the facts, and his arraignment is practically unanswerable. His book is altogether a curious and suggestive one.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The man who wrote this book knows how to write a book, and knows what he is writing about. There is not a padded sentence in the volume, not an attempt to fill up with words for lack of knowledge. The author deals hard blows at shams and falsehoods, and hard blows for realities and truth. We do not see how anyone can read this book and disagree with the leading propositions. The work is good; every chapter is worth reading. It is a work of common-sense Socialism. The chapter on public schools ought to be put into a tract and sent to every teacher in the land. Thousands of sentences are worthy of being framed as political maxims and hung up all over the nation. The book deserves a wide reading, not only for its literary style, which is clear and incisive, but for its bold, honest sayings.—L. K. Washburn.

Here we have philosophy up to date, the advance word of the progressive thinker; not a dry, abstruse discourse, but a common-sense essay in plain words upon the conduct of life, and all illustrated with such an abundance of anecdote and metaphor as add real entertainment to solid instruction. This is an important book striking at superstition and unreasonable tradition, and upholding individual liberty in defiance of governmental law and social custom. After reading this book one feels that the author will never be able to write another, for he has put all his life and knowledge into this one. Every page bristles with points; there is no padding or filling in, no mere literary embellishment; but clean-cut apothegms abound, and every line is dictated by hard-headed common-sense.—Capt. Robt. C. Adams.

After you read this book you will be as enthusiastic in praise of it as are the eloquent editor of the Investigator and the gallant President of the Canadian Secular Union,

"Pleasure and Progress" has 398 pages, is splendidly printed from large, clear type, on excellent paper, and costs, bound in cloth, $1; paper covers, 50 cents.

A most extraordinary publication. We venture the assertion that nothing like it has ever before appeared in this country, and it is very doubtful if another one like it will ever again be published. We must give the Truth Seeker Company the credit of putting the book in the reach of all. At twice the price it would have been a cheap book. Artist Heston as a portrait painter and designer is a wonderful success, and we judge from our own feelings that nearly every Liberal in America will desire a copy of this most wonderful volume.—[Freethinkers' Magazine.

Mr. Heston deserves to be called the artist-hero of Liberalism He has dedicated his genius to Freethought, and has done faithful and noble work for the cause of right and truth. But the pictures do not make up the whole of his volume There are nearly two hundred pages of reading matter that serve first as explanations of the illustrations, and secondly as texts to prove the utter falsity of the church's professions and the hypocrisy of those who uphold them. Altogether the book is one of the best weapons against Christianity and the church that has ever been put in the hands of Freethinkers.—[Boston Investigator.

JOHN E. REMSBURG'S WORKS.

Abraham Lincoln: Was He A Christian?

For fifteen years Mr. Remsburg has been collecting material for his work, He presents an array of testimony that is irresistible and overwhelming, and which must put this question at rest forever. In addition to the testimony of twenty witnesses who claim that Lincoln was a Christian, and which is reviewed and refuted, he adduces the testimony of more than a hundred witnesses in proof of the claim that Lincoln was not a Christian. These witnesses include his wife and other relatives; his three law partners; his private secretaries; members of his cabinet; his principal biographers, and scores of his most intimate friends.

False Claims. Revised and Enlarged

As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic. Price, 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by

Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Slavery; Witchcraft; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbatic Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of the Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies $1.

Image Breaker. Six Lectures:

Decline of Faith; Protestant Intolerance; Washington an Unbeliever; Jefferson an Unbeliever; Paine and Wesley; Christian Sabbath. Each 5 cents; bound, paper, 25 cents; per doz., 40 cents.

Thomas Paine. Tells the story of the Author-Hero's Life,

delineates the leading traits of his character and genius, and vindicates his name from the aspersions cast upon it. Choice extracts from "Common Sense," "American Crisis," "Rights of Man," and "Age of Reason," are given; also, tributes to Paine's character from more than one hundred noted persons of Europe and America, many of them written expressly for this work. Second edition, 160 pages, printed on fine tinted paper, neatly bound, and containing a handsome steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Remsburg's Book on Lincoln Now Ready.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN:

WAS HE A CHRISTIAN?

By John E. Remsburg.

One of the most noted controversies of the century has been waged over the question of Abraham Lincoln's religious belief. Soon after the remains of America's most illustrious son were laid to rest at Springfield, one of his biographers, Dr. Holland, put forward the claim that he was a Christian. The claim was promptly denied by the dead statesman's friends, but only to be renewed again, and again denied. And thus for a quarter of a century the question of Lincoln's belief has been tossed like a battledore from side to side.

For fifteen years Mr. Remsburg has been collecting material for his work. He presents an array of testimony that is irresistible and overwhelming, and which must put this question at rest forever. In addition to the testimony of twenty witnesses who claim that Lincoln was a Christian, and which is reviewed and refuted, he adduces the testimony of more than a hundred witnesses in proof of the claim that Lincoln was not a Christian. These witnesses include his wife and other relatives; his three law partners; his private secretaries; members of his cabinet; his principal biographers, and scores of his most intimate friends.

Just Out.—25 Cents.—Five Copies for $1.

A Liberal living in Michigan said once that he would give $25 a year to have the Crimes of Preachers recorded, as the frequent lapses of virtue of the ministers showed how little value Christianity possesses to make men moral.

We have just issued the Fourth Edition of the book doing this The additions for this new edition of the

"Crimes of Preachers"

shows nearly 400 cases of ministerial conduct. While those in previous editions show that within a few years about of one kind or another of criminal conduct. Most of the crimes are against women, for the fair sex are at once the weakness and the strength of the church—"the church" meaning of course the clergy.

Notwithstanding the many additional pages, we have kept the price the same, 25 cents. Send for a copy, and confound the churchmen. Show them just what sort of scamps are the clergy who have closed the World's Fair on Sunday, because it is so holy a day that to look upon machinery or paintings in this period is "immoral."

We believe that not only can good be done but money made by any Liberal who will canvass for our book "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated." In fact we know one man who worked at it but a few hours weekly and sold nearly fifty copies in a month. The price is low; everybody knows the Old Testament stories, and nearly everybody would like a book applying nineteenth-century wit and knowledge to them. People like to laugh. Reverence for the Old Testament tales has largely disappeared and jokes at the expense of Jonah and Joseph and Esau and Samson and David, and the other worthies of unsavory reputation, are keenly appreciated. It seems to us that the book will sell at sight. It does here in the store. Liberals out of employment will find this a good way to make an honest dollar.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A Nineteenth Century Novel.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with a little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroine. The narrative is, in the main, a history of a working-girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business-men, kind-hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. MRS. DASH: Oh, doctor, your sermons are so lovely! Dr. Dash: But, my dear madam, I always note that you go to sleep. Mrs. Dash: Yes; but I hav such lovely dreams!

SAID a colored evangelist: "How can dem Infidels say dere am no debbil? I knows dere's a debbil, case how, if dere was no debbil, could dey make his pickter so like 'im?"

SHE: Do you think Ward McAllister will be saved? He: I think not. She: Then just think how awful it will be for him to see the beggar Lazarus resting on the bosom of one of the Patriarchs.—Life.

A LEARNED but long-winded Scotch minister, being asked if he did not feel tired preaching such long sermons, replied: "Na, na, I'm no that tired," and added, "but losh me, hoo tired the folks are whiles."

WIFE: George, I wish you belonged to my church. The new minister is a man you would like. Husband: Not such a bigoted Methodist as the other, then, is he? Wife: No; he's very broad! He believes that Episcopalians, if they repent, can be saved.—Puck.

VISITOR: How beautifully still the children sit while you talk to them. Sunday-school Superintendent: Yes. I've got them pretty well trained. I told them right at the start that every time I caught a boy squirming around in his seat while I was making a speech I would talk ten minutes longer.—Indianapolis Journal.

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL teacher recently asked a member of her class what was charity. "Please, ma'am, giving away things what you don't want," was the immediate and unhesitating response. On another occasion the parable of the sower was briefly recorded thus: "A certain sower went forth to sow. And as he went he fell by the wayside, and the birds of the air came and devoured him." Probably the best definition ever given of faith was that by a schoolboy: "Believing things that ain't true."

DID Santa Claus bring little Reginald what he wanted?" asked the minister's wife, insinuatingly. "Naw," answered Reginald. "Why, that's too bad. What did he bring you?" "Oh, an old drum an' four new games an' a pair of skates an' a sled an' three story books an' a lot er things." "Why, Reggie, dear, what could you hav wanted besides all those things?" "I wanted a Shetland pony an' a pet monkey an' a bowie-knife an' a minister that wouldn't talk s' much on Sundays."—New York World.

"THE board will please remain after the congregation is dismissed," said the Rev. Mr. Harps. After the congregation had filed out the minister observed that a stranger still kept his seat. "Ah, my friend, did you wish to see me?" asked the good man. "Not particularly," replied the stranger. "Then, pardon me, why are you waiting?" "Because you asked me to stay." "I am sorry, but you are mistaken. I asked the board to remain." "Well, I am one of the bored."—London Freethinker.

As the caravan paused in the grateful shade of the oasis, they continued their discussion of comparativ theology. "No," declared the sheik with the long, white whiskers; "I cannot believe the Christian miracle of the loaves and fishes." The camel-driver with buff sandals sighed. "Thou hast never, seemingly," he observed, "partaken of oyster stew at one of their socials. It is a wondrous faith, verily!" Quaffing again of the sweet waters that sprang from the rock, they moved forward.—Puck.

AUNT KEZIAH, one of the pillars of the Scrogginstown church, came to spend the holidays with her lately-married niece in the city. She saw no signs of "other worldliness," so the other morning she began to investigate. "Emmeline," she said, severely, "ain't your husband a professor?" "Why, no, Aunt Keziah," answered Emmeline, who had forgotten about "professors of religion." "He's nothing but a lawyer." And now Aunt Keziah is going to leave her property to the missions of Central Jungleland.—New York World.

A RATHER laughable incident occurred in one of the churches in this place on Christmas eve. The teacher asked the children: "Who first learned of the birth of Christ?" A boy raised his hand, and the teacher said: "Who was it, my lad?" "The shepherds who were feeding their flocks by night." Just then a little girl raised both hands, and the teacher said: "Who was it, my little girl, who first learned of the birth of Christ?" "Mary." This was a correct answer, but the girl did not know or see the point she had made.—Wm. Hart.

Gems of Thought.

THERE are quite enough actualities in this life to keep any good man busy without his wasting a single day upon fruitless mysteries.—Galveston News.

EACH grasps what he can, and in this hell scramble, because no steel knives are used, he calls it Peace, because far cunninger implements are used.—Carlyle.

MAN'S sense of justice is itself largely a matter of teaching. Things were considered right a thousand years ago that are to us palpably wrong to-day. A thousand years hence the ideas of justice and right which we entertain to-day may be nothing better than second-hand laughing stock.—Galveston News.

RELIGIONS themselvs are never new. Buckle declared that he who affirmed that Christianity contained any new teaching was guilty of either ignorance or fraud. If Buckle's life had been spared, he might hav been able to say that Christianity lived in its earliest days because it absorbed Eastern ideas, and that it livs now because it adopts secular methods.—Turneaux Jordan.

ANTI-RATIONALISM would be the most appropriate name for a mania which has spread the hue and cry of the Judenhetze all over Eastern Europe, and for its abatement not only school-teachers, but reformers of a daring and aggressiv type, hav to precede the legislator. The free thought of Hume prepared the way for the free worship of the British Israelites. The fact that the skeptic Voltaire could achieve fame and wealth and die in an apotheosis of popular applause has helped the cause of the French Jew more than the Code Napoleon.—Felix L. Oswald.

WE will speak out, we will he heard
Though all earth's systems crack;
We will not bate a single word,
Nor take a letter back.

We speak the truth, and what care we
For hissing and for scorn,
While some faint gleamings we can see
Of freedom's coming morn.

Let liars fear; let cowards shrink;
Let traitors turn away;
Whate'er we've dared to think,
That dare we also say. —Lowell.

A MONK kneeling in his cell prayed long and earnestly that God would watch over all his children on that night of tempestuous storm; that those who were hungry might be fed, and those who were shelterless might be housed. All night long he prayed, his bare knees on the sharp stones, the wind outside blowing a fierce hurricane. A wanderer came and knocked at the monk's cell, knocked till he was weary, till his strength gave way, and he fell prone at the threshold. In the morning he was dead. Thus the monk found nim. How could he hav heard faint knocking who prayed so long and loudly through those hours of the night?—J. D. Miller.

HEINE has a pregnant passage on this point. Referring to Joseph Schilling, who was "an apostate to his own thought," who "deserted the altar he had himself consecrated," and "returned to the crypts of the past," Heine rebukes the "old believers," who cried Kyrie eleison in honor of such a conversion. "That," he says, "proves nothing for their doctrin. It only proves that man turns to religion when he is old and fatigued, when his physical and mental force has left him, when he can no longer enjoy nor reason. So many Freethinkers are converted on their deathbeds. . . . But at least do not boast of them. These legendary conversions belong at best to pathology, and are a poor evidence for your cause. After all, they only prove this, that it was impossible for you to convert those Freethinkers while they were healthy in body and mind."—G. W. Foote.

WE must abandon the legend that revolutions are inspired by a popular passion for liberty. Revolutions are not made by the masses, but by the gentry. In the Congress that declared America independent of England nearly every member was a wealthy aristocrat, and the revolutionary leaders in France were of like social rank. The freedom fought for in such movements is not human or personal freedom, but freedom to exchange one master for another. When America threw off the yoke of England, its citizens were not quite so free as before; they were subjected to more rigid Sabbaths, their theaters were closed by act of Congress, and they were compelled to accept paper money for their goods. As individuals they were given up to the uncontroled despotism of their respectiv colonies, whose supremacy represented an irresponsible power, not claimed by any monarch or even legislature in Europe. The fallacy exposed by Thomas Paine in 1804, when the Louisianians demanded freedom to make men slaves, is still widespread.—Moncure D. Conway.

"With Daughter's Babe Upon His Knees."

A new edition of that splendid prose poem, "Life," by "the prince of orators," Col. R. G. Ingersoll. It is larger and better than the old edition, and can be framed or placed upon the table as an ornament. In the center of the card appear the portraits of the Colonel and the baby, surrounded by the prose poem, which has been truthfully described as, "one of the masterpieces of the orator and poet, who now, as far as we know, stands alone in the living world." It will make a delightful present, and will be a ouvenir not only of intellectual greatness, but of artistic workmanship. It is printed on heavy board, gilt boveled edge. The size is 12x16 inches, and the price only 75 cents, post-paid.

GHOST OF ST. JOHNS.

By M. BABCOCK. Price, 15 cents.

THE HOLY CROSS SERIES.

The Popes and Their Doings. Biographical sketches of the most noted of these vicars of Christ and vicegerents of God, showing what they have done, and what kind of men they were. It contains very plain statements, in very unvarnished language, and the unmasking is complete, proving them to have been cruel, intriguing, and licentious men. Considering the rapid growth of Catholicism in this country, this book cannot be too widely disseminated. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Awful Disclosures of Maria Monk, as exhibited in a narrative of her sufferings during her residence of five years as a novice, and two years as a black nun, in the Hotel Dieu Nunnery, at Montreal. Perhaps not any anti-Catholic book published has created more excitement, and had such a circulation as this work. To counteract its effects the Catholics circulated a story that Maria Monk was "no better than she should be," but investigation disclosed that her "child of shame" was none other than the child of her priest-seducer. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth 75 cents.

Auricular Confession and Popish Nunneries. By Wm. Hogan, for twenty-five years a confessing priest. A revelation of the licentious practices of the priests and nuns in these religious brothels. There is no question that Ex-priest Hogan knew the truth of the tales of vice, seduction, and infanticide he gives in this volume, and equally there is no question that if the people generally knew of them, Catholicism would not be given the vast amounts of money now allowed it by our various city governments. Price, paper, 50 cents, cloth 75 cents.

The Priest in Absolution. A Review of the system of auricular confession, including copious extracts from the "Confessional Unmasked," from the "Master Key to Popery," etc. The work is a protest against and an appeal to every American citizen to examine carefully and thoughtfully a religious system so invasive of privacy, so powerful for evil in licentious hands, so fraught with danger to female modesty, to the ingenuous openness of youth, and to the freedom of thought, speech, and action. Price, paper, 25 cents.

Priestly Celibacy Exposed A lecture by the Rev. Geo. Townsend Fox, of Durham, England. Revised American edition, showing the result in parishes of the Roman decree that priests shall not mary. Price, paper, 15 cents.

Sister Lucy and Her Awful Disclosures Respecting New Hall Convent, Boreham, Essex, England. Showing that convents are inimical to chastity, virtue, and freedom. Price, paper, 10 cents.

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA IDENTIFIED AS THE CHRISTIAN JESUS.

An important and remarkable revelation concerning the life and times of Apollonius of Tyana, the great sage and philosopher of the first century. It is here claimed that his life and teachings were appropriated and utilized by the formulators of the Christian religion in the interest of so-called Christianity. The plagiarism is made plain in this brief history of Apollonius, especailly in view of the historical references and comments thereon. It is quite evident that to conceal the plagiarism, the name of Apollonius was suppressed.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll's ARGUMENT IN THE Reynolds Blasphemy Trial,
At Morristown, N. J.

This is the greatest argument ever made in a case of this kind, and will be a model for the Bar so long as the Christians use force to repress free speech. Its legal acumen is unsurpassed, its eloquence never equaled. Wherever Christian persecution is going on this argument should be freely circulated, read to the Christians, and expounded on every occasion.

Darwin and After Darwin.

An Exposition of the Darwinian Theory.

By GEORGE J. ROMANES.

A systematic Exposition of what may be termed the Darwinism of Darwin, and intended to be of service to the general reader rather than to professed naturalists.

Mr. Romanes is well known as one of the most interesting of English writers upon evolution, besides ranking with Professor Huxley in scientific knowledge and ability. And this is a part of his conclusion regarding the great subject of Design, to which the church so often refers:

"Thus whether we look to the facts of adaptation or to those of beauty, everywhere throughout organic nature we meet with abundant evidence of natural causation, while nowhere do we meet with any independent evidence of supernatural design. . . . Adaptation and beauty are alike receiving their explanation at the hands of a purely mechanical philosophy. . . . All nature has thus been transformed before the view of the present generation in a manner and to an extent that has never before been possible, and inasmuch as the change which has taken place has taken place in the direction of naturalism, and this to the extent of rendering the mechanical interpretation of nature universal, it is no wonder if the religious mind has suddenly awakened to a new and a terrible force in the words of its traditional enemy—Where is now thy God?"

News of the Week.

SIR SAMUEL BAKER, the great traveler and African explorer, died on December 30th at Newton-Abbot, Eng.

SOME ugly utterances were heard in Boston at a meeting of the unemployed presided over by Morrison L. Swift.

IN a battle between Italian troops and dervishes near Agordet more than one thousand dervishes were killed, including the Emir of Kassala.

THE towns of Dayton and Frazier, Ia., are rivals, and as a result City Marshal Larson, of Dayton, is dead, and many other citizens seriously wounded.

THE constitutionality of compulsory vaccination laws is before the courts of Pennsylvania. Citizens fined for not complying with the law are pushing cases on appeal.

EXPERT WILSON, of the London Investor's Review, predicts greater disasters for the Bank of England than those which befell the Barings if its present reckless policy is not radically changed.

THE D. Lothrop Company, book publishers, of Boston, hav assigned. Juvenil and Sunday-school books were its specialties. Has probably sold more Sunday-school books than any other firm in the country.

W. J. ONAHAN, of Chicago, one of the chief supporters of the "Purity in Art and Literature Society," has been made by the Pope a chamberlain in the court of the Vatican. We need such men as censors of our art and literature!

SICILY has been declared in a state of siege. Rioting is continuous. Much property has been destroyed and many lives lost. There are now more than forty thousand troops in the island. Soldiers hav several times come in conflict with the rioters

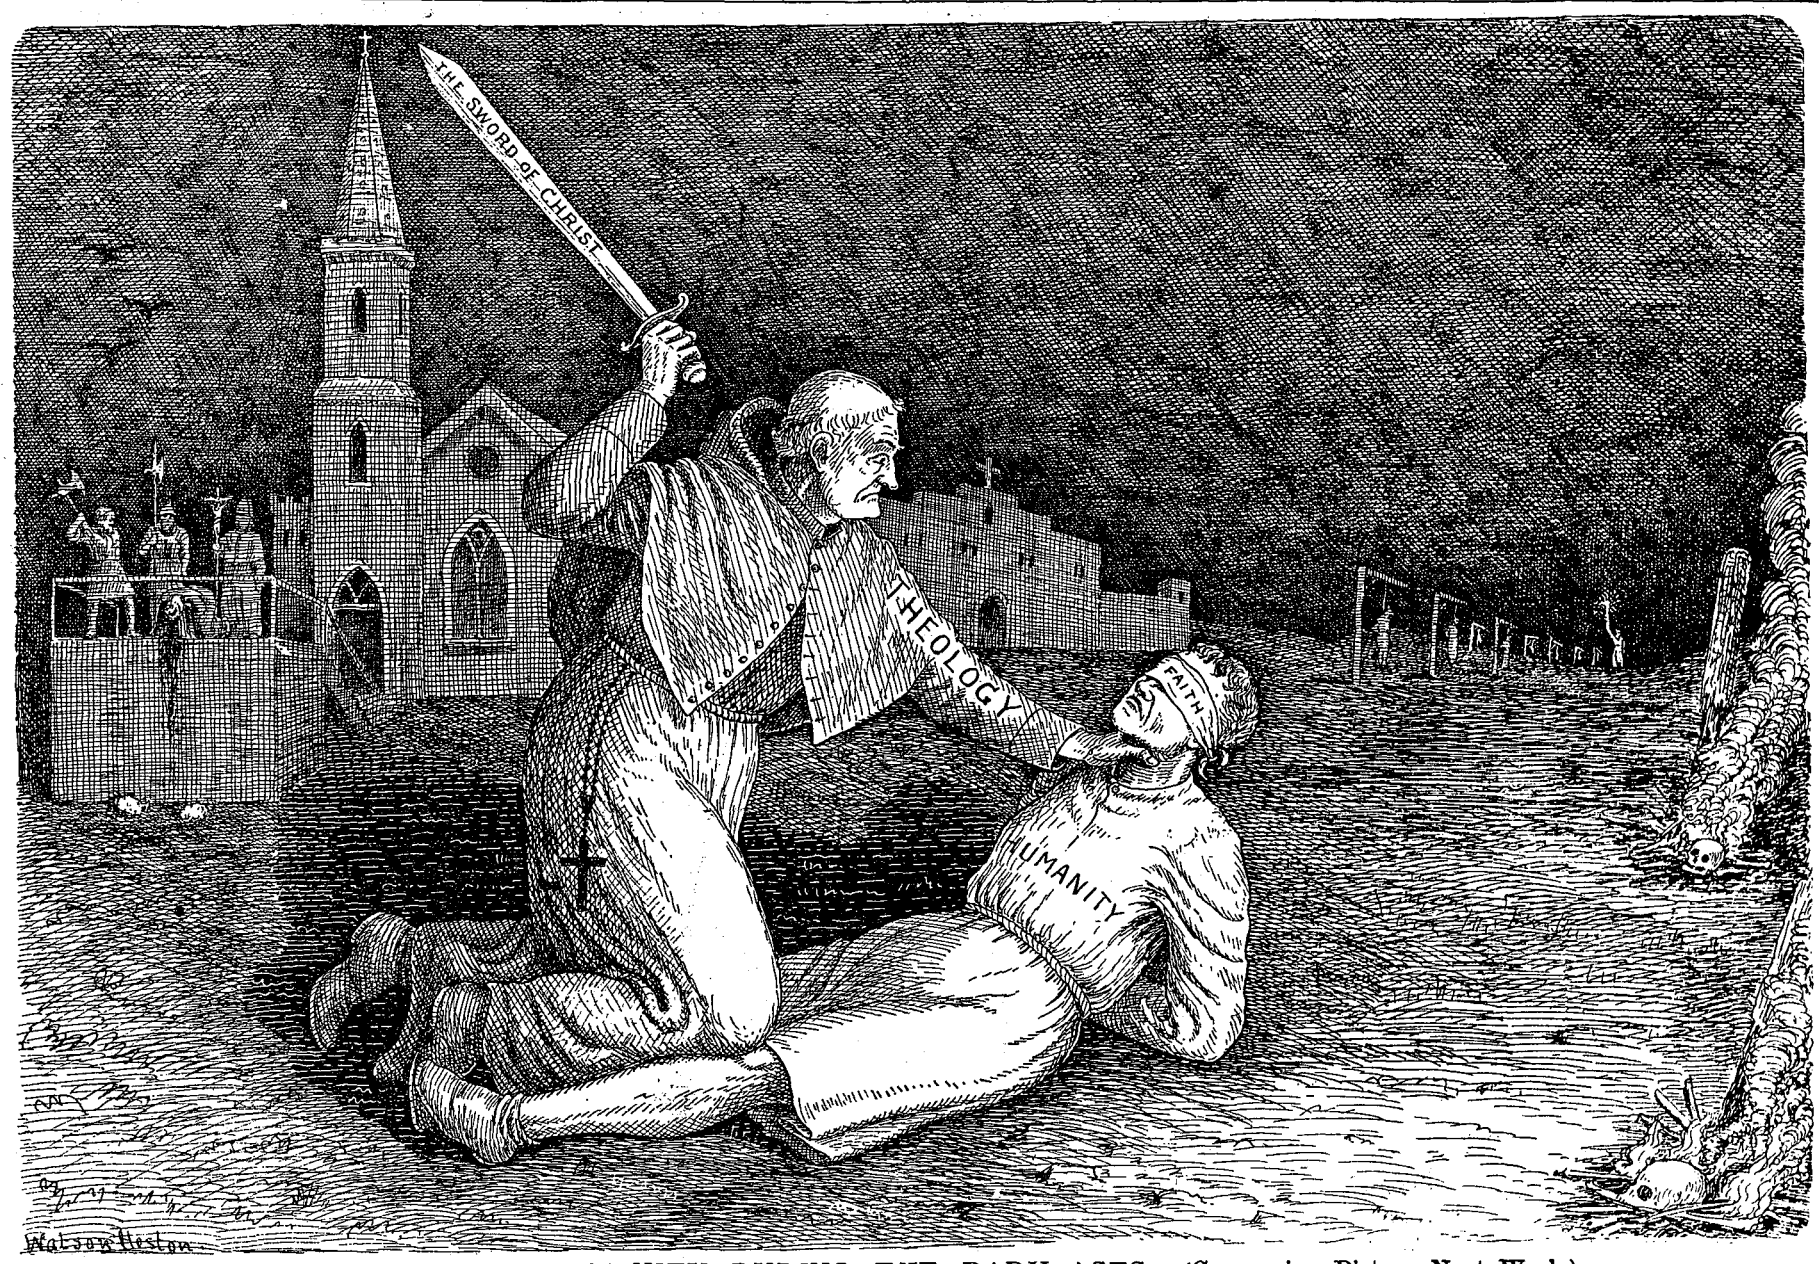
OUR Dr. J. Hartmann, author of No. 27 of the Truth Seeker Library, "The Creation of God," gave a New Year's reception to the poor of the city. One thousand meals, consisting of bread, meat, milk, and fruit, were served at corner of Thirty-fifth street and Broadway.

IN New Zealand the grouping contract system has been substituted for the private contract system. A contract for a public work or private enterprise is given to a group of laborers or to a union in a body. We hav not learned how the right to life of non-union workmen is safeguarded.

IN the interior of Sierra Leone, Africa, British troops were attacked by a French force and twenty-six of the British nativ contingent and four white officers killed. The French commanding officer—mortally wounded in the fight—mistook the English troops for hostil nativs under command of Arab officers.

THE reported massacre of Catholics in the province of Kovno, Russian Poland, is confirmed by later advices. Many were killed in the church and others driven into the river and drowned. The captured survivors, men and women, were stripped and flogged with the knout by the Cossacks and orthodox Russians.

So LOUD was the newspaper clamor against the appointment of Hugh O. Pentecost as assistant district-attorney that District-Attorney Fellows withdrew the nomination and Mr. Pentecost wrote a long letter to Mr. Fellows, in which he declined the office and announced his repudiation of all his old political heresies. He says he defended the Chicago revolutionists because he had read only their side of the case!



HENRY VIZITELLY, the English publisher and littérateur, has just deceased at Farnham, Eng., aged seventy-three. At seventy he was imprisoned in Hollywood jail for having translated "L'Assomoir," "Nana," "Pot-Bouille," and other works of Zola. He introduced the works of Poe and "Uncle Tom's Cabin" into England. He fought against the newspaper stamp impost. He also brought out in England many French books illustrated by the vignettists of the eighteenth century. He was an almost incomparable translator. His business was ruined by the Zola prosecutions and his health impaired by his imprisonment.

A REVOLUTION in Italy is not improbable. The breaking of the Credito Mobiliere bank carries down many smaller ones and adds multitudes to the ranks of the disaffected and despairing. The secret societies are rapidly growing and an alliance between Cardinal Rampolla's clerical party and the carbonari is among the possibilities. Rampolla wants a federal republic with the pope as perpetual ex-officio president and ruler of Rome. Necessarily the non-clerical revolutionists hav different ends in view, but the overthrow of the reigning dynasty might be accomplished by the temporary union of these apparently antipodean factions.

THEOLOGY AND HUMANITY DURING THE DARK AGES. (Companion Picture Next Week.)

TO NEW READERS OF THE TRUTH SEEKER.

We send this issue of The Truth Seeker to a great many Liberals who are not subscribers, with an earnest invitation to them to become such, and thereby help along the Liberal cause.

We would also respectfully call their attention to the many points of excellence of the Paper.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is the Largest Freethought Journal in the World.

The Cartoons of Heston appear each week, and each picture is worth the cost of the paper a year to one who appreciates plain and telling arguments against ecclesiasticism.

THE TRUTH SEEKER constantly prints the most varied and entertaining Selection of Original Papers of any Liberal Journal Its Contributors are all the noted Liberals of the country. All that Col. R. G. Ingersoll gives to the Public can be found in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and that Poet of Freethought, Samuel P. Putnam, writes more for its columns than for any other. The Liberal speakers send us accounts of their journeys, and the best writers of Freethought freely devote their services to the cause of Liberalism through the colums of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Charles Watts, perhaps the greatest Debater of our time, certainly the foremost Secular orator of England, will send us monthly letters from England with all the news of our movement there and such reflections and pertinent observations as will surely make every English Secularist living in this country and Canada want to read THE TRUTH SEEKER. George E. Macdonald, one of the rarest combinations of humorist, satirist, philosopher, logician, has been engaged to write regularly for our columns. As the "Man With the Badge Pin," he is known to nearly all the Liberals of the country and we are willing to make him known to more.

THE TRUTH SEEKER gives all the news of Freethought, and is always on Guard Against the Encroachments of Ecclesiastics upon the People's Liberties.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is devoted to the defense of Mental Liberty, of American Institutions, and the Preservation of the United States Constitution, so far as regards religious tests and the maintenance of human rights. It advocates the abolition of all laws based on religion or religious observances. It demands the taxation of church property. It is uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of church and state, either in name or in fact.

The Sunday Question is now to the front all over the country. On that THE TRUTH SEEKER will [voice] the demands of the Liberal minded men and women of the country, and nowhere else will the rights of the people as against Puritanism be found so sturdily defended.

* To sum it up, THE TRUTH SEEKER is the biggest, best, and bravest Freethought journal in the world, and if you are a Liberal or Freethinker, you want it and ought to take it. We appeal also to fair-minded Christians to hear our side and then decide. Bigots and fanatics, we suppose, wouldn't take it on any terms.

The Most Magnificent Work Ever Published by the Freethought Press.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The object of this work is to present the Course of Freethought throughout the Civilized World for the last Four Centuries, from the time of Columbus and Bruno to the time of Ingersoll.

It will be a radical Historic Record of the Greatest Developments of the Human Race.

It will reveal Freethought as an Intellectual, Moral, Literary, Social, Industrial, and Political Movement.

It will show what Freethought is in itself and how manifold are its influences, and with what hope and promise we can hail its future triumph.

"Four Hundred Years of Freethought" will Embrace the most Illustrious Pages of Human History,

adorned with the brightest Genius, radiant with the most splendid Poetry, rich with the greatest Inventions and Discoveries and ennobled with Freedom's most shining advance.

Nothing Can be More Interesting,

more inspiring to the Pioneer Workers of to-day—to those who are still in the van for Human Rights and Progress. The struggle is not ended and what is already won must be carefully guarded. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; and from the Past we must ever learn Great Lessons for the Future.

NO LIBERAL CAN AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THIS BOOK.

It will contain the Greatest Thoughts and the Greatest Deeds of the Greatest Men

In One Harmonious and Magnificent Whole,

a vivid picture of man's sublimest evolution, with the added glory of

from the chains and slavery of a barbaric creed and church.

THE FIRST PART of the book will deal with Freethought as a Universal Power, as a Spirit, a Method, a prevailing but unorganized Influence in every Department of Human Growth.

THE SECOND PART will deal with Freethought as an Organized Movement, especially in America and Europe; and this history is of equal importance with the first, and should be justly understood and the Pioneers of our work recognized.

The first part will embrace the following Grand Departments:

Philosophy.	Science.	Education and Ethics.	Literature.		Government and Politics.		Woman's Emancipation.
Bruno.	Copernicus.	Bacon.	Boccaccio.	Lessing.	Voltaire.	Gambetta.	Madame Roland.
Spinoza.	Galileo.	Comenius.	Rabelais.	Schiller.	Rousseau.	Castelar.	Mary Wollstoncraft.

							Helen H. Gardener.
							Annie Besant.

in every domain of Human Thought and Progress will adorn the pages of this volume.

The Second Part of this volume will be devoted especially to organized Freethought and the Liberal Press in modern times. The Truth Seeker, Investigator, Ironclad Age, Secular Thought, Freethinkers' Magazine, Independent Pulpit, Lucifer, the Freethinker, Agnostic Journal, etc.

It will give a history of the

GREAT INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

at Chicago; the Freethought Federation of America, the American Secular Union, the various state and local organizations, the Canadian Secular Union, the British Secular Union, and other Liberal associations throughout the world.

It will contain the portraits of those who, up to the present time, have been identified with Freethought work—editors, lecturers, officers of societies, and those who, as representative men, have won distinction in other fields of effort. There will be the portraits of

Horace Seaver,	George E. Macdonald,	Capt. R. C. Adams,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Sr.,	Susan H. Wixon,
J. P. Mendum,	E. M. Macdonald,	John R. Charlesworth,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.,	Mrs. Charles Watts,
D. M. Bennett,	L. K. Washburn,	Samuel P. Putnam,	Prof. J. H. Cook,	Mrs. Robert C. Adams,
Parker Pillsbury,	Ernest Mendum,	John E. Remsburg,	E. H. Heywood,	Mrs. M. A. Freeman,
Elizur Wright,	Charles Watts,	Franklin Steiner,	Otto Wettstein,	Katie Kehm Smith,
T. C. Leland,	G. W. Foote,	J. D. Shaw,	Stephen Pearl Andrews,	Lucy N. Colman,
T. B. Wakeman,	Saladin,	E. A. Stevens,	James Parton,	Lillian Leland,
Judge C. B. Waite,	J. R. Monroe,	H. L. Green,	Abner Kneeland,	Amy Post.

and other men and women who have contributed to the advancement of Freethought and whose names should be remembered throughout the Liberal ranks. There will also be about

ONE HUNDRED BIOGRAPHIES,

and in these will be given a picture of Freethought progress which will be most interesting and valuable, for it is in individuals that we find the best interpretations of the age.

The Price of This Superb Book is $5.00,

and not for the same amount of money can there be found such an array of facts, such a survey of history, and such a galaxy of Freethought.

Mr. Putnam is now devoting his whole time to this work and it will be published at the earliest possible moment.

The name of every Subscriber who sends five dollars before the work is on the press will be enrolled in this book. DON'T FAIL TO SUBSCRIBE AT ONCE.

This book will contain

Over Six Hundred Pages of Printed Matter and Over One Hundred Portraits.

It will be elegantly bound. It will be a book for the home and the fireside. It will be a book to give to your friends when they ask, What is Freethought—what has it done and what is it doing in the world?

This is the most universal presentation of Freethought ever given to the public, and no Freethinker can afford to be without it. It is a library in itself.

HOW TO GET

FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT

FREE

SPECIAL OFFER.

We have made arrangements with Mr. Putnam whereby we are enabled to make our friends a most generous offer.

We need more subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and every Freethinker needs "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." Not all are able to pay $5 for it, but everyone can do a little work to obtain a copy — congenial work, that will do great good all around. This is the offer:

Send us Four New Yearly Subscribers at regular rates ($12 in all), and we will send the Getter-up of the Club a copy of "FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT," FREE OF CHARGES.

And further, to aid our friends in getting this book for themselves, we will offer

To the New Subscribers as a Premium,

post free, a copy in boards of

Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated

By WATSON HESTON,

THE GREATEST BOOK OF ITS KIND EVER CONCEIVED.

Or, if preferred, a copy cloth-bound of

W. S. BELL'S

Handbook of Freethought.

With these Splendid Works as premiums there ought to be no difficulty in getting hundreds of clubs of subscribers.

Remember, to the Getter-up of The Club, FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT, free.

To each New Subscriber in the club, a premium of a Dollar Book—either "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought," in Cloth—all free by post or express.

This really brings the price of the paper down to $2 to each new subscriber, as they get THE TRUTH SEEKER one year and a dollar book for $3.

A Club of Four New Subscribers and $12 ($3 only from each) does this.

We want to extend our circulation, and we want to help our friends to help us.

It ought not to be difficult to get four New Subscribers in any town in the country, especially with these Splendid Premiums to assist.

Those who get up these Clubs will receive their copies of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" as soon as the book is issued.

Those who send a Club and Four New Subscribers and $12 before the book is printed, will have their names enrolled in its shining pages.

This is a splendid opportunity to obtain books which every Liberal desires to hav, at an exceedingly low price. Old and new subscribers can avail themselvs of it, and we shall be glad if our present readers will call the attention of their friends to the values offered.

The Colonial "Blue" Laws.

We hav had several inquiries pertaining to the early church-state laws of New Haven, Massachusetts, Plymouth, and other colonies of early New England. These statutes hav received the collectiv title of "Blue Laws." The defenders of the church hav lately attempted to disprove the existence of such statutes. The object of this article is to sift the authenticated from the fictitious and doubtful. Alice Morse Earle, in her very interesting and valuable work, "The Sabbath in Puritan New England," says on this subject:

"The so-called 'False Blue Laws' of Connecticut, which were foisted upon the public by the Rev. Samuel Peters, hav caused much indignation among all thoughtful descendants and all lovers of New England Puritans. Three of his most bitterly resented false laws which refer to the observance of the Sabbath read thus:

'No one shall travel, cook victuals, make beds, sweep house, cut hair, or shave on the Sabbath Day.

'No woman shall kiss her child on the Sabbath or fasting day.

'No one shall ride on the Sabbath Day, or walk in his garden or elsewhere except reverently to and from meeting.'

"Though these laws were worded by Dr. Peters, and though we are disgusted to hear them so often quoted as historical facts, still we must acknowledge that though in detail not correct, they are in spirit true records of the old Puritan laws which were enacted to enforce the strict and decorous observance of the Sabbath, and which were valid not only in Connecticut and Massachusetts, but in other New England States. Even a careless glance at the historical record of any old town or church will giv plenty of details to prove this."

Italics are ours.

This author givs hundreds of instances of prosecutions under the genuin blue laws, and we incorporate a few of them in this and succeeding paragraphs. "In 1670 two lovers, John Lewis and Sarah Chapman, were accused of and tried for 'sitting together on the Lord's Day under an appletree in Goodman Chapman's orchard.'" "In Plymouth a man was 'sharply whipped' for shooting fowl on Sunday; another was fined for carrying a grist of corn home on the Lord's day, and the miller who allowed him to take it was also fined. Elizabeth Eddy of the same town was, in 1652, fined 'ten shillings for wringing and hanging out clothes.' A Plymouth man, for attending to his tar pits on the Sabbath, was set in the stocks. James Watt, in 1658, was publicly reproved for writing a note about common business on the Lord's day, at least in the evening somewhat too soon.." It would hardly hav been safe for Puritan business men to post their books on Sunday. Present day Christians owe very much to the liberalizing influence of Freethought. "A Plymouth man who drove a yoke of oxen was presented before the court, as was also another offender, who drove some cows a short distance 'without need' on the Sabbath. A Dunstable soldier, for 'wetting a piece of old hat to put in his shoe' to protect his foot—for doing this piece of heavy work on the Lord's day, was fined, and paid forty shillings. Captain Kemble, of Boston, was in 1656 set for two hours in the public stocks for his 'lewd and unseemly behavior,' which consisted in his kissing his wife 'publicquely' on the Sabbath day, upon the doorstep of his house, when he had just returned from a voyage and absence of three years. The lewd offender was a man of wealth and influence."

"The Vermont 'Blue Book' contained equally sharp 'Sunday laws.' Whoever was guilty of of any rude, profane, or unlawful conduct on the Lord's Day, in words or action, by clamorous discourses, shouting, hallooing, screaming, running, riding, dancing, jumping, was to be fined forty shillings and whipped upon the naked back not to exceed ten stripes. The New Haven code of laws, more severe still, ordered that 'Profanation of the Lord's Day shall be punished by fine, imprisonment, or corporeal punishment; and if proudly, and with a high hand against the authority of God—with death.'"

"Lists of arrests and fines for walking and traveling unnecessarily on the Sabbath might be given in great numbers," says Miss Earle. "As late as 1831, in Lebanon, Conn., a lady journeying to her father's home was arrested within sight of her father's house for unnecessary traveling on the Sabbath; and a long and fiercely-contested lawsuit was the result, and damages were finally given for false imprisonment." If the National Reform Association, Dr. Westbrook, and Rev. W. F. Crafts could hav their way, traveling would be stopped on Sunday because involving "unnecessary labor." "In 1657, Sam Clarke, for 'Hankering about on men's gates on Sabbath evening to draw company out to him,' was reproved, and warned not to 'harden his neck' and be 'wholly destroyed.' In Belfast, Maine, in 1776, a meeting was held to get the 'Town's Mind' with regard to a plan to restrain visiting on the Sabbath. The time had passed when such offenses could be punished either by fine or imprisonment, so it was voted 'that if any person makes unnecessary vizits on the Sabeth, They shall be Look't on with Contempt.'" We hav here, and in some other places, followed the capitalization and spelling of the original documents, thus giving a more vivid impression of the horrors from which we hav escaped, for a short time, at all events.

Regarding enforced church attendance we find this: "Even if they committed no activ offense, the colonists could not passivly neglect the church and its duties. As late as 1774 the First Church of Roxbury fined non-attendance at public worship. In 1651 Thomas Scott was 'fyned ten shillings unless he hav learned Mr. Norton's "Chatacise" by the next court.' In 1760 the legislature of Massachusetts passed the law that 'any person able of Body who shall absent themselvs from publick worship of God on the Lord's Day shall pay ten shillings fine.' By the Connecticut code ten shillings was the fine, and the law was not suspended until the year 1770. By the New Haven code five shillings was the fine for non-attendance at church, and the offender was often punished as well. Captain Dennison, one of New Haven's most popular and respected citizens, was fined fifteen shillings for absence from church. William Blagden, who lived in New Haven in 1647, was 'brought up' for absence from meeting. He pleaded that he had fallen into the water late on Saturday, could light no fire on Sunday to dry his clothes, and so had lain in bed to keep warm while his only suit of garments was drying. In spite of this seemingly fair excuse, Blagden was found guilty of 'sloathefulness' and sentenced to be 'publiquely whipped.' Of course the Quakers contributed liberally to the support of the Court, and were fined in great numbers for refusing to attend the church which they hated, and which also warmly abhorred them; and they were zealously set in the stocks, and whipped and caged and pilloried as well—whipped if they came and expressed any dissatisfaction, and whipped if they stayed away."

Tobacco could be planted only "in very small quantities 'for meere necessitie, for phisick, preseruaceon of health, and that the same be taken privatly by auncient men.' In Connecticut a man could, by permission of the law, smoke once if he went on a journey of ten miles."

Saturday evening was included in the Puritan Sabbath, and Governor Endicott received these instructions from the New England Plantation Company: "And to the end that the Sabeth may be celebrated in a religious manner wee appoint that all may surcease their labor every Satterday throughout the yeare at three of the clock in the afternoone, and that they spend the rest of the day in catechizing and preparaceon for the Sabeth as the ministers shall direct."

Criticism of the church was not tolerated. "Severely were the early colonists punished if they ventured to criticise or disparage either the ministers or their teachings, or indeed any of the religious exercises of the church. In Sandwich a man was publicly whipped for speaking deridingly of God's words and ordinances as taught by the Sandwich minister. Mistress Oliver was forced to stand in public with a cleft stick on her tongue for 're proaching the elders.' A New Haven man was severely whipped and fined for declaring that he received no profit from the minister's sermons. William Howes and his son were, in 1774, fined fifty shillings 'apiece for deriding such as sing in the congregation, tearming them fooles.' In 1631 Phillip Ratcliffe, for 'speaking against the churches,' had his ears cut off, was whipped and banished." "Lancaster, in 1653, voted not to receive into its plantation 'any excommunicat or notoriously erring agt the Docktrin and Discipline of Churches of this Commonwealth.' Other towns passed similar votes."

In a future issue we shall giv in full some of these colonial statutes, that our friends may be equipped to meet those who aver that the "Blue Laws" had no existence.

Wanted—New Subscribers.

We solicit the kind attention of our friends to the need which exists of increasing the subscription list of THE TRUTH SEEKER. There are several reasons for this, which our readers will readily see. First, It will do a world of good, by making more Liberals and by interesting those already liberal in the work of Freethought. The church is making great encroachments upon our liberties, and the people need to know about it, in order to defeat its tyranny. And those who read THE TRUTH SEEKER are a hundred times more interested and activ than those who do not. Second, It is a duty we owe to our fellow-men to giv them the light of reason we hav obtained. Liberalism makes for true civilization, and freedom from fear of an angry God makes men happier and better. Every Liberal should do all he can to lift up his neighbors from the darkness of superstition to the glorious plain of mental liberty. And, as Mr. Wakeman says, referring to the resolution regarding the Liberal papers passed at the late International Congress: "They are the very life of the cause of intellectual and practical emancipation of the people. As such they are to be built up and sustained by constant care, payment, encouragement, and solicitation for subscribers for them." Third, An increase in the list will relieve the readers from the occasional "duns" we are compelled to send out in order to get money with which to pay bills. If we can obtain two or three thousand new subscribers, the increased revenue will make the business work of the paper easier, and we can continue to improve the paper without fear of financial embarrassments.

To reward those who will do a little for us in this matter we hav arranged to take a large number of Mr. Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," and to every one who sends us four new yearly subscribers at the regular rates of $3 ($12 in all), we shall send a copy of that magnificent work free. Those who send the club before the book is on the press will be enrolled among the original subscribers and patrons in the book.

And to make it easy to get these four new subscribers we will offer them as a premium either of two spendid works—The "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought" in cloth binding. Our readers know the value of these books, and that about every Liberal in the country would like a copy of one or the other. Either one of these, as may be chosen, will be given to the new subscribers obtained in these clubs of four, and a copy of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" to the one who gets up the club and sends the money and names.

We cannot afford to make this premium to single subscribers, but to enable old subscribers and single new subscribers to obtain these and other desirable works at a great reduction, we hav made a list of premiums in connection with subscriptions to the paper, to be found in the first column of the first editorial page of THE TRUTH SEEKER. We are willing to do our part toward making the obtaining of good Liberal works easy and cheap, and hope our readers will take advantage of the terms offered.

Once more we ask that a favorable eye be turned in our direction, and a helpful hand extended. As the resolutions of the International Congress expressed it, Boom the Liberal papers and you boom the Liberal cause.

"We hav in this country all sorts of people, besides some who hav never been classified."—Galveston News.

They are "unassigned gentlemen," so to speak.

"If anyone is ill or in trouble in your family or among your friends, let the minister know of it. Absence from church is not always a sign of trouble at home."—The Visitor.

It never is in our case.

A Colorado correspondent whose letter appears in this issue assures us that the people of his state hav not been paralyzed by the recent legislation prejudicial to its interests. Apparently so, for now comes Mr. N. C. Creede, vice-president of the Amethyst Mining Company, with a check for one hundred iron dollars, fifty for books and fifty for general results. This is but one of the many favors which hav placed us largely in his debt. As a combination of Creede and deed, our generous friend surpasses the Gospels and the Acts.

The Methodist Times, of London, is pleased to say that abstinence from intoxicating liquors is a scriptural principle. Oh! We hav a little pamphlet which we will send to the editor of the Times for ten cents, and a careful perusal of it will convince him that it is no longer safe to make such claims as he does. Freethinkers know as much about the contents of the Bible as do the editors of Methodist papers, and, unlike those editors, they giv the world the facts.

Rev. H. H. George, of the National Reform Association, has been sent to Washington to establish a bureau of reforms, which will be chiefly engaged in furthering Sunday legislation in Congress. Reader, are you certain that your Congressman cannot be cajoled or frightened into voting against Sunday mails? Or that he will not barter away your liberty by supporting some other scheme of the Sunday law meddlers? Suppose you write to him, at once, and to your Senators.

The Boston Investigator has in this notice to a correspondent squarely hit some of our Christian friends and would-be contributors:

"Your manuscript is returned with thanks. You hav no right to accuse us of inconsistency in refusing it. We know our motto is, 'Hear all sides, then decide,' and we think we liv up to it when we display a willingness to publish any article written in good English on any subject that cannot get a hearing in any of the popular journals of the day. To think that you can compel the Investigator to publish a weak defense of the character of Jesus, that is poorly written and long enough to cover three pages of closely printed matter, is to think wrongly. Go to the Christian Statesman and see if you will fare any better."

How they do lie to and mix up the brains of the poor little children! Here is a paragraph which is going the rounds of the press, and is supposed to be "awfully cute":

"A litle four-year-old sat clenching his fingers around a silver quarter of a dollar at Sunday school recently, and reluctantly surrendered it to the lady who collected the contributions, saying afterwards: 'I didn't want to giv it to Mrs. B. I wanted to giv it to the Lord.'"

Unfortunate little fellow! Some day he may learn that "the Lord" never receives the quarters which the priest clutches. Do we want our children fooled in this cruel way? Keep religion out of the schools.

The sore need of cash compels us to ask our friends to renew their subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER at the earliest convenient moment. The "hard times" hav hit us, but we must crawl through them somehow, and we turn with confidence to our readers. The amounts in individual cases are small and easy to pay, but the aggregate is large and we must hav it to meet expenses. We hav made such a combination of books and paper that everyone can get a get a good deal more than his money's worth, and attention is called to these offers. Purchasing books will help us also. But please renew your subscription now. We need it.

The religious writers are just now having much to say about Hugh O. Pentecost. This is from the Literary Digest:

"He has been guilty of blasphemy, for in one of his addresses, he said: 'The longer God livs, the more useless he becomes. Once upon a time God could take nothing and make a world out of it. He can't do it now.'"

It is to be supposed that the "blasphemy" consists in the assertions that at present God is useless and that he cannot, as formerly, make worlds out of nothing. Does the writer of the above-quoted sentence ask God to do anything for him that he can do for himself or get other persons to do, and does God do for him anything that he asks him to do? Does he believe that God can now make a world or even so incomplete a thing as a Christian logician out of nothing?

Next week will appear our second article on "Parochial Schools," in continuation and conclusion of that in this issue. It will tell of "The retreat of theology in the Galileo case"; the attitude of the church toward the science of geography; the way in which theological alienists treated the insane, and will show that the school-book writers from whom we hav quoted, while depicting in flaming colors the persecutions to which Catholics hav been subjected, are careful to suppress the record of the atrocious cruelties of their own church. It will also demonstrate that the inculcation of scientific truths is not sectarian teaching. The illiteracy and criminality which are found in countries where the parochial school has been the chief instrumentality in instructing youth are compared with the same in countries where the public school is dominant. Much other valuable information is given.

Sunday is the key to the situation. The abrogation of Sunday laws will not necessarily destroy all superstition, but it will more than any other one act of repeal free us from church tyranny. On the other hand, the existence and enforcement of Sunday laws mean the enslavement of the people to the church-state. If the church can hav her way about Sunday, she can hav her way about everything. There is no other question so important, under the circumstances. In regard to education, the Catholics and Protestants are bitterly opposed to each other, and herein is our temporary safety. But as to Sunday laws, they are very nearly of one mind. When they hav obtained what they unitedly want in the way of Sunday laws, they will be that much better prepared to "get together" on the school question. Remember that. They are fighting a common foe, and we are fighting two foes with a common purpose. Down with Sunday laws.

Those who may be surprised at the revelation of mendacity made by our parochial school article must not rashly conclude that representativ Christians of the present time hav all outgrown the temptation to lie to which their ancestors seem to hav almost universally yielded without a struggle. The poison is still in the blood, of Protestants not less than of Catholics. Here, for instance, is Mrs.

J. C. Bateman, Woman's Christian Temperance Union Sabbath Observance Superintendent, in her annual report solemnly affirming that forty millions of our people had asked that the World's Fair be closed on Sunday. It is a waste of courtesy and an insult to truth to assume that Mrs. Bateman believes this, or that the editors of the Christian Statesman, who quote the assertion, believe it. They are determined to succeed, and where truth would weaken their claims they cheerfully substitute falsehoods, just as did the early and Middle Age Christians of whom Mosheim and Lecky write. The ridiculous and mendacious nature of the Sabbatarian assertions about the tens of millions who are said to hav signed petitions for the closing of the Fair on Sunday hav been so thoroughly ventilated that no person who reads and thinks need longer be deceived. Certainly Mrs. Bateman and the rest of the conspirators know, even better than we, the falsity of their statement.

The Christian Advocate thinks that, in any view of the matter, Tyndall's "prayer test" "would hav been scripturally as absurd as the cry of the Jews, 'Come down from the cross and we will believe;' or as Satan's proposition to Christ on the mount of temptation." Where the absurdity comes in is in the attempt of Christian apologists to make us believe that there was anything absurd and unreasonable in the demand of the Jews or the proposition of Tyndall. If the Christians knew much less than they do they would eagerly embrace every opportunity to demonstrate the efficacy of prayer; possessing the intelligence they do, if they were intellectually honest they would frankly giv up the ancient superstition; but being too sharp to believe in prayer and too morally obtuse to confess their disbelief they resort to all manner of subterfuges to escape the logical consequence of the prayer creed which they are supposed to accept. Of course this applies only to the leaders who hav made all the fuss about Professor Tyndall's perfectly fair offer. The rank and file are sincere enough.

John W. Little, pastor of the Methodist church at Seward, Nebraska, is guilty of this:

"No, sir, scores of us are not going, and would not buy tickets on any condition. We are ready to do our part in a proper way to aid the worthy poor, and would recommend to all of the poor who love the Lord Jesus and want the morals of the community improved that they positivly refuse any aid raised by the ball. All gospel churches denounce balls as immoral. No one should countenance them. The Blade of December 3d says the ladies of Seward are to giv this ball. If this is so, the prince of darkness has shown himself very subtle in securing their services."

Perhaps a charity ball is not the most economical agency through which to help the poor, but it is not a capital offense—as yet—under our laws, although there is no guessing how soon it may be at the present rate of development of the church-state idea. Neither is it necessarily immoral, and there does not appear to be any valid reason why people should not derive some pleasure from their deeds of fraternal sympathy. No doubt many of the poor love "the Lord Jesus," but the proceeds of the ball may be sufficient to procure them more food, fuel, and clothing than all the love of Jesus you could crowd into the hearts of Mr. Little and all of his kind would put into their homes. If there is or ever was any rational pleasure that the "gospel churches" hav not denounced as "immoral" we hav yet to be informed what it is or was. But the churches come along in the rear of the procession; they eventually accept what at first they condemned. They hav taken in the organ and the violin; it will not be many years before they will find the ball an indispensable adjunct in raising the minister's salary. Satan or no Satan, they are determined to succeed.

American and English Georges.

Saladin, in Agnostic Journal.

George E. Macdonald, brother of the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, is, we observe, to contribute regularly to that journal. George Macdonald is a writer of "go" and natural faculty, whose effusions we were wont to read with genuin relish. He possesses somewhat the same order of talent as our own George Standring. We congratulate our old friend, THE TRUTH SEEKER, upon the pens of the two brothers Macdonald.

New Publications.

The Truth Seeker Company has just printed a new descriptiv catalog of books published and sold at 28 Lafayette Place, New York. It will be sent free on application.

The many admirers of Mr. Otto Wettstein's writings, which are of the unsophisticated materialistic variety, will be glad to learn that his Congress address on the "Giant Delusion" is now obtainable as a pamphlet for 10 cents.

The address delivered by Miss Susan H. Wixon at the International Freethought Congress is now printed in pamphlet form, the title being "Woman: Four Centuries of Progress." None of the speeches at the Congress has received as much praise as this one, and none was more worthy of the eulogiums bestowed. Single copies 10 cents.

A new edition of A. Jacobson's "Bible Inquirer" has just been issued from the press of the Truth Seeker Company, which has secured both the plates and the copyright of the work. As a concordance or index to the absurdities of holy writ, the "Bible Inquirer" is not equaled by any other book of its size. It has enjoyed a large sale, which it still maintains. The price is 25 cents.

One of the numbers of "The Truth Seeker Library" issued this month is entitled "Thumbscrew and Rack." It embodies the "Historic Means of Grace" published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of January 6th, with additional matter, and several new illustrations, including the famous "chastity belt," drawn expressly for this work. As a handsome pamphlet, with cover, "Thumbscrew and Rack" will be sold at ten cents per copy. Being the only work of the kind in existence, it should hav a large circulation. Geo E. Macdonald wrote it.

"Self-Contradictions of the Bible," the ninth edition of which is hereby announced, will hereafter bear the imprint of the Truth Seeker Company, to whom all orders for said work must now be addressed. We hav purchased the plates from the author and original publisher, Col. W. H. Burr, and added "Self-Contradictions" to the Truth Seeker Library. The work is not an argumentativ or persuasiv one—it is simply convincing, as it givs a hundred and fifty instances where the Bible contradicts itself, and he who runs may read. Price 15 cents.

A Veteran Mustered Out—Converse Close Is Dead.

On the 22d day of December, 1893, in the seventy-second year of his age, after a painful illness of nearly a quarter of a century, Converse Close sank into his final sleep. He lived to a ripe old age. He was a man of more than ordinary ability and intelligence. He was an honest man, and was loved, honored, and respected by all who knew him. He leaves no enemy behind. He held numerous public offices, always with credit to himself and satisfaction to the people. He was our friend, and a friend to humanity. He was liberal and charitable toward all, especially in his religious views. He was socially above reproach, tender and respectful of the feelings of others. He was in morals pure, truthful, temperate—in all ways exemplary. He was in all his intercourse with mankind a model of kindness, sympathy, and amiability. In his domestic relations his goodness, tenderness, and indulgence shone in brightest luster and brilliancy. He loved and adored his wife, children, and home; no unkind word ever escaped his lips; his whole being seemed wrapped up in his home circle. He detested and abhorred impurity and hypocrisy in thought, word, or deed. He was unselfish, always trying to see how much good he could do for others. He has gone from our midst, gone where pain and sorrow are unknown. He sleeps the sleep that knows no waking, yet he livs in our memories by his loving words and good example left behind. In all his long sickness and suffering he was never heard to murmur or complain, and when the last change came he expressed himself as ready, and consoled his friends with the assurance that he had no fears, that all was well with him. He departed in peace, surrounded by kind friends, while his noble wife soothed him with her presence and loving kindness to the last. Those of us who knew him best, loved him most. Let us all cherish his memory, emulate his example, and practice the virtues of his life and character. JOHN M. MATHEWSON.

[Converse Close was one of Freethought's most uncompromising defenders. To the few like him the cause is indebted more than to the millions who believe in rationalism and science, but dare not let the world know where they stand. Forty-nine years ago Converse Close settled in the then wilderness of Grattan, Mich., and there he has since resided. In 1887 he wrote a succinct statement of his views on the subject of religion, and this statement was read at his funeral. In this, "his last will and testament," as it may be called, he pointed out many of the evidences which establish the position of the rationalist that the Bible is wholly a human production. He gave his testimony for charity, good-will, honesty, industry, and temperance. He left messages of love and injunctions to noble living to wife, child, grandchildren, and friends. As he had of course wished, there were only secular services at his interment. Songs were sung, the epitome of his matured convictions was read, and an address delivered by his friend, J. M. Mathewson. May all other Freethinkers be equally successful in having their wishes respected at the last.—ED. T. S.]

Singular Miracles!

What is the first miracle mentioned in the Holy Writ?

Just what was first we can hardly say; but among the first undoubtedly was the special creation of a woman for a helpmate unto Adam. But after creation had, as it is given in Genesis, been completed, the first actual miracle seems to hav been the transformation of Satan into a serpent, and the bestowing upon said snake of the power of human speech. This was a miracle, if ever one was, and one of the greatest on record. The proper definition of miracle must include such a wonder as that; and in the history of the supernal it will rank among the mightiest of all "mighty works"—a snake to be endowed with power of human speech, and that, too, of eloquent speech; speech persuading our foremost mother to do a deed to "shock the earth and make the universe turn pale;" a deed to bring woe upon all animate creation, and especially upon her own descent. Another miracle in connection with this one was that whereby the serpent race was peculiarly cursed for the act of his Satanic majesty in assuming snakehood. Just why such a miracle of injustice should hav been performed, for such it was and is, as to make a whole race, breed, seed, and "generation (of vipers)" reprehensible for the act of a pretended snake—not a real one, mind you—who can say? FACTS IN THE GALILEO CASE.

Gross Superstitions Which Are Taught in Romish Educational Institutions.—Historical Misstatements and Bald Lies Concerning Religious Persecutions Examined and Disproved.—Is the Inculcation of Scientific Truths Sectarian Teaching?—Some Statistics of Crime and Illiteracy.

And if the prophet be deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I the Lord have deceived that prophet.—Ezek. xiv, 9.
Being crafty, I caught you with guile.—Paul.
I was an established maxim with many Christians that it was pardonable in an advocate for religion to avail himself of fraud and deception, if it were likely they might conduce toward the attainment of any considerable good.—Mosheim. Eccles. Hist.
But this absolute indifference to truth whenever falsehood could subserve the interests of the Church, is perfectly explicable, and was found in multitudes, who, in other respects, exhibited the noblest virtue. An age which has ceased to value impartiality of judgment will soon cease to value accuracy of statement, and when credulity is inculcated as a virtue, falsehood will not long be esteemed as a vice.—Lecky, Hist. of European Morals, Vol., II. pp. 225-6.

The problem of education is one of the most momentous which the American people are called upon to solve. As are the children, so will be the neighbors and citizens. Often the school, even more than the home, gives direction to the currents of thought and mold to the plastic character. It is of the utmost importance to the child and to society that he shall be given the best education which he is fitted to receive. The instruction imparted and the guidance offered must be such as will call out, stimulate, and strengthen his latent powers for usefulness. He must be led to observe, to think, to act judiciously. Belief is not essential; knowledge is indispensable. He needs to be developed, not filled. The common school should graduate him a young reasoner and discoverer, instead of shutting him in a cage of convention, where he is able only to parrot a few stock phrases he does not understand.

What scientific studies should be pursued in the public schools we shall not here pause to consider. Neither shall we touch the question of higher education. Here we are dealing with the common schools alone.

Shall religious instruction be given in these primary schools? If so, by whom? What of the respectiv attitudes of Catholics and Protestants toward religious teachings in the public schools? Has either of these divisions of the Christian church any clear understanding of or favorable interest in purely secular, unsectarian education? Would the adherents of either, were their power undisputed, grant to the partisans of the other the privileges they claim for themselvs? Would they not claim the right to pervert the schools, supported by the taxation all the people, into a system of church schools wherein the inculcation of their creed should have the place of first importance, and such scientific instruction as they might consider not inimical to the dogmas and prestige of their church should be condescendingly granted a subordinate position? Is not this precisely what they are doing to-day, within the limits of their respectiv dom ins?

As regards the moral element in education, is it not of paramount importance that the child be taught the truth, so far as truth is ascertainable, and that it be continually impressed with the importance of seeking new truths, and accepting them when found, regardless of their effect upon theories previously accepted and institutions hitherto believed to be invulnerable to criticism? What good can be subserved by making children believe that it is their duty to accept without question as true whatever is told them about gods and devils, heavens and hells, martyrs and saints, marvels and miracles? Is credulity a greater virtue than veracity? Is it possible to believe that boys and girls can have any adequate comprehension of the requirements of justice so long as they are taught to think that the terrible agonies endured by the martyrs of the church and by millions of others are compatible with the sovereignty of a just and omnipotent God?

During the last few months there has been much said and written in regard to a division of the public school fund in the interest of such churches as may wish to educate the children of those of their faith in schools where religious instruction can be given first place as the most important factor in the development of the child. In New York and Maryland those who favor such a division of the school fund have been feeling the public pulse, trying to find out if it is expedient at this time to press the matter to an issue. It has been announced that a bill embodying such a scheme will be presented in the New York legislature this winter. However, so much opposition has been developed that it now seems probable that the whole business will be quietly dropped for a time. A large number of the leading dignitaries of the Catholic church have put themselves in opposition to the movement, not, it is fairly to be presumed, because they are opposed to the principle of division, but because they see that it is not safe to precipitate a struggle at present.

There can be no doubt that the Protestants would unitedly oppose division, a great majority of them because they intend to control the public schools in their own interest and know that any division of the school fund would benefit the Catholics and injure themselves. They talk glibly of "non-sectarian schools" and almost in the same breath insist upon keeping the Bible in the schools and having prayers and other religious exercises added. In 1889 they came dangerously near getting through Congress an amendment to the national Constitution which would have insured the teaching of "the principles of the Christian religion" in the public schools of all the states. Rev. Dr. Rainsford has recently suggested that it would be entirely feasible to have religion taught in the public schools by clergymen of different denominations during certain hours of the school day. He adds that if the Protestant denominations are not equipped for this work, then, rather than forego the religious instruction, he would favor intrusting the task to the clergy of the Catholic church. Judging from these and many other indications which cannot be misunderstood, it is plainly apparent that if the Protestants were the "outs" their attitude toward the schools would be radically changed, and the division of the school fund would appear to large numbers of them as perfectly justifiable. It is equally clear that if the Catholics were the "ins" they would insist as strenuously as the Protestants now do upon retaining all their advantages and would make the public schools practically parochial institutions sustained by general taxation. They would simply "take over" the common schools. Sectarian schools are supposed to be "un-American" and Protestants bring the epithet as one of the gravest accusations against parochial schools. Referring to this a Catholic writer pertinently observes:

Do you for one moment suppose that any Episcopalian, Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, or, indeed, any one of the Protestant—allow me—sects would not loudly protest against the assertion that any of the peculiar sectarian doctrines they hold, or religious devotions they practice, is in conflict with the spirit of American institutions? Could you get one of them to allow that any school they might choose to set up in which their own peculiar sectarian doctrines were fully taught, would be, therefore, in the least un-American? Of course not.

From all of which we are forced to conclude that Catholic and Protestant are arrayed against each other along the line of sectarian differences in an uncompromisable struggle for the control of education in the United States. It would be fatal to our liberties if either party should triumph. Absolutely secular, non-religious—not anti-religious—unsectarian schools are our hope, and for these we must contend unceasingly against every foe, Catholic or Protestant.

Does some optimist suppose that the Catholic church will ever yield her claim to the right to direct the school education of her children? Read this:

Suppose for a moment that the opposition to parochial schools were even more formidable in the church than it is or was, what then? Would that furnish any grounds for our Protestant friends to conclude that those schools are doomed to decay and final extinction? Preposterous supposition! The church does not look to the people—much less to a small minority of the people—for guidance. It is governed by authority, not by popular election. It is a church of law, and every member of the church is bound to obey the laws, and he violates them at his peril. This of course is a free country, and if a man does not like the laws and rules of the church he can apostatize, become a Protestant, and go his way and follow the desires and devices of his own heart. But if he wishes to remain a Catholic, he knows very well that he must lay aside his own private opinion when it comes in conflict with the laws of the church. On the subject of education the church can never change. As to the supreme fundamental necessity of religious education, thank God we are all agreed. There may be a difference of opinion as to the extent and expediency of compromise with the state under certain circumstances, but the supreme importance and necessity of religious education can never be yielded, and so long as the state refuses to do us justice in the public schools for whose support we are taxed, so long will it be necessary for us to build our own schools and send our children to them. It is a binding, imperative obligation which cannot be shirked without a serious compromise of loyalty and devotion to Catholic principle.—Catholic Review.

What has been the effect upon the human mind of church control of education? Moncure D. Conway has very graphically and forcibly told us in a late number of the Open Court:

"There is an optimistic superstition that truth, however crushed, rises again and must prevail. The dismal testimony of history is that mankind never recovers from any long suppression of mental and moral freedom. The effect is cerebral. Now that reason is legally free in religious matters, it is found to be, like the long-immured prisoner of Chillon, unprepared to avail itself of liberty. Amid the blaze of sciences, the wealth and strength of Christendom is bent to the support of superstitions transmitted from savage ages. It must be many generations before mankind recover from the long repression of their religious faculties, if they ever do. Ethical reformers should take the sad lesson to heart, and do their utmost to rescue moral freedom from any further suffering a fate similar to that which preserves among men otherwise civilized the superstitions of chimpanzees."

WHAT THE CHURCH INTENDS THE BOOKS TO TEACH.

Omitting all consideration here of some questions of equal justice which are interwoven with the school problem, we will proceed to the examination of a few Catholic text-books, as we wish to ascertain the quality of the mental food which is furnished to the children who receive their education in the parochial schools. The first volumes we take up are the Fifth and Sixth Readers of the National Catholic Series, compiled by Rt. Rev. Richard Gilmour, D.D., Bishop of Cleveland, and published by Benziger Brothers, of New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago, "Printers to the Holy Apostolic See." The purpose of Catholic education is clearly revealed in the prefaces to these Readers. In the preface to the Fifth, Bishop Gilmour says:

While we have tried to give the book a national character and to cultivate a love of country, we have always considered it the first duty towards our children to give them a sound Catholic education. The lessons on Church History, in connection with other historical lessons throughout the book, are thought to be interesting, and it is hoped that they will increase the spirit of devotion for our Holy Church. While they open to the child one of the richest sources of education, they naturally suggest to the teacher such additional cultivation of this field as circumstances will permit.

In the preface to the Sixth the conflict between the secular and the religious systems of instruction is touched upon, and the Bishop writes:

Education without religion, says the one system; education with religion, insists the other. Hence a conflict in which conscience admits of no compromise, and definitely forbids us to expose our children to the dangers of a godless education. The Reader, next to the Catechism, is the book which most influences the moral and religious character of the pupil, and should, therefore, be eminently Catholic. This we have kept ever in view throughout the whole Series, and as the mind of the pupil becomes matured, and the influences which surround him take deeper root, it is fit that the last Reader, the final impression brought from school, should be the most thoroughly Catholic.

The Catholic church claims for herself the office of educating her children. She does so as one possessing the infallible rule alike of faith and morals. Hence she alone can guide aright both our intellects and our wills; and she alone can fully "lead out" all our powers, and shape them to their true end, by training our whole intellectual and spiritual nature "to the measure of the age of the fullness of Christ" (Fifth Reader, p. 216).

THE SUPERSTITIONS TAUGHT IN THE BOOKS.

Here follow some samples of the "education" which the author hopes will "increase the spirit of devotion for our Holy Church":

As Albert was about to rise, four ladies of stately and majestic appearance approached. They were surrounded by a heavenly radiance, yet their dignity and sweetness of manner inspired him with confidence. Two of them, advancing, placed themselves before the ladder, as if to prevent his escape; while the third drew near, and kindly asked him why he was about to leave his convent home and expose himself to the dangers and temptations of the world. Albert pleaded his dullness and stupidity, which made him unfit for the order. "Your trouble," said this lady, "comes from seeking, in the strength of human intellect, that light and power which can come to you from God alone. Behold your mother!" pointing to the fourth lady. "She is your protectress and friend; ask her for the gift of knowledge; address her with confidence; our intercession shall second your prayer." Albert, much encouraged, looking up, easily recognized in the fourth lady the Queen of Heaven. Bending his face to the ground, he asked for the gift of science and knowledge, with the same earnestness with which he had formerly asked for the grace of salvation. "My son," said the Amiable Virgin, "science is beset with many dangers, but your prayer shall be granted. In philosophy, on which your heart is so fixed, you shall rise to great eminence; and for eloquence, your fame shall be far spread. Long shall you dazzle the world by the power of your intellect; but beware lest pride take hold of your heart, and be not puffed up with your own greatness. As a reward for your sincere piety, I promise to withdraw the gift I now give you the moment it becomes dangerous to you." . . . The next morning the whole convent was surprised and astonished at the change that had come over the dull but humble novice. Dullness had given way to keenness, and stupidity to clearness; the once-pitied scholar now understood everything, and with ease could solve the most difficult problems. So rapidly did Albert advance in his studies, but more especially in philosophy, that within a year he not only outstripped his fellow-students, but he even excelled his teachers. His humility and piety kept pace with his learning. Neither vanity nor worldly applause could seduce him. Though the learned flocked to hear him, and the world praised and called him "Albertus Magnus," or Albert the Great, yet he never forgot for a moment from whom he had received his wonderful powers. For fifty years Albertus Magnus astonished Europe by the profundity of his learning and the eloquence of his teachings. . . . It happened, however, on a certain occasion, as he was preaching, that, seeing his audience spellbound by his eloquence, he lifted up his heart with a feeing of vanity and, for the moment, was about to yield to a thought of pride; but he suddenly stopped in the middle of a sentence. He had lost his memory, and was unable to finish what he had begun. He decended from the pulpit, never again to enter it. The Blessed Virgin had appeared to her client and, at the moment Albert was about to abuse the gift she had given, deprived him of it. The famous preacher and divine became again as dull and stupid as when a boy. He understood the warning, and from that time devoted himself to prepare for death, which happened two years after, on November the 15th, 1282. Such is the tale that history tells of this wonderful man. From it let us learn to put ourselves and our studies under the protection of God. Knowledge must be united to religion; they must go hand in hand with each other, rendering men happy because they are virtuous, and successful only so far as their success leads them to God (Fifth Reader, pp. 358-361).

"Throw the carcass, with plenty of weights, into the Cloaca, there to rot among the filth of Rome, and be the food of vermin;" and this order given, the trumpets blared as before, and the emperor moved on. That night Lucina, another Christian widow in Rome, who had given her husband and her only son as martyrs of Christ, was favored with a vision. She saw the Cloaca Maxima, the great sewer of Rome, with all its horrid deposits of filth, suddenly illuminated with a celestial light, and Sebastian stood before her, radiant with the joy of heaven, and with an immortal beauty. With one hand he pointed to the sewer, its gaping mouth showing corruption; with the other, he pointed to that Via Appia, along which stood already the tombs of so many of God's saints. Lucina awoke, and lost no time in communicating to the other Christians the knowledge thus given to her concerning the relics of the martyr. They were soon recovered and deposited on the Via Appia, where the Church of St. Sebastian was afterwards built (Sixth Reader, p. 105).

Another work is "Church History," adapted for the use of Catholic schools, from the original of Rev. L. C. Businger by Rev. Richard Brennan, LL.D. Below are some excerpts therefrom:

In very early times it was permitted to offer up the holy sacrifice of the mass in private houses. Thus, for example, St. Augustine, a holy doctor of the church, tells us about a certain man named Hesperus, the members of whose household were annoyed by an evil spirit. "One day," writes the saint, "when I was absent, Hesperus besought our priests that one of them would come to his house and by prayer drive away the demons. A priest went, and offered up the sacrifice of the body and blood of Christ, fervently beseeching the Lord that the affliction might depart from the household. Through the mercy of God the petition was granted" (p. 87).

St. Polycarp, who was bishop of Smyrna, and likewise a disciple of St. John, was condemned in the year 160, when eighty-six years of age, to be burned to death, but not being hurt by the flames, was pierced by a dagger, and so put to death (p. 117).

The Pope is, in very deed and truth, infallible. But this does not mean that he is impeccable; that is to say, incapable of being a sinner personally. Nor does it mean that he cannot err in his own person. He is, of course, a man, and will be such till death. He can err in his unofficial teachings. He can err even when deciding as a a learned and experienced man on questions of profane and sacred knowledge, or even in ordaining matters of church discipline. It is only when, in virtue of his sacred office and position as shepherd of Christ's fold, and as authorized teacher of all Christians, and by virtue of his supreme apostolical authority, and by virtue of the assistance that our divine savior has promised to St. Peter and his successors, he decides and defines a question of faith and morals as binding upon the whole church, that the Pope of Rome is infallible. Such was the teaching of the Vatican council on the question of the infallibility of the Pope (p. 128).

St. John Nepomucene of Bohemia, having been chosen by Queen Sophia for her confessor, her husband, King Wenceslas IV., actuated by a wicked curiosity, had the presumption to approach the saint with a view of extracting from him the subject of his wife's confession. St. John was shocked at the wicked presumption of the king, and replied boldly that he would die rather than violate the secrecy of the sacred tribunal by revealing a syllable of the queen's confession. Furious at his discomfiture, the wicked king had the saint stretched upon the rack, and as neither threats nor promises would induce him to yield to the tyrant's unreasonable demand, St. John Nepomucene was thrown from a bridge into the river Moldau, on the night of the 20th of March, 1393. Immediately the river became brightly illuminated, and the dead body of the martyr of the confessional was brought to shore, carried amid the tears and sobs of the people to the cathedral, where it was buried with great solemnity. Three hundred years later, on the 15th of April, 1719, the saint's grave was opened and the tongue was found to be moist, fresh, and untainted. He has ever been and will continue to be the patron saint of our father confessors, and the guardian of their eternal secrecy of the confessional (p. 195).

The most renowned among the holy hermits of the church was St. Paul of Egypt, born in the year 227. During the persecution of the Emperor Decius, this devout and highly educated youth fled to the desert, where he passed ninety years without meeting a fellow-man. For the first twenty years, his subsistence consisted of the fruit of a palm tree and the water of a brook which flowed in front of his hermitage. During the last seventy years of his life, the Lord sent to him daily, as to Elias of old in the desert, a raven bearing a half barley loaf. When Paul was one hundred and thirteen years old, another holy hermit, St. Antony, directed by God, and being himself then ninety years of age, came to visit this venerable recluse. These two holy men, enlightened by heaven, recognized each other at once, saluted each other by name at the first moment of their meeting, fell upon each other's neck in tender embrace, and thanked and praised the Lord. A sacred solid friendship was at once formed between them. While they were conversing, a raven flew down and dropped a whole loaf of bread before the two saints. Paul said, smiling: "Behold how good the Lord is! During sixty years he has sent me, in this way, a half loaf of bread every day. But now, when you have come to see me, Christ has doubled the pay of his servants." They ate together, drank from the spring, and gave thanks to God. On the following morning, after a night spent together in prayer and pious meditation, Paul informed St. Antony that his life was about to close, and requested him to go and bring for his shroud a certain cloak which the bishop Athanasius had some time previous given to him. Antony obeyed, and on his return with the mantle, found St. Paul in a kneeling posture, with head bowed down and clasped hands, apparently absorbed in silent prayer. But the soul of Paul had fled while he prayed, and he was now asleep in the Lord. Hardly had St. Antony enveloped the venerable remains of his friend in the mantle of the holy bishop, when two strong lions approached with gentle mien, and at once began to dig with their paws a last resting-place for the body of St. Paul. St. Antony, after placing the remains in the grave, and having smoothed the last sod, hastened back to his monastery to relate these miraculous events to his wondering disciples. It is thus that the death of this great servant of God is described by one of the most credible authorities, namely, St. Jerome, doctor in the church (pp. 196, 197).

WHAT THE ROMISH CHURCH CALLS SCIENCE.

In the next extract we may get an idea of the nature of what the Catholic church is pleased to designate as "science":

Like St. Cecilia in the department of music, St. Catharine of Alexandria has for centuries been honored in the church as the patroness of Christian science; another evidence of the sincere, genuine sympathy of the church for all true knowledge. The following account will explain why this saint and virgin was selected to be the patroness of science. One day, while the Emperor Maximinus was holding a grand and solemn festival at Alexandria in honor of the heathen deities, suddenly a fair young maiden emerged from the assembled multitude, and taking her stand before the throne spoke to them in words of such fervid eloquence and profound knowledge and wisdom against the absurdity of worshiping false gods, and in favor of the one true God, that neither the emperor nor any one of his assembled philosophers could reply. This intrepid virgin was St. Catharine. Without delay the emperor summoned the most distinguished philosophers in Alexandria, and others well versed in religious science, to refute the saint. But they signally failed. Nay, more, at the convincing arguments of Catharine, the cloud of darkness was lifted from their understanding; her words penetrated their hearts; they professed themselves disciples of Christ crucified. Thus did Christian science, hand in hand with virginal innocence and childlike simplicity, win the victory over proud and self-sufficient worldly wisdom. St. Catharine was, however, condemned to die a martyr's death. The wheel on which she had been placed, having broken to pieces without injuring her fair person, she was dispatched with the sword on the 25th of November, 307 (pp. 212, 213).

One more excerpt and we will turn to another volume—one of a different kind:

In the year 326 the pious empress Helena, who from childhood had cherished in her soul the laudable design of recovering the holy cross upon which our blessed Lord and redeemer had consummated man's redemption, set out, followed by the best wishes of her son, Constantine the Great, and the prayers of all her Christian subjects, from her own country on her way to the holy city of Jerusalem. But alas! on arriving at her destination, she discovered that the places which had been once consecrated by the passion and death of Christ, had for more than two hundred years been desecrated by the heathens. The pagan emperor Adrian, in order to show his contempt for the teachings of the cross, had permitted an idolatrous temple to be built on Mount Calvary. Relying confidently on divine assistance, the pious empress had the temple pulled down, the rubbish removed, and excavations made; till at last the grotto of the holy sepulcher was discovered, and lying near it were three crosses, with the nails and the inscription. This inscription having become detached from the cross, the question now arose, Which of the three was the cross of Christ? In this emergency, Macarius, the holy bishop of Jerusalem, conceived the idea of carrying the three crosses to a well-known pious lady of the city who was lying dangerously ill. In presence of the empress and several court attendants, two crosses were applied to the person of the invalid, but without any result. Hardly, however, had the third cross touched her, when she felt new life coursing vehemently through her hitherto withered and paralyzed limbs, and she arose immediately from her bed in the full enjoyment of health and strength. Who can conceive the joy that must have thrilled the heart of the pious empress and other witnesses of this miracle? (pp. 281, 282.)

WHY THESE LIES WERE TOLD.

Why were these monstrous tales invented, and why are they repeated in this age of science? Why are they instilled into the innocent and unsuspicious minds of little children in the parochial school? Let Lecky, the impartial historian, answer:

"When therefore a man believes that those who adopt an erroneous opinion will be consigned to perdition; when he not only believes this, but realizes it as a living and operative truth; and when he perceives that it is possible either by direct falsehood or by the suppression or distortion of truth to strengthen the evidences of his faith, he usually finds the temptation irresistible. . . . The fathers laid down as a distinct proposition that pious frauds were justifiable and even laudable; and if they had not laid this down, they would nevertheless have practiced them as a necessary consequence of their doctrine of exclusive salvation. Immediately all ecclesiastical literature became tainted with a spirit of the most unblushing mendacity. Heathenism was to be combated, and therefore prophecies of Christ by Orpheus and the Sibyls were forged, lying wonders were multiplied, and ceaseless calumnies poured upon those who, like Julian, opposed the faith. Heretics were to be convinced, and therefore interpolations of old writings or complete forgeries were habitually opposed to the forged gospels. The veneration of relics and the monastic system were introduced, and therefore innumerable miracles were attributed to the bones of saints or to the prayers of hermits, and were solemnly asserted by the most eminent of the fathers. The tendency was not confined to those Eastern nations which had been always almost destitute of the sense of truth; it triumphed wherever the supreme importance of dogmas was held. Generation after generation it became more universal; it continued till the very sense of truth and the very love of truth seemed blotted out from the minds of men.

"That this is no exaggerated picture of the condition at which the Middle Ages arrived, is known to all who have any acquaintance with its literature; for during that gloomy period the only scholars in Europe were priests and monks, who conscientiously believed that no amount of falsehood was reprehensible which conduced to the edification of the people. Not only did they pursue with the grossest calumny every enemy to their faith, not only did they encircle every saint with a halo of palpable fiction, not only did they invent tens of thousands of miracles for the purpose of stimulating devotion—they also very naturally carried into all other subjects the indifference to truth they had acquired in theology. All their writings, and more especially their histories, became tissues of the wildest fables, so grotesque and at the same time so audacious, that they were the wonder of succeeding ages. And the very men who scattered these fictions broadcast over Christendom, taught at the same time that credulity was a virtue and skepticism a crime. As long as the doctrine of exclusive salvation was believed and realized, it was necessary for the peace of mankind that they should be absolutely certain of the truth of what they believed; in order to be so certain, it was necessary to suppress adverse arguments; and in order to effect this object, it was necessary that there should be no critical or skeptical spirit in Europe. A habit of boundless credulity was therefore a natural consequence of the doctrine of exclusive salvation; and not only did this habit necessarily produce a luxuriant crop of falsehood, it was itself the negation of the spirit of truth. For the man who really loves truth cannot possibly subside into a condition of contented credulity. He will pause long before accepting any doubtful assertion, he will carefully balance opposing arguments, he will probe every anecdote with scrupulous care, he will endeavor to divest himself of every prejudice, he will cautiously abstain from attributing to probabilities the authority of certainties. These are the essential characteristics of the spirit of truth, and by their encouragement or suppression we can judge how far a system of doctrine coincides with that spirit" ("History of Rationalism in Europe," Vol. I., pp. 393–396).

PERVERSIONS OF HISTORY.—GALILEO.

Another parochial school-book is, "What Catholics have Done for Science," by Rev. Martin S. Brennan, A.M. In this, as in the Readers and church history, there are multitudes of statements that will not stand the test when the calcium light of the disinterested historian is thrown upon them. Why this is so, our quotations from the Bible and from Mosheim and Lecky reveal with startling distinctness. The leopard has not changed his spots; the law of deception has not been abrogated. We have space for but a few examples of these religious tergiversations, but these will suffice to show that the parochial school is an institution to which students desiring to learn the truth regarding the history of the so-called Christian nations will not care to repair for instruction.

The treatment of Galileo Galilei by the Catholic church naturally challenges our attention, and we turn to "What Catholics have Done for Science" to see what that text-book tells Catholic children about one of the most striking episodes in the momentous struggle between religion and science. In the introduction to this work, Rev. John J. Hennessy says:

In the galaxy of discoverers and inventors we find a single name which irreligious scientists as well as obscure historians use as a sort of dummy to represent the church's opposition to the advancement of truth. This single name, and there is but one—and because of this one instance, volumes of slanderous vituperation have been hurled against the church—is Galileo Galilei. But for the prominence Galileo's persecution obtained for him, there is little doubt the shade of Kepler would have obscured him. This horrible persecution and imprisonment, which Galileo himself says was the happiest time of his life, is as familiar to the average American child hothoused in the common schools or burnished in the high-schools as the oft-told story of Washington and his little hatchet, or of Don Quixote and his fierce attack upon the innocent windmill. The best refutation of the slander is Galileo's own description of it. When the church condemns a heresy formally, the world is made aware of it. In regard to Galileo it was deemed wise to restrain his astronomic precocity so that he might hasten slowly along the stellar plane.

On pages 22 and 23 we find these assertions, made by the author, Rev. Mr. Brennan:

It is curious how small a mole-hill an unfair enemy can magnify into a mountain. The Catholic church has been accused of persecuting Galileo because of his science. This accusation is untrue, and therefore unjust. If anything under heavens has ever been worn threadbare, it is this affair of Galileo's inquisitorial tortures. The darkest stain on the name of science is the number of its students, or alleged students, that have basely flaunted this groundless falsehood. Whewell says that Leibnitz, Guizot, Spittler, Eichhorn, Raumer, Ranke, and almost all persons who have studied the facts, have at last done justice to the church: "That Galileo trifled with authority to which he professed to submit, and was punished for obstinate contumacy, not for heresy." Catholics claim that an œcumenical council presided over by the Pope is infallible. They also claim that the Pope teaching ex cathedra is infallible. No Catholic believes that any priest, bishop, cardinal, body of cardinals, college or congregation, is infallible. No Pope teaching ex cathedra, nor œcumenical council, censured Galileo. Whewell fairly acquits the church of persecuting science in Galileo's person, or otherwise. The congregations of the Index and Inquisition censured Galileo, and commanded him to recite for a certain period weekly the seven penitential psalms. Galileo, as a true Catholic, performed his penance. "This celebrated event," says the erudite Whewell, "must be looked upon rather as a question of decorum than a struggle in which the interests of truth and free inquiry were deeply concerned. The general acceptance of the Copernican system was no longer a matter of doubt. Several persons in the highest positions, including the Pope himself, looked upon the doctrine with favorable eyes, and had shown their interest in Galileo and his discoveries."

These apologists for the Roman hierarchy enter the plea that the charge that the church persecuted Galileo is a "groundless falsehood." Included in this general disclaimer are several specific averments to the effect that Galileo declared that the term of his imprisonment was the happiest period of his life; that Whewell acquits the church of blame; that Galileo was punished for contumacy, not for heresy; that no Pope teaching ex cathedra censured Galileo; that at that time the "general acceptance of the Copernican system was no longer a matter of doubt;" that the "Pope himself looked upon the doctrine with favorable eyes; and that the name of Galileo is the only one that can be used to represent the "church's opposition to the advancement of truth." We submit below evidence furnished by unimpeachable historical authorities which effectually disposes of all these allegations, general and specific. In the article, "Galilei," Johnson's Cyclopedia says:

"The question as to whether this great man was actually put to the rack cannot fail to be of the greatest interest. It is quite certain that at the time many persons believed Galileo had been literally tortured. It is also most certain that the Romish church had done her utmost to keep secret the proceedings in the trial of Galileo, and the records exhibit certain lacunæ that may well have their significance. At any rate, though it may be doubtful whether Galileo was put to actual physical torture at Rome during his trial, it is most certain that he was threatened with it, and that he was exposed to cruel moral torture, while no menaces were spared to make him quail before his judges. On June 22, 1633, Galileo, at the age of seventy years, on his knees and clad only in a shirt of sackcloth, was forced to pronounce, in the presence of his judges and a large assembly of prelates, a most humiliating formula of abjuration."

"Galileo was accused of imposture, heresy, blasphemy, Atheism. With a view of defending himself, he addressed a letter to the Abbe Castelli, suggesting that the scriptures were never intended to be a scientific authority, but only a moral guide. This made matters worse. He was summoned before the Holy Inquisition, under an accusation of having taught that the earth moves round the sun, a doctrine 'utterly contrary to the scriptures.' He was ordered to renounce that heresy, on pain of being imprisoned. He was directed to desist from teaching and advocating the Copernican theory, and pledge himself that he would neither publish nor defend it for the future. · · · For sixteen years the church had rest. But in 1632 Galileo ventured on the publication of his work, entitled 'The System of the World,' its object being the vindication of the Copernican doctrine. He was again summoned before the Inquisition at Rome, accused of having asserted that the earth moves round the sun. He was declared to have brought upon himself the penalties of heresy. On his knees, with his hand on the Bible, he was compelled to abjure and curse the doctrine of the movement of the earth. What a spectacle! This venerable man, the most illustrious of his age, forced by the threat of death to deny facts which his judges as well as himself knew to be true! He was then committed to prison, treated with remorseless severity during the remaining ten years of his life, and was denied burial in consecrated ground."

The same author writes more at length on the subject in his "Intellectual Development of Europe":

"Through the suggestion of the Dominicans, Galileo was now summoned to Rome to account for his conduct and opinions before the Inquisition. He was accused of having taught that the earth moves; that the sun is stationary; and of having attempted to reconcile these doctrines with the scriptures. The sentence was that he must renounce these heretical opinions, and pledge himself that he would neither publish nor defend them for the future. In the event of his refusal, he was to be imprisoned. With the fate of Bruno in his recollection, he assented to the required recantation, and gave the promise demanded. The Inquisition then proceeded to deal with the Copernican system, condemning it as heretical; the letters of Galileo, which had given rise to the trouble, were prohibited; also Kepler's epitome of the Copernican theory, and also the work of Copernicus. In their decree prohibiting this work, 'De Revolutionibus,' the Congregation of the Index, March 5, 1616, denounced the new system of the universe as 'that false Pythagorean doctrine utterly contrary to the holy scriptures.' · · · The trial being completed, Galileo was directed to appear on June 22d to hear his sentence. Clothed in the penitential garment, he received judgment. His heretical offenses were specified, the pledges he had violated recited; he was declared to have brought upon himself strong suspicions of heresy, and to be liable to the penalties thereof; but from these he might be absolved if, with a sincere heart, he would abjure and curse his heresies. However, that his offense might not altogether go unpunished, and that he might be a warning to others, he was condemned to imprisonment during the pleasure of the Inquisition, his dialogues were prohibited by public edict, and for three years he was directed to recite, once a week, the seven penitential psalms. In his garment of disgrace, the aged philosopher was now made to fall upon his knees before the assembled cardinals, and, with his hand on the gospels, to make the required abjuration of the heliocentric doctrine, and to give the pledges demanded. He was then committed to the prison of the Inquisition; the persons who had been concerned in the printing of his book were punished, and the sentence and abjuration were formally promulgated and ordered to be publicly read in the universities. In Florence, the adherents of Galileo were ordered to attend in the church of Santa Croce to witness his disgrace. After a short imprisonment in the jail of the Inquisition, he was ordered to Arcetri, and confined in his own house. Here severe misfortunes awaited him; his favorite daughter died; he fell into a state of melancholy; an application that he might go to Florence for the sake of medical advice was refused. It became evident that there was an intention to treat him with inexorable severity. After five years of confinement, permission was reluctantly accorded to him to remove to Florence for his health; but still he was forbidden to leave his house, or receive his friends, or even to attend mass during passion week without a special order. The grand duke tried to abate this excessive severity, directing his ambassador at the court of Rome to plead the venerable age and ill-health of the immortal convict, and that it was desirable to permit him to communicate certain scientific discoveries he had made to some other person, such as Father Castelli. Not even that was accorded unless the interview took place in the presence of an official of the Inquisition" (vol. II., pp. 262–5).

Draper adds that the Inquisition pursued Galileo beyond the grave, "disputing his right to make a will, and denying him burial in consecrated ground. The Pope also prohibited his friends from raising him a monument in the church of Santa Croce, in Florence":

"Although the discovery of Copernicus was at first uncensured, and his book—which was published in 1543—dedicated to Pope Paul III., as soon as its views had acquired some weight among the learned, the suspicions of the Roman theologians were aroused, and the opinion of the motion of the earth was authoritatively censured, first of all in the persons of Copernicus and two of his disciples, and seventeen years later in the condemnation, the imprisonment, and perhaps the torture of Galileo" (Lecky, Hist. of Rationalism in Europe, Vol. I., pp. 280–1).

Next week the learned historian, Andrew D. White, author of "New Chapters in the Warfare of Science," will giv his testimony.

Round About Boston.

Boston has a history and atmosphere of its own. It is not like any other city. Its streets are certainly inimitable. They could not be copied; and it would be impossible for such an evolution of crookedness to occur more than once in the processes of the universe. There are streets and streets; but never anything like Boston. As well expect the reduplication of a cloud in the sky. It seems as if each street expanded to every point of the compass. It is not in the capacity of a sober man to walk them straight. However, we like to get lost in these labyrinthine mazes. We like to watch the people, and the houses and big blocks that present such a curious and massiv array. The common and the public garden are always beautiful, be it summer or winter. The state-house is resplendent, and our prayer is that the wisdom of the legislators may never grow less; for in that case zero would be the result.

There is a vast radical element in Boston. The difficulty is to crystallize the flowing spirit. It is vague and undefinable. Occasionally, in some fortunate moment, as when Ingersoll lectures, it flashes to the surface like an army. It is a delight to view the enormous crowds which then assemble as at a trumpet's call. It is a display of wealth, fashion, genius, and enthusiasm, and givs hope to those who labor for human advancement in less ample surroundings.

Paine Building is the object of my Sunday's pilgrimage, and I am greeted by many a veteran campaigner and genial comrade. The younger generation is also pressing forward, so that the future is by no means a barren prospect. The golden tomorrow still shines before us. On entering the hall the following happy message was delivered to me with a shining greenback, better than gold or silver, since it represents the credit of a great people, and its varied industries:

BROTHER PUTNAM: Inclosed is $5 for "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." Let me congratulate you that you hav helped to add to those years and knowledge. Success and good wishes from C. FANNIE ALLYN.

Those who know—and they are legion—the valuable Freethought work of our brave ally, will realize the splendid encouragement which these few words giv in my labors and wanderings through four hundred years, where I hope to gather some of the brightest jewels of human progress.

I was about half-way through my lecture on "Liberalism and Christianity," when a youthful and fervent Christian interrupted me. I gave him full latitude of speech, for it was an agreeable diversion. It helped to illustrate the points of the lecture. I hope that Christians will often do this. They are welcome, and shall hav fair play every time. The gentleman claimed that he was a Freethinker. I admitted that he might hav been up to a certain point; but when he voluntarily or otherwise submitted to the authority of a Bible or church, then he ceased of his own action to be a Freethinker, whatever he might hav been in his intellectual processes before. As one can sell his own body into slavery, so one can surrender his mind to servitude. The audience was quite interested in the running discussion, which brought out more plainly the matter of my discourse.

After the lecture, with such jolly company as Washburn, Dr. Noyes, and Reuben Rush, I voyaged away to Revere on the seashore, glittering in the sunset; and nigh unto the editorial sanctum the hospitable board was spread, and there was a delightful repast, with plenty of philosophy, science, and Freethought mixed in.

Returning to the city the domicil of M. T. Rush was thrown wide open to the Pilgrim, and here I spent the major part of the week with these congenial associates, and it was nigh on to midnight sometimes before we quit talking of the great problems which agitate this nineteenth century. Mrs. Rush, the mother of Reuben and Thomas Rush, is apparently as young, and is as bright-looking, as the boys themselvs, and takes interest in the same progressiv matters. Mr. M. T. Rush, the father, was a campaigner with Bradlaugh in the old country. He used, however, to be a fervent Methodist and has prayed for many an hour, but all to no effect. He fell from grace; or, rather, climbed out of it into the clear sunlight.

Whatever the boys do they do with a vim. They hav a stand over on Broadway, South Boston, where beefsteak, mutton, pork, and poultry are dispensed sometimes at the rate of nearly a thousand dollars per day. It is a busy place. It presents a fine appearance and it would make one hungry just to look at the handsome outlay. They cooked for me one of their best steaks and it went to the spot, with bacon and bread and cheese and coffee. It was a square meal indeed.

Wm. D. Rockwood, president of the Ingersoll Secular Society, dropped in after dinner, and we wandered over to his banking house and took a quiet smoke, and passed an agreeable evening, with reminiscences of campaigns, and plans and prophecies of the future. Mr. Rockwood has stood at his post for many a year, and has never failed to do his level best for Freethought.

J. F. Foster joined our forces of an evening. He is a persistent worker. He never givs up. He knows how to tackle the politician. He has got the thing down fine. He is making a brilliant fight for church taxation in the Massachusetts legislature. Something is gained every year; and, like the old guard at Waterloo, Foster never surrenders.

One of the greatest pleasures of my visit to Boston was roaming around among the old book stores on Cornhill, Brattle street, etc. I was trying to find something for my book; and in out-of-the-way corners I discovered much interesting material. My friend Ryan, of Woburn, was with me the first day and we had quite a roundabout journey amidst the musty volumes. I found many things in Boston that had not rewarded my search even in New York. It is difficult sometimes to get just what I want even in the largest libraries. Boston is a good place for books. The old and the new are here in profuse quantities. The public library is well equipped. Boston has given me material for my "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" which I could not find elsewhere. My trip in that way has been well rewarded.

I am also staying a part of the time at the home of the Tiltons, where there is always more or less a group of Freethought friends. Mrs. Lucy Tilton, the mother, at the age of eighty-six, has just passed away. She was the mother of Mrs. Angela Heywood and Flora and Josephine Tilton, a remarkable woman with a clear intellect until the very last, meeting death cheerfully, yet always enjoying life. She had not the slightest expectation of living beyond the grave. The older she grew the more firm was her conviction on this point. She was frank and fearless in her mental conclusions. She was a student of facts. Her old age was as progressiv as youth itself.

She is not in the grave, however. She did not want any Christian burial. The funeral services were plain and simple, expressiv of human endearment. The body will not be placed in the cold ground, but in the bosom of the eternal fire which is the emblem of progress. How much more beautiful is this disposal of the dead by cremation than by burial. It is not corruption, but ashes mingling with the earth for fruitage still.

It is always a pleasure to visit the rooms of Dr. Noyes; to enjoy the well-filled shelves where Freethought books are in the ascendancy. The doctor is an Infidel clear through, without a particle of haziness. He is on the clean-cut bed-rock of science. He is opposed to superstition in medicin as well as theology. He has just contributed to the Boston Journal a vigorous article against compulsory vaccination, which will no doubt attract wide attention, being a subject concerning which truth is of the first importance.

Geo. N. Hill is still on deck, and the Investigator flourishes. I cannot enumerate all the friends I meet here, for they are many. Boston has been a camping-ground off and on for twenty-five years, and I hav been through vast and various phases of thought since I first walked its historic streets; and, whatever happens, Boston will be at the intellectual front.

I lecture Sunday, January 14th, on "Spiritualism, Theosophy, and Freethought." However wide the differences between these tendencies of philosophy, there are common grounds of action; and in the great battle with orthodoxy it is well to understand the unity of our aim. Orthodoxy is not dead, and the contest for civilization is not over, and we need all our forces for the issue.

I now take a short trip to Cincinnati, Chicago, and vicinity. It is necessary to do this. To the subscribers of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" I will say that I am nearing the end of my labors. I hav been hard at work upon it, but the material is vast, and it requires great labor to condense and arrange. I am sure that my friends will be patient and giv me a little more time for the completion of the book, for I wish to do the work well. I shall devote all my time except what I hav to giv to lectures, which under the circumstances I must attend to; but the lectures will not detract much from the real work of the book, but rather afford means of better information and helpful criticism. But I want my subscribers to understand that I am doing the best possible; that the book is growing to its completion, and when they receive it I am sure they will be pleased that much more time than first contemplated has been spent upon it; so that a truthful and manifold record may be given of Freethought. I find many things new, and I hope they will be new and inspiring to my readers, and help giv a nobler meaning to human history.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Observations.

A bill entitled an act to amend an act governing the distribution of certain printed matter through the mails has just been introduced in the national legislature. The act to be amended is the Comstock law of twenty years ago, and the amendment, as is generally the case, makes the original law worse than before. It proposes to exclude from the mails any newspaper or other publication principally made up of criminal news, police reports, or stories of immoral deeds; and all such publications as contain advertisements of cures for private diseases. It makes all postmasters judges as to the mailability of newspapers containing the above-mentioned matter; and they may not only exclude a present issue of such a paper, but likewise "future issues thereof."

The bill contains other provisions that hav no business on a statute book, but those referred to here are the new ones. No person acquainted with the record that Anthony Comstock and his subagents hav made under the old law will need to be informed what outrages these sneaking rascals would be likely to commit with the added power placed in their hands by the amendments. If enforced, the provision touching prints devoted to the publication of criminal news and police reports would suppress some of the daily papers. The provision aimed at "accounts of criminal deeds" and "stories of immoral deeds" would make many historical works unmailable, for, as some one has said, history is no more than a record of crime. This is especially true of church history. On the face of it, the law appears to be leveled at publications like that class to which the Police Gazette belongs; but who is absurd enough to suppose that Comstock would stop there? Who can be so gullible as to be imposed upon by the pretended custodians of purity and morality? The old law, its movers professed, was for the stamping out of obscenity; in pursuance of which object the agents of Anthony Comstock endeavored to stop the sale of Walt Whitman's poems! Under the proposed amendment he would assail everything unorthodox in literature, journalism, and medicin. Clerical conduct could not be touched upon; the history of the champions of the church could not be published, and any person afflicted with a disease the nature of which he did not care to make the property of a gossiping local practitioner could not be informed by advertisements where a cure might be privately obtained. Think of a man being sent to jail for publishing the news, or another for advertising the discovery of a remedy; and think of the real crimes that go unpunished. A New York newspaper publisher once declared that he was not ashamed to print an account of anything the almighty permitted to occur. That was a good defense, but the right to print, regardless of the almighty's connection with the event described, is a better one.

Anthony Comstock has his place in nature. He has a scent for the obscene like a crow for carrion. While there are dungheaps, hogs will root in them. While dogs remain as produced by nature, they will sniff each other on the corners of the streets. So will Anthony Comstock and the vendor of indecency be associated together. But that the crow, the hog, the dog, and Anthony Comstock should be allowed to follow the promptings of their instincts in the presence of clean people, is another matter.

One clause of the proposed new postal law closes the mails to every "lewd, filthy, indecent, or lascivious paper." Now, it is true that none of us want papers of the character described in our houses and families, and to effectually guard against their entrance we forbear to subscribe for any of that class of periodicals—that being quite sufficient to keep them from obtruding themselvs upon us. But what is one man's meat is another man's poison; what some of us would regard as argument, others would deem blasphemy; what the publisher might intend to be sound reasoning, by some reader would be characterized as vulgarity. Sentiments in themselvs edifying, helpful, and uplifting may be rejected as polluting, while the journal edited with an eye single to purity of thought may come at last to be denominated as filthy. Some people cannot tell the truth when they see it, and call it scurrility; and others, alas! do not recognize good English composition when they hav examples of it spread before them free of charge.

These reflections are aroused by a letter just received by the Editor and handed to me. It is from the office of Dr. Musgrave, M.A., M.D., M.Ch., Dublin; 511 Bloor street west (corner of Borden street), Toronto, Ont., Canada, dated January 8, 1894, and proceeds as follows:

EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER—Sir: Your TRUTH SEEKER received. I see by the front page that it is sent to Liberals. I am a Liberal in all subjects of thought, not excluding religious thought. But, then, do not forget that Liberalism is not vulgarity, and that we may hav advanced ideas on social, moral, and religious questions without eschewing all good taste. The English of your publication would forbid my subscribing for it. I should advise a little study of good masters in composition.

Please do not send me any more of your blasphemous cartoons and your incorrect and scurrilous letter-press, as my house is too sacred a place to be polluted by such filthy publications. Yours truly, JAMES MUSGRAVE.

[Italics are mine. Observe the similarity between the language of Dr. Musgrave and the language of the statute.]

This shows what I hav contended—that the same thing strikes different persons with different effects. It appears that THE TRUTH SEEKER and Dr. Musgrave hav collided. The paper impresses him as vulgar, blasphemous, scurrilous, polluting, and filthy, and yet it is not so, as every reader can see for himself. On the other hand, Dr. Musgrave impresses THE TRUTH SEEKER as an ignorant jackass, and yet he may not be such. Perhaps he is an ordinary, or just below the ordinary, muttonheaded Englishman from Dublin. It is his voice that givs him away, the same being unmistakably asinin. An old lady in New England not many years ago heard the yawp of one of these animals owned by a neighbor, and, mistaking it for the noon whistle of a factory a short distance away, made haste to set her clock back to 12 M., although the hands pointed to the hour of one. But this journal hath heard the sound before, and is not deceived; nor are the hands moved backward upon its dial. Had Freethinkers corrected their time by the roars of the long-eared and long-titled brayers, it would not yet be sunrise. The world would still be waiting for the crepuscular glimmering of mental liberty's laggard dawn.

But Dr. Musgrave's letter has served a useful purpose in one way. It illustrates in a very timely manner the danger that lurks in laws like those passed at the instance of the alleged suppressors of vice. Twelve Musgraves (and this country has millions of them), drawn on a jury and sworn to render a verdict according to the law, would convict every Liberal publisher brought before them, suppress every Freethought publication, and send the editor to jail. Without Musgraves such a law would be obsolete as soon as passed, but unfortunately the Musgrave is not as yet an extinct mammal.

GEORGE E. MACDONALD.

AT the Brooklyn Philosophical Association last Sunday, Professor Eames lectured on "Orthodoxy and Evolution;" not "Ethics vs. Dogma," as announced. The address was mainly devoted to the Bible and God, and the speaker showed how orthodoxy had hindered progress, remarking that if it were not for orthodoxy we would hav acquired our present state of civilization five hundred years sooner. Mr. Henry Rowley, who had just returned from a trip to Europe, was presented with an order upon the Truth Seeker Company for $03 worth of books as a token of the esteem in which the association held him. Mr. Nichols made the presentation speech and Mr. Rowley, naturally surprised, gracefully thanked the association and friends for the kindness on their part. The Brooklyn people are fortunate in having a young lady who occasionally givs them one or two piano solos on an afternoon. They are worth listening to, and, with the speeches, are "right in it."

SINCE the close of the International Congress, in October, J. E. Remsburg has filled nearly fifty engagements, delivering from one to five lectures in each of the following towns: Madison, Wis., Portage, Wis., Lodi, Wis., Hillsboro, Wis., West Salem, Wis., St. Charles, Minn., Owatonna, Minn., Jordan, Minn., Estelline, S. D., Naples, S. D., Aurora, S D., New Ulm, Minn., Superior, Ia., Castana, Ia., Lyons, Neb., Ponca, Neb., Tilden, Neb., Hooper, Neb., Summerfield, Kan., Hebron, Neb., Seward, Neb., Meriden, Kan., Dentonville, Kan., Wetmore, Kan., Eagle Bend, Kan., Beloit, Kan., Elk, Kan., Hollyrood, Kan., Ness City, Kan., Hutchinson, Kan., Guthrie, Oklahoma Terr., Nocona, Tex., Ft. Letters of Friends.

Our Friend Passes Into Rest.

TUNKHANNOCK, Pa., Jan. 8, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. G. W. Crawford, one of your subscribers, died December 30 from an injury received in his sawmill December 26. He was caught in a belt and thrown with a crash which mangled him terribly. From his wife, MRS. LONESA CRAWFORD.

"The World Do Move."

CAZADERO, CAL., Dec. 30, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed express money order for $5, one subscription for myself and one for the free public reading-room at Guerneville. Five years ago I wanted to pay for a Freethought paper to be put in the same reading-room. Then they would not accept it; now they accept it. The world will move a little some time. HENRY F. EBERIS.

Perhaps No Better, After All.

BELTON, TEX., Jan. 4, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose postal note for $3, which pays up my subscription to Jan. 1, 1894.

I would like to write more in regard to THE TRUTH SEEKER, but I see there are so many that can write in praise of your worthy paper better than I can that I decline to say anything more than this, that if I was financially able to aid the good cause you are advocating I would do it liberally. JAMES HOWORTH.

An Appeal to the Freethinkers of Connecticut.

NORWALK, CONN., Dec. 23, 1893.

DEAR FREETHINKERS OF CONNECTICUT: Now is the time to strike the iron, while it is hot. Let us come out one and all and join in the work of circulating a petition for the taxation of church property. The undersigned finds the Protestant element and the clergy interviewed in favor of it, and if you will kindly send your address, the undersigned will by the next mail send you a petition sheet and instructions as to how to handle the question in public.

Yours truly, JAMES E. LARMER, JR.

On the Field of Truth They Quickly Rally.

LAMONT, IA., Jan. 8, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed herewith please find draft for $5, to renew my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER and that of Fred. Field. There are at least twenty-five, and I think many more, in this place who are Freethinkers, and in full sympathy with the ideas advanced by THE TRUTH SEEKER, but for various reasons they refuse to subscribe or to do anything for the cause, but as to myself you can consider me a subscriber for life. I would not do without THE TRUTH SEEKER if the price was doubled. Hoping that your noble efforts for reform will continue, and that you will meet with abundant success,

I remain, yours truly, WM. QUICK.

Washington and His Religion.

NESS CITY, KAN., Dec. 12, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: J. E. Remsburg has just closed a series of lectures here, and he said that George Washington, the first president of the United States, was a Freethinker, and Christians are pulling Barnes' Brief History of the United States, on pages 126 and 150 of which it is stated that he was caught praying, and that he was a Christian. We want good argument or none. This was in 1878-9. Please send us authority to disprove if possible.

F. W. EATON.

[We shall print shortly a paper by Mr. Remsburg, entitled, "George Washington: Was He a Christian?" which considers the evidence and settles the matter.—ED. T. S.]

Heston As a Maker of Freethinkers.

LOWELL, MASS., Jan. 6, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: We all know of our Brother Watson Heston's financial distress, and we are all sorry for him; but how much are we sorry? I am sorry $1, and inclose a check for that amount to the Editor, to be placed to his credit and forwarded when convenient. I rely on the good nature of our brother, Mr. Macdonald, to accept contributions for him. Now, if everyone that is sorry would giv what they can afford and not miss it, Heston would be all right. Our heavenly father won't help him, and as to Brother Jesus, since he has risen nobody knows where to find him. I left word at my hotel out West if he came round I would pay his board for a week, but the bill was never presented, so I took it for granted he wasn't out West; perhaps he is in New York.

Now, if we would take heed from the old song, and work in Brother Heston's behalf, it would show that we appreciate his pictures. The Christians will all look at them when they won't read a Freethought paper. I drove team for Uncle Sam a while, and there were five other men with me, all believers. The pictures in THE TRUTH SEEKER in a year's time made Freethinkers of them all, including a stanch Catholic, who at first got so mad at one of them that showed up the Catholics, that he destroyed it.

Giv what you can with a generous hand, be it a dime or a penny, for many can always help one, I've heard people say, when one cannot always help many.

J. C. BLAISDELL.

Half Crop and Half Price, But Must Hav It.

EAGLE, NEB., Dec. 22, E.M. 293.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed a postal note for $5, for the grand old TRUTH SEEKER for myself and Herman Frank Walton. Times are very hard here, with only a half crop and a half price, but I cannot do without my weekly Bible, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

These are hard times for the unemployed. With plenty of everything in the country, yet there are millions of men and women that are crying for bread. There is something radically wrong. The sky-pilot tells people to pray and hav faith in an imaginary God in the skies, who has no time to attend to the wants of suffering humanity. Men had better throw their God overboard and look after and improve their lot here, as men only are able to help their fellow-men, while God shuts his eyes and you are asked to liv on faith.

I am glad that Geo. E. Macdonald has come back to his old love, as I was always anxious for his letters, for they were full of wit and wisdom.

Yours for Mental Liberty,

OTTO R. BOESEWETTER.

From the Celestial Land.

MACAO, SOUTH CHINA, Oct. 15, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: I hav to thank you for your prompt execution of my order for books. For the small sum of $12 I hav been enabled to make a very goodly addition to my library.

Alexander's "Dynamic Theory" contains a mine of valuable information. It is an excellent sample of the only kind of "revelation" that is to-day worthy of acceptance. What, however, I especially prize is the large number of Liberal tracts (Manna and Ironclad series), by Holyoake, Bradlaugh, and Watts, etc., which you hav kindly chosen for me. I should like to buy out your entire stock of these really valuable pamphlets. As it is, I shall take care that those I hav circulate as widely as possible. I would most warmly encourage my fellow-subscribers to supply themselvs with these very cheap tracts, with a view to their propagandist usefulness.

As an English Secularist, I naturally take the very keenest interest in the Freethought Congress.

With sincerest good wishes for the continued vigor and usefulness of your very excellent journal, I remain, Respectfully, A. V. H.

Seems to Hav Troubled the Soul of the Preacher.

BLOCTON, ALA., Dec. 20, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: As I see very little in THE TRUTH SEEKER from this part of the world, I take it upon myself to drop you a line. I hav taken your paper for a year; I hav asked my newsdealer to place it for sale, but he must hav some scruples against its policy, as he has not done so; but I circulate it, as it is a paper which suits my ideas, as I am an hereditary Atheist. My progenitors on my father's side were Infidels, and on my mother's side Wesleyans, and I can say for them that they were sincere and unobtrusiv, and if the rest of the Christians were the same this world would be better. Through my mother's influence I attended (in England) the parish Sunday-school till I was fifteen years old. Afterwards I attended Bible class twice a week till I left England, when I was eighteen. I often pitied the preacher when I asked him some questions, producing at the same time the contradiction from the same Bible, in which there is an almost unlimited number. I find very few Infidels here, but there are many professed Christians who know little or nothing of what is in the Bible. The Methodists had large accessions to their ranks last fall, owing to a revival in Sam Jones style (chiefly appeals to the emotions, mixed with insults), in which they converted the superintendent of this coal mining camp, for he had lots of followers.

I wish you to send me "Handbook of Freethought," "Age of Reason," "Infidel Death Beds," and "Creation of God." I would send for a copy of each of your publications if I could afford it.

JOSEPH STOKES.

A Christmas Turkey from a Calvinist Converted to the Truth.

Oh, Glory! Halleluiah!
Has heaven come to earth!
Will all the sons of Calvin
Yet hav a second birth?

John Calvin burnt Servetus
Just like a dry old stick,
But here's a Christmas Turkey
For this worst heretic,

Sent by a son of Calvin
My wornout form to feed;
I thank the sense that conquered
That old bloodthirsty creed.

A dollar, too, came with it,
These shivering limbs to warm,
In this old wind-mill cottage
That takes the winter storm.

What changes! Oh, what changes,
On this our priest-cursed sod,
Since martyr's smoke ascended
To please a man-made God!

A few more Liberal papers,
A few more stalwart men,
Worn out with life-long bearding
The lion in his den,

And Calvin's god will vanish
With Bible, priest, and hell,
And all the various races
In love and peace will dwell.

Thanks to Paine and Kneeland
And others living now,
Who burnt the pious rubbish,
And ran the Liberal plow.

They sowed with hunger, weeping,
The seeds of this reform;
Then let us giv them glory,
And save them from the storm.

All Liberals should send me a ten- and five cent piece for my song, or $1 for ten. Liberal lecturers, by reading two or three verses of the song, could sell twenty or more in a meeting. Send direct to me and not trouble Liberal editors to get them for you. Write plainly.

A Reward.

NEW CAMBRIA, KAN., Jan. 2, 1894.

On December 23d, inst., as Mrs. Abbott was coming home from New Cambria, some one in ambush fired a shot at her which passed between her and her horse. Last August she and our children were passing through New Cambria in the dusk of the evening, when some one out of a crowd of half a dozen threw missils at her carriage, and the children said if one had not fallen short of its mark it would hav hit our baby on the head.

Now, if the party that fired the shot will divulge those that employed him (because I know it to be a conspiracy), and it leads to conviction, I will giv a reward of $100, and will not prosecute the party (which any well-informed lawyer will tell you you can do with safety).

I will giv $100 for information that will lead to the finding of the parties that threw the missils, conditions being the same as in the other case. If anyone will come to me privately I will tell them who the principals in the meanness are. The public will please note that in both cases gathering shadows were used as a covering, when it is difficult to distinguish anyone at a short distance.

JOHN W. ABBOTT.

MR. EDITOR: The above article appeared in the columns of the Salina Union.

Now, here is a chance to make a comparison between a Christian and an Infidel. Who has acted the most like the low, cunning savage of the Dark Ages, and who like the intelligent philosopher of the nineteenth century—the Christian or the Infidel? Which of the two has acted most "Christ-like?" If you want any further proof that Infidel morality is superior to Christian morality, take the statistics of any prison in the union and you will find, even in proportion to numbers, that it is a hundred per cent in favor of the Infidel, notwithstanding we are constantly told that we "ought to support Christianity on account of its great moral influence."

I wish to notify the public of this vicinity that I will be in Salina every Saturday and take subscribers for THE TRUTH SEEKER at club rates.

Colorado "Snaps Her Stately Fingers."

DENVER, COL., Jan. 1, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find check for $5, covering two years' subscription. Owing to the scare we had in this state over the repeal of the "purchasing act," money is pretty close; but, bless your life, not half so bad as we expected nor as you Eastern folks hav got it later on. Where we hav one idle man, anywhere east of the Mississippi can be found a dozen. The best thing that ever happened Colorado was that same silver repeal against which we protested so determinedly. Our state never knew what undeveloped resources lay hidden away in her rugged mountains in yellow shining gold until the silver interests were paralyzed, when, presto! the silver miner took an extra hitch in his belt, lit his pipe, and struck out for the gold camps, new and old, with the result that old holes, not worked for years and years, began to send out their golden treasures and new camps sprang into existence as if by magic, until the value of the product of Colorado exceeds that of last year, with gold instead of silver predominating. I tell you, they "cannot down Colorado, ye know," for if driven from one industry there are lots of others awaiting development. When the people are heard from and silver once more receives her due, the silver miner can return to his own, leaving all this added gold country and extra producing mines for other always ready hands, thus adding to the population and wants to be supplied by the fruit and farming portion of our state until a home market shall be found for all within her borders.

Colorado's showing in almost every direction is a magnificent one, considering that from almost every other state in the Union comes the cry for bread and demands for work where none is to be had. Her resources are almost unlimited, awaiting such a crisis as the one just passed through to be developed, and to prove to the world that for the varied natural products of the earth Colorado stands preeminent—head and shoulders above any sister state, and she does not propose to take a back seat either, but forge ahead through every impediment, great or small, and snap her stately fingers at all such puny, infantile panics as the present—or, to us, past one. D. D. LAKE.

Did You Ever Know or Hear of "President" Robert McIntyre?

GREELEY, COL., Jan. 1, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: For some time it has been reported that there was a preacher in Denver, Col., who had been an Infidel, but no reliable information could be obtained as to who said preacher was. It is now claimed that he is the Rev. Robert McIntyre, pastor of the Trinity Methodist Episcopal church, "the finest and largest Methodist church in the world." In the Great Divide for November, 1893, there is a cut of this church, and a sketch of the Rev. Mr. McIntyre's life, by Henry Dudly Teetor, M. A., in which the following passage is found: "For seven years he forgot his mother's and father's prayers and was an Infidel. More than that, he was president of an Infidel society, and all his talents were directed toward tearing down the walls of the church."

As there was some doubt as to the truth of this statement, the inclosed letter, with a stamp for an answer, was immediately sent to the Rev. Mr. McIntyre; but no answer came.

It appears from the above-mentioned

sketch that the Rev. Mr. McIntyre was born in Scotland, Nov. 20, 1851, and with his parents and a brother, "the Rev. Joseph Peter McIntyre, of the Methodist Episcopal church, and a chaplain in the United States navy," came to this country and found a home at Haddington, one of the suburbs of Philadelphia, where Robert attended school. The mother and father died, "leaving the son seventeen years of age, bound as an apprentice to learn the bricklayer's trade."

The object of this is to find out the truth about the Infidelity of the Rev. Mr. McIntyre, of what Infidel society he was president, for how long, where it met, etc. Will some Liberal friend giv a true history of the case in THE TRUTH SEEKER, as Christians are making quite a handle of this Infidel turned Christian? No man need be ashamed of an Infidel record, if it be true, and if not true, the sooner it is exposed the better. A. J. WADLIA.

Copy of letter to the Rev. Robert McIntyre, pastor of Trinity Methodist Episcopal church, Denver, Col.:

GREELEY, COL., Nov. 1, 1893.

REV. ROBERT MCINTYRE, Trinity Methodist Episcopal church, Denver, Dear Sir: The Great Divide for November has just come to hand, and on page 36 there is an article by H. D. Teetor, M. A., giving a sketch of your life, in which is this statement: "For seven years he forgot his mother's and father's prayers and was an Infidel. More than that, he was president of an Infidel society, and all his talents were directed toward tearing down the walls of the church."

Will you please do me the favor to answer briefly the following questions: 1. How many years were you an Infidel? 2. How long were you president of an Infidel society? 3. Giv the name of said society, where it held its meetings, and the names of three or more other prominent members of the society? Yours respectfully,

A. J. WADLIA.

A Letter From Santa Claus.

ORANGE, N. J., Jan. 3, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: You may enter my name on the list of subscribers for friend Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." Doubtless you recollect that I reside in the city of Orange, of about sixteen thousand inhabitants, about half of which are Roman Catholics and the remainder orthodox and heterodox Protestants. I am about a half-hour's ride from New York city. My home is a little paradise—all the paradise I expect ever to see here or hereafter. By here, I mean in this country or world; by hereafter, I mean back to the unknowable nowhere, from whence I came.

We hav two little boys, whom we are educating according to the cardinal principles of science and Freethought. The oldest goes to the Protestant school, and he has to come in contact with good little Sunday-school lads, who lie and swear and steal, and tell him all about God and heaven and hell. Of course we instruct him as well as we can, that there are no such places and never will be. We tell him that we do not know whether there is any God or not, as no one has ever seen God nor had any communication from any such being. We don't know who made the world, and the sun, moon, and stars.

Yesterday, as I passed along where a number of little boys (young Modocs) were playing, they commenced whispering to each other: "There goes Santa Claus!" So the word passed along until the large boys further on my way caught the inspiration, and they dodged behind fences and gates and trees, and jocosely said, in a voice but little above a whisper: "Mr. Santa Claus, please bring me a present!" A little lisper spoke louder than the others: "Misther Thanta Tlaus, bing me sumfing." Hence you may conjecture that as no razor has touched my face for more than twenty-five years past, and as those youngsters perhaps never before saw a man with a long and flowing beard and moustache, they could not be reproached for honoring me with that euphonious title. I kindly replied: "The times are so hard, and money is so hard to get, you will hav to wait another year for presents." Whenever I hav an attack of illness or indigestion, I hav a hearty laugh at the innocent conjecture of those little fellows, that I looked like Santa Claus, or that he resembled me.

But I nearly forgot to state that, as soon as I get a copy of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," I intend to call on every Protestant clergyman and every Roman Catholic father and prelate, and on every literary and intelligent man and woman, and show them the book, and make a laudable effort to induce the people to read what has been done and what is now being done to emancipate the human family from sacerdotal bondage, to usher in that glorious day when every man can think for himself, can be his own priest or prelate, can do his own praying, and interpret the mysteries, the wonders, and the laws that are in perpetual operation round about him, without jeopardizing his reputation or character, and without fear of any punishment by the civil or by the ecclesiastical law of the land. I intend to call on every librarian in the county and (book-agent-like) induce them, each and all, to purchase a copy, in brazen defiance of all their refusals to purchase. Every sky-pilot will want the book to see what the devil is doing; and those who don't do their own thinking I will persuade to take a copy to see whether the father of lies is gaining territory and constituents, or whether truth and virtue are in the ascendency.

I believe in a higher and nobler manhood and womanhood than any of us hav ever experienced. I am down on delusions and superstitions and myths and sacerdotal legends, which are taught to children as the inerrant revelations of the ever-living God. My notions of a "higher life," so much talked about and preached about, are to tell the truth and pay honest obligations between man and man. When a person cannot be relied on as true, trustworthy, and financially honest in his commercial intercourse with his neighbors, when his oral promis is not as valid as his written and sealed bond, he or she is fit only for treason, stratagems, and spoils. He can't go any lower in the scale of being. I hate the infernal doctrins and lessons that I was once taught to believe as God's eternal truth. I had rather be called Santa Claus or any other respectable name. Orange is a real hotbed of orthodoxy. Yet there are many, very many Freethought cowards who would gladly embrace all the precepts of any Freethought organization if Freethought was not so very unpopular as it now is. But we are coming to the light of truth.

SERENO E. TODD.

Christmas Evening vs. "The Holy Sabbath."

COLUMBUS, KAN., Jan. 2, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I will Cook you a medley—some hash—that I hope will be digestible and nutritious.

I am neighbor to, and surrounded by, the dupes and victims of Godism, priestcraft, and all their concomitants. As against a lighthouse on old ocean's coast, the winds and waves of religious hatred and bigotry hav been beating upon me here for twenty-three years. "The light shineth in darkness and the darkness comprehendeth it not."

On the evening of December 23d I went two miles to see a school exhibition and Christmas tree celebration, to break up the monotony of my confined and isolated life. The amiable but orthodox woman teacher unexpectedly invited me to open her exhibition with a short speech, which I made as well as my ill-health and impaired vocal organs would permit. The church was crowded, and all but five or six were Christians. I told them (what is often quoted from R. G. Ingersoll as original with him; but I and many others saw it long before he did) that the time to be happy is now; the place to be happy is here, and the way to be happy is to be healthy, liv right, do right, and love, seek, and liv the truth. I then told them that the great majority of Christians believed—took it for granted—that Christmas was a Christian institution, beginning with the birth of Christ, which was a false claim and a delusion. I told them that the annual time of Christmas was celebrated many years before the advent of Christ by (without any proof to the contrary) the ancient sun-worshipers. That they, by experience and observation, learned that the sun annually moved from north to south and from south to north over a heavenly space of forty-seven degrees; that at Christmas time it always reached its southern limit, and began to come north, apparently, but this appearance is caused by the earth's real motion, and the changing of the earth's axis in relation to the ecliptic, etc.; that then and there they had a sure promis of a crop for the coming year to sustain their lives, promote their growth, etc. They well knew, as we do, that the sun was the great and to us the only source of life and sustenance—light, heat, color, chemical, magnetic, and electrical forces, etc.; that to me it mattered not when, where, and by whom it originated, if it could always, as on this occasion, make people kind, fraternal, and happy.

I then told them that they had come there to hav a good time all around by "breaking" the holy Sabbath of the decalog—the seventh "day of rest;" the only day the Bible commanded them to keep; that Christ was a Sabbath breaker, and said that "it was lawful to do good on the Sabbath," etc.; that this year, as Christmas eve came on the first day, in order not to "break" the old heathen Sunday that Christian civilization for fifteen hundred years has tried to make holy and sacred by the co-operation of church and state, they had to break the only true Bible Sabbath and thus violate their God's command, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." So I suppose it is all over this so-called Christian country, where people take the decalog as divine authority, but practically violate it and substitute our modern Sunday for the sacred (?) commandments of their God.

I then told them that they must not forget that all time is the measured motion of the earth in its diurnal and annual revolutions on its axis and around the sun—no space to giv details—that therefore all time is alike; all time is sacred; that nature has no Sabbaths, no Sundays, no sacred days; that it was the same to me, and I hoped they would be happy that night if they were breaking a, to me, man-made Sabbath. I hav to omit much I said.

In spite of all their falsities and superstitions, they had a jovial, witty, joyous time; a spontaneous, exhilarating, contagious, all-pervading flow and reflection of organic, natural functions and life.

PROF. J. H. COOK.

The Truth Seeker a "Free Gift."

HIGHLAND, ORE., Dec. 20, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: In the community where we liv there are a variety of opinions. The disease called religion is somewhat prevalent; some hav it violently, others in a mild form only, while a few are not liable to take the distemper at all. Perhaps they hav been inoculated. As pious folks tell their experiences in church and members of THE TRUTH SEEKER family tell theirs through its columns, I will venture to follow suit by telling my latest. The Missionary Baptists are holding a revival here. Being told that the reverend agitator proposed to explain away any reasons which any person could giv for not being a Christian, if they would write them out and lay them upon the pulpit, I forthwith wrote the following and had it placed upon the pulpit the next morning:

REV. MR. SHORT—Dear Sir: Being informed that you would explain any reasons that any person could giv for not being a Christian, I take the liberty to present some:

First. In my humble and honest opinion neither the Christian religion nor the Bible is based on the principles of justice. I came to this conclusion from reading the Bible as carefully as I could. I was told that the ten commandments as a moral guide were sufficient for any man; everything condensed so it could be carried in the vest pocket. Well, I found that I could own as many slaves as I could buy, and marry as many women as I could support, without violating any sentence that I could find in that highly esteemed document. I also found by reading the Bible that those so-called men of God whom I had been taught to believe were exalted characters were such criminals that if a man in an ordinary community to-day should imitate their actions, the best men would unite and hang him to the nearest limb if they could not rid themselvs of him otherwise. I found that the actions of the man who had such a claim on perfection that he was called a man after God's own heart, were most wicked and disgraceful; his dying moments were filled with thoughts of hatred and revenge. As for the Christian religion, if I understand anything about it, its corner stone is that "Christ died to save sinners." This looks to me like the innocent suffering for the guilty, and I, being but human, cannot get that to harmonize with my idea of justice. It seems to me that every person must be held responsible and canno escape the consequences of his own actions. That being so, how can it be right for any other person to take or even share them? Another reason: I believe in taking no privileges that I am not willing to giv; in other words, I believe in fair play for every man. I hav almost always found that religion avoids discussion—notwithstanding your tolerance in this case. I hav heard ministers of the gospel make remarks about men who differed from them, when there was no person to say anything on the other side, and I hav never seen one that would giv any person a copy of their opponent's writings, and ask them to compare them with their own and then pass judgment. Another reason: I hav never seen any person that had joined the church who could giv any definit reasons for so doing; therefore, I came to the conclusion that their conversion was brought about by a combination of excitement, sympathy, and emotion, and not by reason and cool judgment. I cannot accept the Christian religion, because, granting God to be an ideal of everything noble and grand, I do not believe he stands on ceremonies or exacts or requires them of me. As I am aware there are some excellent people belonging to the Highland Baptist church, I would like to associate with them in their good works, and I would be anxious to join it if stripped of its ceremonies and everything else that is unreasonable. I understand you did not request the signature of the writer, but I never write anything that I am not willing to sign. STEPHEN HUTCHINSON.

The reverend gentleman preached his regular sermon, and then announced to the congregation that he had received such a communication, would preach that evening on the reasons why I am not a Christian; was sorry it came so late; he would like to hav more time to study it up. The crowd then moved about two miles to a creek that was dammed for the purpose and swollen with the recent rains and very muddy, where the minister of God proceeded to wallow four converts to giv them new life. In the evening everything was explained in the usual way with the exception that the reverend gentleman acknowledged that there were several things that he did not know. He did not know why the Lord gave such laws as were in the Old Testament, but he gave them all the same. David was a man after God's own heart only so far as obedience was concerned. It was right for the innocent to suffer for the guilty because it happened occasionally, and if we owed a debt, and another had it canceled, we should he satisfied, etc. However, most of the people thought he was badly staggered, but to some, such as were wallowed that day, if he had not said anything, but merely blown a horn, it would hav seemed to them sound reasoning.

I notice in your issue of December 22d, that Geo. L. Pratt objects to political discussion in THE TRUTH SEEKER. As I believe our liberty and success as a nation depend on the amount of intelligence that is exercised at the polls, and as the reading of those discussions increases our knowledge on those questions, I do not see why they are objectionable. If we could supply ourselvs with all the information we desire from other sources the objection might be all right. But suppose a man had but $3 a year to pay for newspapers, and he invested them in THE TRUTH SEEKER, if such discussions were not there, his information on those questions would be extremely limited; on the other hand, could he read a column from such brilliant intellects as Colonel Ingersoll and John Peck, he could cope with the readers of all other political papers.

I hav always thought THE TRUTH SEEKER reasonable at $3 a year, but since Brother Geo. E. Macdonald has become a regular contributor, I think the paper a free gift. Giv us more political discussions, and may your shadow never grow less.

STEPHEN HUTCHINSON.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

A Wish.

I crave not wealth or jewels bright,
Nor fame or great renown;
I only ask that higher light
My onward way shall crown;
That patience shall be mine alway,
To bear each cross and ill;
That truth and honor be my stay,
My joy, my comfort still.

Correspondence.

BEACH CITY, O., Dec. 25, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I jnst got through with my dinner. We had a large turkey —it was splendid. I hope you had a good dinner to-day.

Will you let me enter your Corner? This is my first letter to the Corner. I am fourteen years old. I go to school and study plenty of books. I am a Freethinker, of course; my mother is a Christian, as many women are.

I wish you a merry Chrismas. Goodbye. FRANK GROSSWILLER.

[Welcome, Frank, and glad to enroll your name in the Corner.—ED. C. C.]

MONTE VISTA, COL., Dec. 19, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As I do not see many letters from this part of the state, I thought I would write a few lines.

Monte Vista is a small town south of the Rio Grande river, and in the southwestern part of the state. It is quite a religious little town, and contains six churches. They are holding revival meetings uptown, and several persons hav been converted.

There are not many Liberal families in Monte Vista; but a few years ago we had several lectures by W. F. Jamieson, and it stirred up the people very much.

Yours for Freethought,
LAURA C. MANSON.

[It is a pleasure to hear from such a good girl as Laura.—ED. C. C.]

MINDEN, NEB., Dec. 10, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my first letter to the Corner. I am eleven years old. I go to school. Our teacher's name is Miss Mary Cronin She is a Catholic and is very cross. I am in the fourth reader. I study geography, writing, spelling, drawing, and arithmetic. I like to read the Children's Corner. I go to church sometimes, but I don't believe what they say. My father used to be a preacher, but now he takes THE TRUTH SEEKER. He was preaching one day, when he told the congregation he could not stay with the church because he couldn't believe the Bible. I will close for this time.

THOMAS REED.

[A sensible son of a sensible father. But your father can still be a preacher and he will find many a good text in THE TRUTH SEEKER —ED. C. C.]

ROCKVILLE, IDA., Dec. 9, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would drop you a few lines for the third time. It has been disagreeable for about two months, raining about half the time. Our school is running now; it will be out on the 23d of this month. Our teacher's name is Miss Annie Keanen. My studies are arithmetic, reading, spelling, writing, grammar, history, geography, and oral elements.

My father has been taking THE TRUTH SEEKER for about twelve years. I think it is the best paper ever printed. I like to read the Children's Corner very much. I would like some of the little children to write to me.

I cannot think of much to write, so I will close. Hoping to see this in print, I remain, Your Liberal friend,
C. C. CARLTON.

[Next time write something about the town of Rockville, the people there, climate, surface, etc.—ED. C. C.]

HOBOKEN., N. J., Dec. 13, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: You will see by my address that I hav moved to Hoboken, the place where the pope has sent his blessing to all the people. But it hasn't done any good, for there is lots of stealing going on. We hav to lock up the smallest things, such as milk and butter, in the cellar. I and two young ladies, who are Christians, went to a prayer-meeting Sunday night, and there was an old lady who got up and said her house was full of Bibles and that she loves to read them. She said her grandson was dying, and he gave her a Bible for a present, which she would bring to Sunday-school and teach the little ones. Well, I was surprised to see an old lady of her age get up and talk so silly. It is time some one showed her the difference, or she will become insane like some other Christians.

So, my friends said, "Now, Hattie, you will pray before you die." I said, "Girls, will you please tell me to whom I will pray? You don't mean that unmerciful God of yours, do you, that sits up in heaven, and can see some of his children murdered, some fall out of windows, some hanging themselvs and shooting and robbing one another, do you? Why, anyone in his right mind would never offer up any prayer to that kind of a god." Well, they did not know what to say. I said, "Girls, I meant to ask you one question, if you were God, and had his power, don't you think you could improve the world a little?" They said no, and asked me if I could. I said, yes, for the first thing I would kill the devil, so he wouldn't torment you any more; then, I would open the doors of an asylum, and restore my children to their right minds. I would then open up all the jails and make everybody honest, and I would not let any of my children starve and perish in the cold; but I would make them all happy." I will tell you more next time if this escapes the waste basket. Your Freethinker friend,
HATTIE THORPE.

[Yes, the world might be improved in many ways. The trouble is, the people do not pause to think of the silly nonsense which they fancy they believe. Hattie would be an excellent Freethought missionary.—ED. C. C.]

[We take this opportunity to thank our many friends for very beautiful aud substantial remembrances at this gift-season of the year. More than all are the sweet and loving thoughts accompanying them. We prize them all, and hope to ever deserve the goodwill and friendship that is back of every good gift and wish. Our friends help to make the Corner bright, readable, and interesting. We are grateful for their aid and influence, and trust to merit a continuance of their favors, so that our Corner in the future, as at present, shall be regarded as an indispensable feature of THE TRUTH SEEKER.—ED. C. C.]

TO THE TRUTH SEEKER FAMILY: If any of the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, or any friend of one, builds boats or keeps them to let, I would be pleased to hav him communicate with me, as I hav invented a handpower for propelling small boats that surpasses anything of the kind in the world; can make from six to eight miles per hour with ease, and will stem the swiftest current. Patent is secured and I am now ready to sell state rights. If anyone wishes to know anything about my power without conferring with me, I refer them to George E. Macdonald of THE TRUTH SEEKER staff. He has sat in my boats and worked the power. It is bound to take the place of oars for pleasure. J. S. MARTIN.

Hard Knocks at Christianity.

By R. WHEELER.

This book is just what its title implies—thumping whacks at superstition. It deals with the effect of Christianity on the world, showing what Christians have done to advance their religion and impede the progress of man. It shows that Jesus was a false prophet, that the gospels are not authentic, and that Christianity is a borrowed system of religion. That the Bible is not in accord with Science, that the atonement scheme is futile and foolish, and that religion is not a real benefit to man.

Pleasure and Progress.

AN ATTEMPT TO PROVE THAT

The Pursuit of Pleasure is the Sine Qua Non of Intellectual, Moral, and Social Development, and that The Promotion of Pleasure is the Duty of Philanthropy and Statesmanship.

By Albert M. Lorentz, LL.B.

CONTENTS:

Book I.—Pleasure: Chap. I.—Sources of Pleasure. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures. Chap IV.—Social Pleasures. Chap. V.—Pleasures of the Savage, the Barbarian and the Civilized. Chap. VI.—Genesis of religions. Chap. VII.—Christianity.

Book II.—Intellectual Development: Chap. I.—Purpose of life. Chap. II. Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures: Knowledge. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Reason. Chap.—V. Ideal Pleasures: Character. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Pedagogical Despotism.

Book III.—Moral Development: Chap. I.—Morality. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures: Prudence. Chap. III.—Material Pleasures: Refinement. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Foresight. Chap. V.—Ideal Pleasures: Civilization. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Vice Caused by Restraint.

Book IV.—Social Development: Chap. I.—Progress. Chap. II.—Protection, Capitalism, and Socialism: Respectivly an Actual, an Imminent, and a Proposed Violation of Individual Sovereignty. Chap. III.—Condition of Agriculture. Chap. IV. Public Schools, the Mene, Mene, Tekel of Socialism. Chap. V.—Province of Government. Chap. VI.—Our Social Disorder.

Here are some of the verdicts on this remarkable production which have been rendered by men who are in every way qualified as judges of books:

This is a spirited, rattling sort of a book that skates right along over the deepest subject without much thought whether the ice is thin or not. It answers the greatest question—What is the use, object motive, purpose, and summum bonum of life, and the real cause and motive of progress? —by one word, Pleasure!—Thaddeus B. Wakeman.

He sharply attacks, also, modern methods of education, and in this he is most abundantly borne out by the facts, and his arraignment is practically unanswerable. His book is altogether a curious and suggestive one.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The man who wrote this book knows how to write a book, and knows what he is writing about. There is not a padded sentence in the volume, not an attempt to fill up with words for lack of knowledge. The author deals hard blows at shams and falsehoods, and hard blows for realities and truth. We do not see how anyone can read this book and disagree with the leading propositions. The work is good; every chapter is worth reading. It is a work of common-sense Socialism. The chapter on public schools ought to be put into a tract and sent to every teacher in the land. Thousands of sentences are worthy of being framed as political maxims and hung up all over the nation. The book deserves a wide reading, not only for its literary style, which is clear and incisive, but for its bold, honest sayings.—L. K. Washburn.

Here we have philosophy up to date, the advance word of the progressive thinker; not a dry, abstruse discourse, but a common-sense essay in plain words upon the conduct of life, and all illustrated with such an abundance of anecdote and metaphor as add real entertainment to solid instruction. This is an important book striking at superstition and unreasonable tradition, and upholding individual liberty in defiance of governmental law and social custom. After reading this book one feels that the author will never be able to write another, for he has put all his life and knowledge into this one. Every page bristles with points; there is no padding or filling in, no mere literary embellishment; but clean-cut apothegms abound, and every line is dictated by hard-headed common-sense.—Capt. Robt. C. Adams.

After you read this book you will be as enthusiastic in praise of it as are the eloquent editor of the Investigator and the gallant President of the Canadian Secular Union,

"Pleasure and Progress" has 398 pages, is splendidly printed from large, clear type, on excellent paper, and costs, bound in cloth, $1; paper covers, 50 cents.

A most extraordinary publication. We venture the assertion that nothing like it has ever before appeared in this country, and it is very doubtful if another one like it will ever again be published. We must give the Truth Seeker Company the credit of putting the book in the reach of all. At twice the price it would have been a cheap book. Artist Heston as a portrait painter and designer is a wonderful success, and we judge from our own feelings that nearly every Liberal in America will desire a copy of this most wonderful volume.—[Freethinkers' Magazine.

Mr. Heston deserves to be called the artist-hero of Liberalism. He has dedicated his genius to Freethought, and has done faithful and noble work for the cause of right and truth. But the pictures do not make up the whole of his volume. There are nearly two hundred pages of reading matter that serve first as explanations of the illustrations, and secondly as texts to prove the utter falsity of the church's professions and the hypocrisy of those who uphold them. Altogether the book is one of the best weapons against Christianity and the church that has ever been put in the hands of Freethinkers.—[Boston Investigator.

JOHN E. REMSBURG'S WORKS.

Abraham Lincoln: Was He A Christian?

For fifteen years Mr. Remsburg has been collecting material for his work. He presents an array of testimony that is irresistible and overwhelming, and which must put this question at rest forever. In addition to the testimony of twenty witnesses who claim that Lincoln was a Christian, and which is reviewed and refuted, he adduces the testimony of more than a hundred witnesses in proof of the claim that Lincoln was not a Christian. These witnesses include his wife and other relatives; his three law partners; his private secretaries; members of his cabinet; his principal biographers, and scores of his most intimate friends.

False Claims. Revised and Enlarged

As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic. Price, 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Slavery; Witchcraft; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbatic Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of the Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies $1.

Image Breaker. Six Lectures:

Decline of Faith; Protestant Intolerance; Washington an Unbeliever; Jefferson an Unbeliever; Paine and Wesley; Christian Sabbath. Each 5 cents; bound, paper, 25 cents; per doz., 40 cents.

Thomas Paine. Tells the story of the Author-Hero's Life, delineates the leading traits of his character and genius, and vindicates his name from the aspersions cast upon it. Choice extracts from "Common Sense," "American Crisis," "Rights of Man," and "Age of Reason," are given; also, tributes to Paine's character from more than one hundred noted persons of Europe and America, many of them written expressly for this work. Second edition, 160 pages, printed on fine tinted paper, neatly bound, and containing a handsome steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Apostle of Liberty.

An address delivered in Paine Hall, before the N. E. Freethinkers' Convention, January 29, 1884. Price, 10 cents.

Remsburg's Book on Lincoln Now Ready.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN:

WAS HE A CHRISTIAN?

By John E. Remsburg.

One of the most noted controversies of the century has been waged over the question of Abraham Lincoln's religious belief. Soon after the remains of America's most illustrious son were laid to rest at Springfield, one of his biographers, Dr. Holland, put forward the claim that he was a Christian. The claim was promptly denied by the dead statesman's friends, but only to be renewed again, and again denied. And thus for a quarter of a century the question of Lincoln's belief has been tossed like a battledore from side to side.

For fifteen years Mr. Remsburg has been collecting material for his work. He presents an array of testimony that is irresistible and overwhelming, and which must put this question at rest forever. In addition to the testimony of twenty witnesses who claim that Lincoln was a Christian, and which is reviewed and refuted, he adduces the testimony of more than a hundred witnesses in proof of the claim that Lincoln was not a Christian. These witnesses include his wife and other relatives; his three law partners; his private secretaries; members of his cabinet; his principal biographers, and scores of his most intimate friends.

Just Out.—25 Cents.—Five Copies for $1.

A Liberal living in Michigan said once that he would give $25 a year to have the Crimes of Preachers recorded, as the frequent lapses of virtue of the ministers showed how little value Christianity possesses to make men moral.

We have just issued the Fourth Edition of the book doing this. The additions for this new edition of the

"Crimes of Preachers"

shows nearly 400 cases of ministerial conduct. While those in previous editions show that within a few years about of one kind or another of criminal conduct. Most of the crimes are against women, for the fair sex are at once the weakness and the strength of the church—"the church" meaning of course the clergy.

Notwithstanding the many additional pages, we have kept the price the same, 25 cents. Send for a copy, and confound the churchmen. Show them just what sort of scamps are the clergy who have closed the World's Fair on Sunday, because it is so holy a day that to look upon machinery or paintings in this period is "immoral."

How To Preserve Health.

By LOUIS BARKAN, M.D.

Fordyce Barker, M.D., Professor Bellevue Medical College says of it, writing to the author: "I regard your book as the most sound, sensible, and useful book on the topics which it discusses that I hav met with. I wish it could be in the hands of every intelligent head of a family. I am particularly pleased with one feature of it that it does not profess to teach dosing and drugging. I congratulate you on the wisdom and success of this effort."

Other noted physicians recommend it just as highly.

Agents Wanted!

We believe that not only can good be done but money made by any Liberal who will canvass for our book "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated." In fact we know one man who worked at it but a few hours weekly and sold nearly fifty copies in a month. The price is low; everybody knows the Old Testament stories, and nearly everybody would like a book applying nineteenth-century wit and knowledge to them. People like to laugh. Reverence for the Old Testament tales has largely disappeared and jokes at the expense of Jonah and Joseph and Esau and Samson and David, and the other worthies of unsavory reputation, are keenly appreciated. It seems to us that the book will sell at sight. It does here in the store. Liberals out of employment will find this a good way to make an honest dollar.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A Nineteenth Century Novel.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with a little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroine. The narrative is, in the main, a history of a working-girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business-men, kind-hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Items of Piety.

The following solemn items are from a recently published English book by Hon. L. J. Tollemach, entitled, "Safe Studies." They are accompanied with a brief comment or two, as title or note.

THE GREATER DANGER.

A head of a college at Oxford sent for one of his fellows who had turned Catholic and said sternly, "Sir, I grieve to inform you that by this deplorable act you hav not merely imperiled your immortal soul, but hav also incurred my displeasure."

Sure enough—was it not the greater danger?

THE SURGEON ON OMNIPOTENCE.

John Hunter explained the structure of the knee to Paley [the "Evidences of Christianity" man], who said, "This wonderful adaptation of means to ends is a singular proof of creativ wisdom and goodness." But the great surgeon replied, "You little know to what manifold disorders this complicated contrivance, through its very complication, is exposed." Hunter held that the brittle mechanisms of organic nature are evidence, not of omnipotence, but of limitation.

A kneegation of omnipotence, as it were.

THE AUSTIN BROTHERS.

These two brothers were men of extraordinary intellectual powers, but were prevented by physical weakness from accomplishing much. Nevertheless, John Austin's writings on jurisprudence are very highly admired and valued, and Charles Austin was, until his health broke down, a wonderfully successful lawyer, and was always a most brilliant talker and a profound thinker. Their orthodoxy was of a fervency which may be estimated by the following instances:

THE CAMBRIDGE STUDENT ON MIRACLES.

One of Charles Austin's Cambridge friends being required to state in an examination Hume's argument on miracles and to refute it, stated it with the utmost clearness, and added "I hav forgotten the answer to this argument."

For a good reason—there isn't any.

WINNING ON THE WRONG SIDE.

Charles Austin won a prize with an essay in support of the evidences of Christianity. But he afterwards said in hearing of Lord Stanley of Alderley, "I could hav written a much better essay on the other side." And in after years he regretted having thus argued against his own convictions.

THE RIGHT KIND OF RELIGIOUS CONTROVERSY.

Charles Austin once said, "The schism between the Greek and Latin churches arose out of a controversy as to the procession of the Holy Ghost from the Son. This is exactly the subject for an ecclesiastical dispute, as there is not a particle of evidence on either side."

TRUE RELIGION.

John Austin was thanked by his clergyman for subscribing liberally to a charity. The clergyman took the opportunity to suggest that so benovelent a man ought to attend divine service. Austin answered, "I am too religious to go to church."

True religion is to keep away from church and do good.

THE JUG.

Bentham used to mark theological works with the syllable "Jug," for Juggernaut.

GRANDFATHER'S TALES.

A grandson of Paley, having to answer questions in an examination on Paley's "Evidences of Christianity," subjoined at the end of his paper, "Tales of my grandfather."

DIFFERED FROM JESUS.

Mr. Justice Stephen, speaking of resisting evil, said: "If the Sermon on the Mount really means to forbid this it (i. e. the sermon) ought to be disregarded."

THE TRINITARIAN CONUNDRUM.

Horne Tooke, professing himself puzzled by the mystery of the Trinity, was told by a believing friend: "The doctrin presents no more difficulty than what I hav just seen—three men in one cart." Tooke replied: "It would hav been more to the purpose if you had seen one man in three carts."

HOBBES DEFINES RELIGION.

Hobbes, the famous philosophical and political writer, defined as follows: "Fear of powers invisible, feigned by the mind, or believed from tales publicly allowed—religion. Not allowed—superstition."

Note the sarcasm.

COURAGE consists in equality to the problem before us.—Emerson.

MYSTERY—The explanation offered by ignorance concerning the unknown.—Minnie McIntyre.

THE true teacher defends his pupils against his own personal influence. He guides their eyes from himself to the spirit that quickens him. He will hav no disciples.—Bronson Alcott.

THE indications are multiplying on every hand, in the pulpit, at the bar, and in literature, that many so-called educated men hav never learned to think exactly or to express their meaning with clearness and accuracy. And in this fact there is a hint for the colleges.—The Watchman.

A RELIGION of effortless adoration may be a religion for an angel, but never for a man. Not in the contemplativ, but in the activ lies true hope; not in rapture, but in reality lies true life; not in the realm of ideals, but among tangible things, is man's santification wrought.—Professor Drummond.

THE king of one country was angry with the king of another. "Let the people fight it out," said they, and went home to read reports from the field. When the war was over the conquered king owed many millions to the victorious one. "Let the survivors pay it," said they, as they shook hands amicably; and neither blushed.—J. D. Miller.

AS THERE is a universal law of being which controls all forms of life, from the aimless movement of the mollusk in the sea to the most perfect conduct of the best developed man, so all the varied activities of human life, from the movements of the savage digging roots to the work of the greatest artist with his brush, are controlled by universal laws, and are good or bad, perfect or imperfect, as they conform to the highest condition nature has imposed.—Clarence S. Darrow.

THE more insignificant gods disappear. The most conspicuous grows in comparativ size, by the retirement of his rivals. As the serpent of Moses swallowed the serpents of the magicians, so the successful god seems to swallow all other gods. The jurisdiction of the one God extends, too, with the political or social jurisdiction with which it is conterminous. The arms of the Mohammedans carried their religion into three divisions of the Eastern Continent. The commercial conquests of Great Britain hav introduced Christianity into every quarter of the globe.—A. M. Lorentz.

BUT there is a community that is not free—an army in the field. The equality and fraternity impossible in peaceful and industrial society may be approximated where men are reduced to one and the same function, where they become uniforms and rifles, hav one purpose, and are made comrades by common conditions, regulations, and dangers. The revolutionists' dream of equality and fraternity led them inevitably under a military despotism. Napoleon took away all personal liberty, but he gave the French more equality and fraternity than they ever had, before or since. He organized them into a militant mass, a unit formed of equal atoms, an engin obedient to his hand. He ruled the nation absolutely; his ghost ruled it after he was dead—and is not laid yet.—Moncure D. Conway.

THE ancient Hebrews vindicated their civil and religious rights under circumstances of extreme difficulty, but, after all, as successfully as the Greeks themselvs, who, indeed, lost their national independence two hundred years before the destruction of Jerusalem. Has exile unfitted the homeless race for the enjoyment of human rights? They did not abuse the hospitality of the Spanish Moors, and hav certainly deserved the tolerance of their American fellow-citizens. Rector Ahlwardt's slanders appeal to the prejudices without gaining the credit even of his most bigoted supporters, though there is unfortunately no doubt that the chimeras of the Middle Ages hav here and there retained their hold on the minds of besotted rustics. The charge of child-murder, as a religious rite, inflames the passions of the Danubian peasants with all the symptoms of actual conviction, and Gambetta may hav been right in suggesting that the odium laesi—the propensity of hating those whom we hav injured—has a good deal to do with the persecution of a race guilty of deriving its descent from the victims of the holy Inquisition. Messrs. Ahlwardt & Co. may remember the outrages of their mediæval predecessors and fan their own prejudice with the conclusion that the survivors must be thirsting for revenge.—Felix L. Oswald.

"With Daughter's Babe Upon His Knees."

A new edition of that splendid prose poem, "Life," by "the prince of orators," Col. R. G. Ingersoll. It is larger and better than the old edition, and can be framed or placed upon the table as an ornament. In the center of the card appear the portraits of the Colonel and the baby, surrounded by the prose poem, which has been truthfully described as, "one of the masterpieces of the orator and poet, who now, as far as we know, stands alone in the living world." It will make a delightful present, and will be a souvenir not only of intellectual greatness, but of artistic workmanship. It is printed on heavy board, gilt boveled edge. The size is 12x16 inches, and the price only 75 cents, post-paid.

GHOST OF ST. JOHNS.

By M. BABCOCK. Price, 15 cents.

THE HOLY CROSS SERIES.

The Popes and Their Doings. Biographical sketches of the most noted of these vicars of Christ and vicegerents of God, showing what they have done, and what kind of men they were. It contains very plain statements, in very unvarnished language, and the unmasking is complete, proving them to have been cruel, intriguing, and licentious men. Considering the rapid growth of Catholicism in this country, this book cannot be too widely disseminated. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Awful Disclosures of Maria Monk, as exhibited in a narrative of her sufferings during her residence of five years as a novice, and two years as a black nun, in the Hotel Dieu Nunnery, at Montreal. Perhaps not any anti-Catholic book published has created more excitement, and had such a circulation as this work. To counteract its effects the Catholics circulated a story that Maria Monk was "no better than she should be," but investigation disclosed that her "child of shame" was none other than the child of her priest-seducer. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth 75 cents.

Auricular Confession and Popish Nunneries. By Wm. Hogan, for twenty-five years a confessing priest. A revelation of the licentious practices of the priests and nuns in these religious brothels. There is no question that Ex-priest Hogan knew the truth of the tales of vice, seduction, and infanticide he gives in this volume, and equally there is no question that if the people generally knew of them, Catholicism would not be given the vast amounts of money now allowed it by our various city governments. Price, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents.

The Priest in Absolution. A Review of the system of auricular confession, including copious extracts from the "Confessional Unmasked," from the "Master Key to Popery," etc. The work is a protest against and an appeal to every American citizen to examine carefully and thoughtfully a religious system so invasive of privacy, so powerful for evil in licentious hands, so fraught with danger to female modesty, to the ingenuous openness of youth, and to the freedom of thought, speech, and action. Price, paper, 25 cents.

Priestly Celibacy Exposed A lecture by the Rev. Geo. Townsend Fox, of Durham, England. Revised American edition, showing the result in parishes of the Roman decree that priests shall not mary. Price, paper, 15 cents.

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA IDENTIFIED AS THE CHRISTIAN JESUS.

An important and remarkable revelation concerning the life and times of Apollonius of Tyana, the great sage and philosopher of the first century. It is here claimed that his life and teachings were appropriated and utilized by the formulators of the Christian religion in the interest of so-called Christianity. The plagiarism is made plain in this brief history of Apollonius, especially in view of the historical references and comments thereon. It is quite evident that to conceal the plagiarism, the name of Apollonius was suppressed.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll's ARGUMENT IN THE Reynolds Blasphemy Trial,

At Morristown, N. J.

This is the greatest argument ever made in a case of this kind, and will be a model for the Bar so long as the Christians use force to repress free speech. Its legal acumen is unsurpassed, its eloquence never equaled. Wherever Christian persecution is going on this argument should be freely circulated, read to the Christians, and expounded on every occasion.

Darwin and After Darwin.

An Exposition of the Darwinian Theory.

By GEORGE J. ROMANES.

A systematic Exposition of what may be termed the Darwinism of Darwin, and intended to be of service to the general reader rather than to professed naturalists.

Mr. Romanes is well known as one of the most interesting of English writers upon evolution, besides ranking with Professor Huxley in scientific knowledge and ability. And this is a part of his conclusion regarding the great subject of Design, to which the church so often refers:

"Thus whether we look to the facts of adaptation or to those of beauty, everywhere throughout organic nature we meet with abundant evidence of natural causation, while nowhere do we meet with any independent evidence of supernatural design. . . . Adaptation and beauty are alike receiving their explanation at the hands of a purely mechanical philosophy. . . All nature has thus been transformed before the view of the present generation in a manner and to an extent that has never before been possible; and inasmuch as the change which has taken place has taken place in the direction of naturalism, and this to the extent of rendering the mechanical interpretation of nature universal, it is no wonder if the religious mind has suddenly awakened to a new and a terrible force in the words of its traditional enemy—Where is now thy God?"

WHEN KNOWLEDGE CAME.

TO NEW READERS OF THE TRUTH SEEKER.

We send this issue of The Truth Seeker to a great many Liberals who are not subscribers, with an earnest invitation to them to become such, and thereby help along the Liberal cause.

We would also respectfully call their attention to the many points of excellence of the Paper.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is the Largest Freethought Journal in the World.

The Cartoons of Heston appear each week, and each picture is worth the cost of the paper a year to one who appreciates plain and telling arguments against ecclesiasticism.

THE TRUTH SEEKER constantly prints the most varied and entertaining Selection of Original Papers of any Liberal Journal Its Contributors are all the noted Liberals of the country. All that Col. R. G. Ingersoll gives to the Public can be found in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and that Poet of Freethought, Samuel P. Putnam, writes more for its columns than for any other. The Liberal speakers send us accounts of their journeys, and the best writers of Freethought freely devote their services to the cause of Liberalism through the colums of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Charles Watts, perhaps the greatest Debater of our time, certainly the foremost Secular orator of England, will send us monthly letters from England with all the news of our movement there and such reflections and pertinent observations as will surely make every English Secularist living in this country and Canada want to read THE TRUTH SEEKER. George E. Macdonald, one of the rarest combinations of humorist, satirist, philosopher, logician, has been engaged to write regularly for our columns. As the "Man With the Badge Pin," he is known to nearly all the Liberals of the country and we are willing to make him known to more.

THE TRUTH SEEKER gives all the news of Freethought, and is always on Guard Against the Encroachments of Ecclesiastics upon the People's Liberties.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is devoted to the defense of Mental Liberty, of American Institutions, and the Preservation of the United States Constitution, so far as regards religious tests and the maintenance of human rights. It advocates the abolition of all laws based on religion or religious observances. It demands the taxation of church property. It is uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of church and state, either in name or in fact.

The Sunday Question is now to the front all over the country. On that THE TRUTH SEEKER will voice the demands of the Liberal minded men and women of the country, and nowhere else will the rights of the people as against Puritanism be found so sturdily defended.

To sum it up, THE TRUTH SEEKER is the biggest, best, and bravest Freethought journal in the world, and if you are a Liberal or Freethinker, you want it and ought to take it. We appeal also to fair-minded Christians to hear our side and then decide. Bigots and fanatics, we suppose, wouldn't take it on any terms.

The Most Magnificent Work Ever Published by the Freethought Press.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The object of this work is to present the Course of Freethought throughout the Civilized World for the last Four Centuries, from the time of Columbus and Bruno to the time of Ingersoll.

It will be a radical Historic Record of the Greatest Developments of the Human Race.

It will reveal Freethought as an Intellectual, Moral, Literary, Social, Industrial, and Political Movement.

It will show what Freethought is in itself and how manifold are its influences, and with what hope and promise we can hail its future triumph.

"Four Hundred Years of Freethought" will Embrace the most Illustrious Pages of Human History,

adorned with the brightest Genius, radiant with the most splendid Poetry, rich with the greatest Inventions and Discoveries and ennobled with Freedom's most shining advance.

Nothing Can be More Interesting,

more inspiring to the Pioneer Workers of to-day—to those who are still in the van for Human Rights and Progress. The struggle is not ended and what is already won must be carefully guarded. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; and from the Past we must ever learn Great Lessons for the Future.

NO LIBERAL CAN AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THIS BOOK.

It will contain the Greatest Thoughts and the Greatest Deeds of the Greatest Men

In One Harmonious and Magnificent Whole,

a vivid picture of man's sublimest evolution, with the added glory of

from the chains and slavery of a barbaric creed and church.

THE FIRST PART of the book will deal with Freethought as a Universal Power, as a Spirit, a Method, a prevailing but unorganized Influence in every Department of Human Growth.

THE SECOND PART will deal with Freethought as an Organized Movement, especially in America and Europe; and this history is of equal importance with the first, and should be justly understood and the Pioneers of our work recognized.

The first part will embrace the following Grand Departments:

Philosophy.	Science.	Education and Ethics.	Literature.		Government and Politics.		Woman's Emancipation.
Bruno.	Copernicus.	Bacon.	Boccaccio.	Lessing.	Voltaire.	Gambetta.	Madame Roland.
Spinoza.	Galileo.	Comenius.	Rabelais.	Schiller.	Roussean.	Castelar.	Mary Wollstoncraft.

					Heinzen.		Helen H. Gardener.
							Annie Besant.

THE PORTRAITS OF THESE ILLUSTRIOUS REFORMERS

in every domain of Human Thought and Progress will adorn the pages of this volume.

The Second Part of this volume will be devoted especially to organized Freethought and the Liberal Press in modern times. The Truth Seeker, Investigator, Ironclad Age, Secular Thought, Freethinkers' Magazine, Independent Pulpit, Lucifer, the Freethinker, Agnostic Journal, etc.

It will give a history of the

GREAT INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

at Chicago, the Freethought Federation of America, the American Secular Union, the various state and local organizations, the Canadian Secular Union, the British Secular Union, and other Liberal associations throughout the world.

It will contain the portraits of those who, up to the present time, have been identified with Freethought work—editors, lecturers, officers of societies, and those who, as representative men, have won distinction in other fields of effort. There will be the portraits of

Horace Seaver,	George E. Macdonald,	Capt. R. C. Adams,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Sr.,	Susan H. Wixon,
J. P. Mendum,	E. M. Macdonald,	John R. Charlesworth,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.,	Mrs. Charles Watts,

T. B. Wakeman,	Saladin,	E. A. Stevens,	James Parton,	Lillian Leland,
Judge C. B. Waite.	J. R. Monroe,	H. L. Green,	Abner Kneeland,	Amy Post.

and other men and women who have contributed to the advancement of Freethought and whose names should be remembered throughout the Liberal ranks. There will also be about

ONE HUNDRED BIOGRAPHIES,

and in these will be given a picture of Freethought progress which will be most interesting and valuable, for it is in individuals that we find the best interpretations of the age.

The Price of This Superb Book is $5.00,

and not for the same amount of money can there be found such an array of facts, such a survey of history, and such a galaxy of Freethought.

Mr. Putnam is now devoting his whole time to this work and it will be published at the earliest possible moment.

The name of every Subscriber who sends five dollars before the work is on the press will be enrolled in this book. DON'T FAIL TO SUBSCRIBE AT ONCE.

This book will contain

Over Six Hundred Pages of Printed Matter and Over One Hundred Portraits.

It will be elegantly bound. It will be a book for the home and the fireside. It will be a book to give to your friends when they ask, What is Freethought—what has it done and what is it doing in the world?

This is the most universal presentation of Freethought ever given to the public, and no Freethinker can afford to be without it. It is a library in itself.

HOW TO GET FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT FREE

SPECIAL OFFER.

We have made arrangements with Mr. Putnam whereby we are enabled to make our friends a most generous offer.

We need more subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and every Freethinker needs "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." Not all are able to pay $5 for it, but everyone can do a little work to obtain a copy — congenial work, that will do great good all around. This is the offer:

Send us Four New Yearly Subscribers at regular rates ($12 in all), and we will send the Getter-up of the Club a copy of "FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT," FREE OF CHARGES.

And further, to aid our friends in getting this book for themselves, we will offer

To the New Subscribers as a Premium,

post free, a copy in boards of

Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated

By WATSON HESTON,

THE GREATEST BOOK OF ITS KIND EVER CONCEIVED.

Or, if preferred, a copy cloth-bound of

W. S. BELL'S

Handbook of Freethought.

With these Splendid Works as premiums there ought to be no difficulty in getting hundreds of clubs of subscribers.

Remember, to the Getter-up of The Club, FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT, free.

To each New Subscriber in the club, a premium of a Dollar Book—either "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought," in Cloth—all free by post or express.

This really brings the price of the paper down to $2 to each new subscriber, as they get THE TRUTH SEEKER one year and a dollar book for $3.

A Club of Four New Subscribers and $12 ($3 only from each) does this.

We want to extend our circulation, and we want to help our friends to help us.

It ought not to be difficult to get four New Subscribers in any town in the country, especially with these Splendid Premiums to assist.

Those who get up these Clubs will receive their copies of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" as soon as the book is issued.

Those who send a Club and Four New Subscribers and $12 before the book is printed, will have their names enrolled in its shining pages.

The Colonial "Blue" Laws—II.

Last week under this head we answered questions of correspondents who wished to know if there ever were such statutes as are commonly known as the "Blue Laws." We quoted from Alice Morse Earle's "The Sabbath in Puritan New England" the statement that although "the so-called 'false blue laws' of Connecticut · · · were worded by Dr. Peters · · · and though in detail not correct, they are in spirit true records of the old Puritan laws." We then gave from Miss Earle's pages the records of numerous punishments inflicted under those laws, for Sabbath-breaking, non-attendance at church, criticisms of the clergy, and other theological offenses. Following this will be found transcripts of various laws of the early New England colonies. We hav room for but a few of those which were intended to enforce conformity to the views of the orthodox lawmakers, but these we giv will be sufficient to show the nature and purpose of the entire mass. We find these intolerant statutes in Lewis's "Critical History of Sunday Legislation."

In 1651 Plymouth colony decreed:

"It is enacted by the court that whatsoever person or persons shall neglect the frequenting the public worship of God that is according to God, in the places where they liv, or do assemble themselvs upon any pretense whatsoever, contrary to God and the allowance of the government, tending to the subversion of religion and churches, or palpable profanation of God's holy ordinances, being duly convicted, viz., everyone that is a master or dame of a family, or any other person at their own disposing, to pay ten shillings for every such default" ("Records," Vol. XI., pp. 57-8).

Also this:

"Enacted by the court, that if any in any lazy, slothful or profane way doth neglect to come to the public worship of God, shall forfeit for every such default ten shillings, or be publicly whipped" ("Records," Vol. XI., p. 58).

In 1682 the same colony enacted this "ticket-of-leave" law:

"To prevent profanation of the Lord's day by foreigners, or any others, unnecessarily traveling through our towns on that day: It is enacted by the court that a fit man in each town be chosen, unto whom, whomsoever hath necessity of travel on the Lord's day in case of danger of death or such necessitous occasions, shall repair, and making out such occasions satisfyingly to him, shall receive a ticket from him to pass on about such like occasions, which if the traveler attend not unto it shall be lawful for the constable or any man that meets him to take him up and stop him until he be brought before authority, or pay his fine for such transgression, as by law in that case provided. And if it after shall appear that his plea was false, then may he be apprehended at another time and made to pay his fine as aforesaid" ("Records," Vol. XI., p. 258).

Other days also fell under the ban, as is shown by this Plymouth edict:

"It is enacted that none shall presume to attend servile work or labor or attend any sports on such days as are or shall be appointed by the court for humiliation by fasting and prayer, or for public thanksgiving, on penalty of five shillings" ("Records," Vol. XI., p. 258).

Concerning Massachusetts Bay colony the historian Hutchinson says:

"In the first draught of the laws by Mr. Cotton, which I hav seen corrected with Mr. Winthrop's hand, diverse other offenses were made capital, viz., profaning the Lord's day in a careless or scornful neglect or contempt thereof." (Num. 15, 30-36.) ("History of Massachusetts," Vol. I., p. 390.)

In 1646 the general court of this colony decreed:

"That wheresoever the ministry of the Word is established, according to the order of the gospel, throughout this jurisdiction, every person shall duly resort and attend thereunto, respectivly, upon the Lord's days and upon such public fast days and days of thanksgiving as are to be generally held by the appointment of authority. And if any person within this jurisdiction shall, without just and necessary cause, withdraw himself from hearing the public ministry of the Word, after due means of conviction used, he shall forfeit for his absence from every such public meeting five shillings" ("Records," Vol. II., p. 178).

Our present-day Sabbatarians are very fearful lest religious exercises be disturbed by people who work or seek recreation on Sunday, no matter how far the scenes of their activities be removed from the churches, and in this they are merely following in the footsteps of the Massachusetts Puritans. In 1658 the general court formulated this:

"Whereas by too sad experience it is observed, the sun being set, both every Saturday and on the Lord's day, young people and others take liberty to walk, and sport themselvs in the streets or fields in the several towns of this jurisdiction, to the dishonor of God and the disturbance of others in their religious exercises. · · · Every such person so found, complained of, and proved transgressing, shall pay five shillings for every such transgression, or suffer corporal punishment, as authority aforesaid shall determin" ("Records," Vol. IV., part i, p. 347).

Massachusetts Bay colony adopted many other similar ordinances relating to Sunday. Here is a sample of the local laws, this having been enacted by the general court for the town of Boston in 1679:

"For prevention of profanation of the Sabbath, and disorders on Saturday night, by horses and carts passing late out of the town of Boston, it is ordered and enacted by this court, that there be a ward, from sunset on Saturday night, until nine of the clock or after, consisting of one of the selectmen or constables of Boston, with two or more meet persons, who shall walk between the fortification and the town's end, and upon no pretense whatsoever suffer any cart to pass out of the town after sunset, nor any footman or horseman, without such good account of the necessity of his business as may be to their satisfaction; and all persons attempting to ride or drive out of town after sunset, without such reasonable satisfaction given, shall be apprehended and brought before authority to be proceeded against as Sabbath-breakers; and all other towns are empowered to do the like as need shall be" ("Records," Vol. V., pp. 239, 240).

The general court of 1667 ordered constables to "make diligent search" for Quaker meetings and when found, if refused admittance, to break into the building and seize the offenders. Massachusetts Bay and Plymouth colonies were united in 1691. From this date to 1760 witnessed a general increase in the severity of Sunday law penalties. In 1727 an act was passed forbidding funerals—except in extreme cases—on Sunday. It is significant that a strong movement in favor of the same restrictions is being promoted by many clerics and others at the present time, and with some measure of success already. The general court of the province of Massachusetts Bay repealed all the old Sunday statutes in 1760 and enacted a new law, the preamble to which read as follows:

"And whereas, it is the duty of all persons, upon the Lord's day, carefully to apply themselvs publicly and privately to religion and piety, the profanation of the Lord's day is highly offensiv to Almighty God; of evil example, and tends to the grief and disturbance of all pious and religiously disposed persons, therefore," etc.

Among the provisions of this law, as summarized by Mr. Lewis, we find these:

"Work or play, on land or water, is fined not less than ten shillings nor more than twenty shillings. Traveling by any one except in extremity, and then only far enough for immediate relief, is liable to the same penalty. Loitering, walking, or gathering in companies in 'streets, fields, orchards, lanes, wharves,' etc., is prohibited on pain of five shillings fine; and on a second conviction, the offender is required to giv bail for future obedience. Absence from public service for one month is fined ten shillings. No one is to assist at any funeral, not even to ring a bell, unless it be a licensed funeral, on penalty of twenty shillings fine. In Boston, however, a funeral might be attended after sunset without a license. The observance of the Sunday was to commence from sunset on Saturday."

The New Haven colony Sunday law was savage in its Old Testament severity:

"Whosoever shall profane the Lord's day or any part of it, either by sinful servile work, or by unlawful sport, recreation, or otherwise, whether willfully or in a careless neglect, shall be duly punished by fine, imprisonment, or corporally, according to the nature and measure of the sin and offense. But if the court upon examination, by clear and satisfying evidence, find that the sin was proudly, presumptuously, and with a high hand, committed against the known command and authority of the blessed God, such a person therein despising and reproaching the Lord, shall be put to death, that all others may fear and shun such provoking, rebellious courses." (Num. xv, 30-36.)

In 1665 the Connecticut colony absorbed that of New Haven. Here is the Connecticut law enforcing church attendance prior to the union:

"It is ordered and decreed by this court and authority thereof, that wheresoever the ministry of the Word is established according to the order of the gospel, throughout this jurisdiction, every person shall dulv resort and attend thereunto, respectivly upon the Lord's day and upon such public fast days and days of thanksgiving as are to be generally kept by the appointment of authority. And if any person within this jurisdiction shall, without just and necessary cause, withdraw himself from hearing the public ministry of the Word, after due means of conviction used, he shall forfeit for his absence from every such public meeting five shillings" ("Public Records prior to 1665," p. 524).

The united colony adopted a number of statutes of a similar tenor. Non-attendance upon church services, traveling, work, play, absence from one's house except for church attendance, going out from church unnecessarily during services, posting notices, or publishing them in any other way, were among the offenses prohibited under penalty of fines or confinement in the stocks. Whipping, the maximum being twenty stripes, was the penalty for non-payment of fines.

These laws of the colonies are not of interest to the literary antiquarian only. An activ, aggressiv, and powerful party animated by the spirit of the Puritans is to-day at work in this country. It has won many victories and year by year its demands become more greedy and insolent. So far it has not openly asked that people be punished by fine or imprisonment for not attending church, but it does demand that they remain shut up in their houses on Sunday if they do not take part in religious exercises. It does not very often say much about punishing heresy directly, but it clamors for the enforcement of existing and the passage of new laws which make it difficult or impossible for the dissenter to liv his belief, and it arrogantly says that no man should be permitted to hold a civil office unless he is "God-fearing." And this is but the beginning.

Wanted—New Subscribers.

We solicit the kind attention of our friends to the need which exists of increasing the subscription list of THE TRUTH SEEKER. There are several reasons for this, which our readers will readily see. First, It will do a world of good, by making more Liberals and by interesting those already liberal in the work of Freethought. The church is making great encroachments upon our liberties, and the people need to know about it, in order to defeat its tyranny. And those who read THE TRUTH SEEKER are a hundred times more interested and activ than those who do not. Second, It is a duty we owe to our fellow-men to giv them the light of reason we hav obtained. Liberalism makes for true civilization, and freedom from fear of an angry God makes men happier and better. Every Liberal should do all he can to lift up his neighbors from the darkness of superstition to the glorious plain of mental liberty. And, as Mr. Wakeman says, referring to the resolution regarding the Liberal papers passed at the late International Congress: "They are the very life of the cause of intellectual and practical emancipation of the people. As such they are to be built up and sustained by constant care, payment, encouragement, and solicitation for subscribers for them." Third, An increase in the list will relieve the readers from the occasional "duns" we are compelled to send out in order to get money with which to pay bills. If we can obtain two or three thousand new subscribers, the increased revenue will make the business work of the paper easier, and we can continue to improve the paper without fear of financial embarrassments.

To reward those who will do a little for us in this matter we hav arranged to take a large number of Mr. Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," and to every one who sends us four new yearly subscribers at the regular rates of $3 ($12 in all), we shall send a copy of that magnificent work free. Those who send the club before the book is on the press will be enrolled among the original subscribers and patrons in the book.

And to make it easy to get these four new subscribers we will offer them as a premium either of two spendid works—The "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought" in cloth binding. Our readers know the value of these books, and that about every Liberal in the country would like a copy of one or the other. Either one of these, as may be chosen, will be given to the new subscribers obtained in these clubs of four, and a copy of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" to the one who gets up the club and sends the money and names.

We cannot afford to make this premium to single subscribers, but to enable old subscribers and single new subscribers to obtain these and other desirable works at a great reduction, we hav made a list of premiums in connection with subscriptions to the paper, to be found in the first column of the first editorial page of THE TRUTH SEEKER. We are willing to do our part toward making the obtaining of good Liberal works easy and cheap, and hope our readers will take advantage of the terms offered.

Once more we ask that a favorable eye be turned in our direction, and a helpful hand extended. As the resolutions of the International Congress expressed it, Boom the Liberal papers and you boom the Liberal cause.

Our Protestant brethren are not likely to soon hear the last about the folly of "revising" the inerrant "word of God." Here is the latest cut of the lash of criticism. It is from the Catholic Review: "The Christian at Work is positiv that if modern scholarship has demonstrated anything, it is that the Vulgate at best is a poor translation, full of errors, transcribed by imperfect copyists, and wholly untrustworthy. How does it happen, then, that the revised version of the Bible, made recently by the best Protestant Biblical scholars in the world, is much nearer the Vulgate in almost all disputed passages than was the King James' edition?"

The lower house of the Ohio legislature recently voted down by a vote of 29 to 38 a motion to pay a chaplain two dollars per day for prayers. The Cleveland Evening Post says that "Mr. Brittain made a savage argument in opposition to the proposition," and that "Mr. Locke of Madison and Mr. Heinlein of Belmont fired a number of questions not germane to the subject at the author of the resolution, treating a pious matter in a very impious manner." It is probable that Mr. Brittain's argument is called "savage" because it contained a number of wholesome truths. As to the alleged impiety of the other gentlemen—well, some editors are not able to distinguish between loyal defense of religious liberty and "blasphemy."

The Deutsch Zeitung, of Vienna, had recently an article, said to hav been inspired by a high prelate, which contained this:

"It is perfectly true that the relations between the Vatican and the Austrian court are strained. The meeting at Monza between the emperors of Germany and Austria has done much to bring about this deplorable state of affairs. Austria must inevitably fall, unless proper respect is shown to his holiness, and the emperor should not forget his duty toward the Holy See."

Whereupon the Hungarian states-attorney seized the number of the paper containing the offensiv article, thus declaring open war on the hierarchy. The trouble between the Austrian government and the church has its source in the Hungarian civil marriage bill, which was approved by the emperor.

Henry Rowley, the popular Liberal lecturer of Brooklyn, recently took a few days off and visited England. When he returned the members of the Brooklyn Philosophical Association, rejoicing to hav him with them once more, made up a little purse of $63, which they brought over to New York and put in the hands of the publisher of THE TRUTH SEEKER, to pay for books for their favorit lecturer. No more fitting testimonial could hav been selected for this studious Liberal orator, and none which would hav been more welcome to him. Each book will bear this presentation card, the free offering of that prince of printers, Peter Eckler: "Presented by the members and friends of the Brooklyn Philosophical Association to Henry Rowley, Esq., as a token of their esteem, January, 1894."

The sore need of cash compels us to ask our friends to renew their subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER at the earliest convenient moment. The "hard times" hav hit us, but we must crawl through them somehow, and we turn with confidence to our readers. The amounts in individual cases are small and easy to pay, but the aggregate is large and we must hav it to meet expenses. We hav made such a combination of books and paper that everyone can get a get a good deal more than his money's worth, and attention is called to these offers. Purchasing books will help us also. But please renew your subscription now. We need it.

Freethought is in the world, of the world, and for the world. It knows no national boundary, no racial limitation. It is inevitably opposed to all forms of intolerance. It wages war against ecclesiastical tyranny because tyranny is unjust and hurtful, not because the tyrant is an Englishman, a Frenchman, a German, or an Italian. It is wholly beneath the dignity of Freethinkers to substitute epithets for arguments. When we make the name of the race or nation to which an opponent belongs into a missil to throw at him we cheapen ourselvs, degrade our cause, and nullify our efforts in behalf of liberty. Some Protestant critics of the Pope and Mgr. Satolli are guilty of calling them "dagos." This is infinitly vulgar and absolutely pueril. Others persistently speak of them as "Italians." It is true that they are Italians, but why divert attention from their offenses to their nationality? Is "Italian," in itself, a term of reproach? Some of the noblest workers in humanity's behalf hav been or are Italians. We want nothing to do with race-hatreds and national antipathies. These, next after religious jealousies, are the chief curses of the world. Nothing could be more trifling and less worthy of the noble mission of Freethought than sneers about the diet, dress, and other personal or national peculiarities of any people. The true cosmopolitan does not stare at and jeer the stranger in unconventional garb. That incivility is monopolized by street gamins and provincials.

Now and then a man with a mind of his own gets on a trial jury, sedulously as the law guards against such a catastrophe. Such happened to be the case in this city the other day. Our Atheist friend, David Rousseau, electrician, inventor of the electrical block signal system in use in the tunnel of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad north of Forty-second street, and erstwhile commodore of the Knickerbocker Yacht Club, was on the jury in Recorder Smyth's court which had in charge the case of a young barber who had cut another youth with a razor in self-defense. Mr. Rousseau was for acquittal and the other jurors for conviction, largely, it would seem, because they were in a hurry to get to lunch. Fourteen ballots were taken without any change in the vote, so Mr. Rousseau's intelligent associates asked that the jury be discharged, which was done. Then they presented to Assistant District Attorney O'Hare what they said was a list of the reasons Mr. Rousseau had given for refusing to agree to conviction. They said he was a Populist, Anarchist, and Socialist. Also, a woman suffragist. They also said that he believes men and women should liv on hay and grass, like animals. This because he had said that he considered a vegetarian diet the best. Of course no animals eat meat! They had charged him with being an Atheist. In an interview he says of this:

"The juror who I think wrote the letter also twitted me with being an Atheist and not having a regard for an oath. 'I am an Atheist,' I said, 'as are also many of the great men of the world. I suppose you believe that if you disregard an oath you will roast forever in hell. If you find any pleasure in that belief you are welcome to it. I don't believe it, but I prefer to keep the obligation I took when I affirmed, and prefer to remain upon good terms with myself."

It is safe to say that Mr. Rousseau was the most intelligent man on that jury, and the best qualified to judge as to the value of the evidence offered.

Next week we giv the third and last installment of the article on Parochial Schools. Those of the subjects promised for this week which are crowded out by lack of space will then appear. The investigation gains in interest and value as it is pushed, and we are sure that Freethinkers will be glad that we hav so developed the subject.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought.

I find it quite refreshing to lay off once in awhile from my task, and indulge in the pleasure of reading the friendly correspondence that comes to my desk; and as I cannot yet giv the book to the world, I think that my subscribers would enjoy as well as myself the prospects of success as shown in these communications. It would be pretty difficult to write this book without such encouragement, both mental and material, which I receive. The progress of the last four hundred years is so great and wonderful that its results bring into consideration almost the whole history of the world. Astronomy, geology, and evolution hav so radically changed men's ideas of the past that there is opened up a new field of research and "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" becomes in a manner a record of the whole universe. I am glad that my friends do not hurry me up; but on the contrary are ready to giv me plenty of time. I shall take the advice given in some of the following letters.

SUNAPEE, N. H., Dec. 21, 1893.

BROTHER PUTNAM: This note is simply to cheer you in the midst of the big job you hav on hand—your "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." If I could be put back twenty-five years, I might then express the wish that I could be at your elbow a part of the time, to aid you a little in the drudgery part of the huge undertaking, but about all I can with proprietry do now, at a distance, is to giv you perhaps what you don't need, a little friendly advice. Take time, Brother Putnam, take time. Do not hurry on that work, for, as I regard it, it will be your monument.

"Whatever is worth doing, is worth doing well," and although much of your matter is already before you in the works and lives of the great pioneers of Freethought, yet the book in its makeup should, and no doubt will, take on the condensed vigor of your well-known style.

W. C. STUROC.

Here is another:

BOSTON, MASS., Nov. 12, 1893.

DEAR FRIEND PUTNAM: I am looking for the time when you will hav your great book, "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," ready for delivery, but still I would rather wait until you had ample time to do full justice to the great cause, knowing you are competent to make it the greatest Freethought work of the century. As it takes time, money, and labor, and as those who devote themselvs to an unpopular cause hav to make great sacrifice, I take pleasure in inclosing $5 for the work, hoping that Freethinkers all over the land will stand shoulder to shoulder to you; and wishing the greatest success to the book, I remain, Yours respectfully, M. F. RUSH.

The following is from C. C. Fisk:

MILFORD, MASS., Jan. 1, 1894.

MR. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: I will inclose a a check for five dollars for a subscription to your book, "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," as soon as published.

It looks to me now that the Freethought Federation of America is an excellent thing, and I shall join it when I come to New York next spring. Woman suffrage ought to be added to the Nine Demands of Liberalism, because it is their right, and it is wrong to keep them away from the polls; although superstition might flourish more than it does now—as I think it would—we ought to add this demand to our platform before the church gets the start of us.

Wishing you and the Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER a Happy New Year, I am, Yours truly, C. C. FISK.

I giv another from Chas. F. Blackburn:

SEATTLE, WASH., Dec. 29, 1893.

MR. SAMUEL PUTNAM, Dear Sir: Please put my name on the list for a copy of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." I am with you from the very "bed rock" right up through the clouds into the clear light of mental liberty.

You are doing a grand, good work, and I am sure humanity will ever feel grateful for the authorship of so noble a work. "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," condensed as you know how, will be a splendid tool with which to demolish the false structures of superstition, and as our world is cursed with supernatural doctrins, a keen-cutting implement is needed with which to clear the track for progress, science, and reason.

Yours truly, CHAS. F. BLACKBURN.

While from the Capital come these encouraging words:

WASHINGTON, D. C.

S. P. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: For some time I hav been thinking to write you, but my time has been so employed that I hav put it off again and again, and still no letter to you. I want especially to express my gratification and pleasure in the knowledge that you are preparing so valuable and important a contribution to the Freethought literature of the last four hundred years as the work you are now engaged upon must unquestionably be.

It had been my intention to see you and others of our Liberal friends at Chicago, but in this I was disappointed. I did not get to Chicago at all. That Congress must hav been a grand occasion, as affording opportunity to giv the greatest of all modern questions—the question of the overthrow of the religious superstition and theological humbuggery of the world—a positiv advance move, an impetus which no other occasion could possibly afford.

A. J. BOYER.

These letters from veterans and pioneers in the field of Freethought who hav been engaged in the work themselvs for many years and who understand what it is—these and many other letters of a like tenor enable me to burn the "midnight oil" with courage and enthusiasm, and follow the march of human thought to its most glorious victories.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Freethought Progress.

When a "miraculous" picture of the "virgin and child" appeared on the glass of a window in a church at Canton, Minn., and the sick and infirm pious began to make pilgrimages to the place, Archbishop Ireland sent a scientific expert to examin the window. The expert found that a photographer had "subjected the pane of glass to a kind of treatment, under which, by means of a certain apparatus, the images were made to appear upon it." A number of other men in Canton were associated with the photographer, and they had all hoped to make money out of the scheme. Ireland put a stop to further exhibition of the window. The Medical World, after quoting the New York Medical Record's account of the delusion, says: "Such would be the outcome of about all the 'supernatural' stuff and nonsense, if it were submitted to scientific test." But it was some other agency than the parochial school which enlightened the world sufficiently to make it possible for Archbishop Ireland to employ a scientific expert to determin the character of an alleged church miracle. Don't forget that. ∴∴ "In the few pronouncements Christ makes on biblical questions, he takes those very views to which orthodoxy has ever clung, but which critical science now shows to be untenable."—Westminster Review. ∴∴ The Midwinter Fair at San Francisco is open on Sunday. The Fair being a purely private enterprise and California not being cursed with a Sunday law it was not difficult to keep it open. ∴∴ The non-conformist farmers in the Penrhyn district in Wales hav organized to resist the payment of the tithes due the clergy of the Church of England. This will probably result in the disestablishment of the Welsh church. ∴∴ W. B. Thompson, secretary of the Chatham Branch of the National Secular Society, has been elected to third place on the Gillingham School Board. Mr. Morris, who was elected with him, said in a sermon during the canvass that "he would not speak of Atheists and Infidels. He would not insult his hearers by warning them against the candidature of an awowed Atheist, a blasphemer of their God. Indelible disgrace would fall upon their church and parish if the election of such were possible. He would pass over it as an impossible event."

Fifty-four thousand voters in Switzerland hav petitioned that the Swiss delegation to the Universal Peace Congress be given an official character, and that the Peace bureau in Berne receive state aid.

We are the recipient of the Canada Revue, a very able journal, which we can heartily recommend to our French-reading subscribers. It is an organ of liberty and in its scholarly articles it shows no respect for ancient institutions merely because they are ancient. It is published in Montreal, 312 rue Craig. ∴∴ Thomas Paine is to hav a monumental tablet in Paris. It will be placed on the house he occupied while in that city. The municipal councillor likewise proposed to name a square after him. Paris is in France, not in the United States.

Viktor E. Lennstrand has resumed the editorial duties of Fritankaren.

Times are hard in Holland; at least, the church thinks so. At a recent auction of seats in the church of St. Anna three gülden only were realized. They used to fetch one thousand or more.

One after another pass away the glorious traditions of the holy land. The railroad has taken the place of the camel and ass, and in the garden of Gethsemane, the Galilean itinerant's favorit resort, concerts are now given every Sunday from 3 to 5 P.M. The band does not confine itself to hymns either. Strauss's waltz, "Blue Danube," figures on the program. The next thing that we will hear is that the "holy grave" has been transformed into a "Café Chantant."

Freidenker Almanach for 1894 has appeared. It contains several excellent articles on leading questions besides several good poems. We recommend the almanac to our German friends as the best extant. Published by the Freidenker Publishing Co., Milwaukee, Wis. ∴∴ Marquis Pandolfi is a regular contributor to Die Waffen Nieder, the monthly organ of the Universal Peace Society, and proves himself to be as valiant a defender of peace as he is of Freethought. The peace movement is constantly growing, and we would again advise our lecturers and societies to indorse and occasionally lecture on peace, as is the case among European Freethinkers, the national Federation of whom hav in their constitution a "demand" for disarmament and peace.

If Only We Knew!

Knowing little of the present and nothing of what is to come, I deem it better to liv than to enter into the unknown; and I hesitate to launch into that unknown any creature that I love.—M. De Cherville.

If only we knew where our loved ones go
When we say good-bye, in bitter pain,
And, without need of faith, would know for a truth
That after this life they liv again—
If only we knew!

If we knew that, at some glad, sweet time,
In some life after this, we should meet again
In a home e'en as lovely, and as fair a clime,
This life would lose most of its bitter pain—
If only we knew!

They promis a lovelier home, you know,
And a fairer clime to which we may go;
But I say, if 'twas all as good as this,
And we met again—what exquisit bliss!—
If only we knew!

Perhaps it is better, with all as it is,
With the future concealed, and the great plan of life
A veriest conjecture!—as well as what comes
After the sorrow, the joy, and the strife—
If only we knew!

Some say we need pain, for disciplin here;
Some, that our wills must be strengthened aright,
And some fill our souls with a horrible fear
By keeping a devil and hell in sight—
If only we knew!

Some say that this is the embryo state,
And must needs be borne for a future more great;
That doing right here will take us "up there"
To a heaven so glorious, lovely, and fair—
If only we knew!

I cannot see why 'twould not better hav been
To hav made it all plain to the children of men;
How sweet then to liv, tho' a life filled with tears,
With a future before us of unending years—
If only we knew!

If this were a truth, 'tis said, man his life
Would hold at small stake in the struggle for bread,
In the misery of crime, and of sorrow and strife,
Would by his own hand lay himself with the dead—
If only we knew.

But oh, the suspense—the pain of not knowing!
The suffering here!—not by our own doing—
Sad hearts, and e'en desperate ones might endure
If a new life to come was promised quite sure—
If only we knew!

The suspense of it all! 'Tis enough, I should think
To drive men mad when they stand on the brink—
And men go mad, and brave lives fall
Because of the mystery surrounding it all—
If only we knew!

The man of God—in reverence I say—
From the word of God doth point the way;
But he cannot say: "I know! I've seen!
I swear 'tis true!—for there I have been"—
This much we know.

The Bible! Ah, many a beautiful thought
From its pages I've learned with a trusting heart!
But oh—our father—he cannot be
Who for sins of earth rifts homes apart!—
This much we know!

Who longs for a heaven with loved ones in hell?
Who dreams of happiness, when those who fell
Because of temptation beyond their strength
Are damned through all eternity's length?—
Not one—we know!

Some hav lightly said, "This life is all!"
And little they reck of what they do,
But only minds that are narrow and small
Could be thus to themselvs untrue—
This much we know.

If we knew this was all there was of life,
We would be more loving—hav less of strife.
I think we'd be truer to our fellow-men
If we knew life covered so small a span—
If only we knew!

How many unkind things thoughtlessly said
To our darling loved ones, that caused them pain,
Would hav been unuttered had we known our dead
Would never come to us again—
Ah, this we know!

This also is certain—if we liv not again,
We'll be spared from knowing this much of pain,
And the sleep that comes with the last-drawn breath
Will be the unending sleep of death.
This much we know.

It is said, "Whatever is, is best;"
Oh, for a faith to believe it true!
'Tis hard to doubt, and not to know.
If we only knew 'twas better so—
If only we knew!

FACTS IN THE GALILEO CASE.

Gross Superstitions Which Are Taught in Romish Educational Institutions.— Historical Misstatements and Bald Lies Concerni g Religious Persecutions Examined and Disproved. Is the Inculcation of Scientific Truths Sectarian Teaching?—Some Statistics of Crime and Illiteracy.

II.

Andrew Dickson White, ex-president of Cornell University, in "New Chapters in the Warfare of Science," first published in the Popular Science Monthly, exhaustively examines this question in his fifteenth and sixteenth papers, "Astronomy" and "The Retreat of Theology in the Galileo Case," which were printed in 1892 in the periodical named, issues of March, April, and June. Mr. White's articles are the most valuable contributions to the discussion that have ever been made. The reader will understand why this is so when he is informed that no other author using the English language has written at length in the light shed by the publication of the Vatican documents which give the whole history of the trials of Galileo. Mr. White says:

"I shall present this warfare at some length, because, so far as I can find, no careful summary of it has been given in our language since the whole history was placed in a new light by the revelations of the trial documents in the Vatican Library, honestly published for the first time by M. L'Epinois, in 1867, and since that by Gebler, Berti, Favaro, and others."

While we shall quote much from "New Chapters in the Warfare of Science," our limited space compels us to leave out a great deal more which is very interesting and which flatly contradicts the assertions of Revs. Hennessy and Brennan.

Tracing the history of the struggle between Galileo and the church, Mr. White tells us that "The first important attack on Galileo began in 1610, when he announced that his telescope had revealed the moons of the planet Jupiter. The enemy saw that this took the Copernican theory out of the realm of hypothesis, and they gave battle immediately. They denounced both his method and its results as absurd and impious. · · · In vain did Galileo try to prove the existence of satellites by showing them to the doubters through his telescope; they either declared it impious to look, or, if they did look, denounced the satellites as illusions from the devil. · · · The war on the Copernican theory, which up to that time had been carried on quietly, now flamed forth. · · · But the little telescope of Galileo still swept the heavens, and another revelation was announced—the mountains and valleys in the moon. This brought on another attack. · · · Still another struggle was aroused when the hated telescope revealed spots upon the sun, and their motion indicating the sun's rotation. Monsignor Elci, head of the University of Pisa, forbade the astronomer Castelli to mention these spots to his students. Father Busaeus, at the University of Innspruck, forbade the astronomer Scheiner, who had also discovered the spots and proposed a safe explanation of them. to allow the new discovery to be known there. At the College of Douay and the University of Louvain this discovery was expressly placed under the ban, and this became the general rule among the Catholic universities and colleges of Europe. · · · The war became more and more bitter. The Dominican father, Caccini, · · · insists that 'geometry is of the devil,' and that 'mathematicians should be banished as the authors of all heresies.' The church authorities gave Caccini promotion. · · · The Archbishop of Pisa secretly sought to entrap Galileo and deliver him to the Inquisition at Rome. The Archbishop of Florence solemnly condemned the new doctrines as unscriptural; and Paul V., while petting Galileo, and inviting him as the greatest astronomer of the world to visit Rome, was secretly moving the Archbishop of Pisa to pick up evidence against the astronomer. · · ·

"The whole struggle to crush Galileo and to save him would be amusing were it not so fraught with evil. There were intrigues and counter-intrigues, plots and counter-plots, lying and spying; and, in the thickest of this seething, squabbling, screaming mass of priests, bishops, archbishops, and cardinals, strove two popes, Paul V. and Urban VIII. · · · But the opposing powers were too strong. In 1615 Galileo was summoned before the Inquisition at Rome, and the mine which had been so long preparing was sprung. Sundry theologians of the Inquisition having been ordered to examine two propositions which had been extracted from Galileo's letters on the solar spots, solemnly considered these points during about a month and rendered their unanimous decision as follows: 'The first proposition, that the sun is the center and does not revolve about the earth, is foolish, absurd, false in theology, and heretical, because expressly contrary to holy scriptures;' and 'the second proposition, that the earth is not the center but revolves about the sun, is absurd, false in philosophy, and, from a theological point of view at least, opposed to the true faith.' The Pope himself, Paul V., now intervened again; he ordered that Galileo be brought before the Inquisition. · · · De Lauda, fortified by a letter from the Pope, gives orders that the astronomer be placed in the dungeons of the Inquisition should he refuse to yield. Bellarmin now commands Galileo, 'in the name of his holiness the Pope and the whole Congregation of the Holy Office, to relinquish altogether the opinion that the sun is the center of the world and immovable, and that the earth moves, nor henceforth to hold, teach, or defend it in any way whatsoever, verbally or in writing.' This injunction Galileo acquiesces in and promises to obey.

"This was on the 26th of February, 1616. About a fortnight later the Congregation of the Index, moved thereto, as the letters and documents now brought to light show, by Pope Paul V., solemnly rendered a decree that 'the doctrine of the double motion of the earth about its axis and about the sun is false and entirely contrary to holy scripture;' and that this opinion must neither be taught nor advocated. The same decree condemned all writings of Copernicus and 'all writings which affirm the motion of the earth.' The great work of Copernicus was interdicted until corrected in accordance with the views of the Inquisition; and the works of Galileo and Kepler, though not mentioned by name at that time, were included among those implicitly condemned as 'affirming the motion of the earth.'

"The condemnations were inscribed upon the Index; and, finally, the papacy committed itself as a judge and a teacher to the world by prefixing to the Index the usual papal bull giving its monitions the most solemn papal sanction. To teach or even read the works denounced or passages condemned was to risk persecution in this world and damnation in the next. Science had apparently lost the decisive battle. · · ·

"Cardinal Barberini, who had seemed liberal and friendly, became pope under the name of Urban VIII. Galileo at this conceived new hopes, and allowed his continued allegiance to the Copernican system to be known. New troubles ensued. Galileo was induced to visit Rome again, and Pope Urban tried to cajole him into silence, personally taking the trouble to show him his errors by argument. Other opponents were less considerate, for works appeared attacking his ideas—works all the more unmanly since their authors knew that Galileo was restrained by force from defending himself. Then, too, as if to accumulate proofs of the unfitness of the church to take charge of advanced instruction, his salary as a professor at the University of Pisa was taken from him, and sapping and mining began" (Vol. XL., pp. 590–6).

"While news of triumphant attacks upon him and upon the truth he had established were coming in from all parts of Europe, Galileo prepared a careful treatise in the form of a dialogue, exhibiting the arguments for and against the Copernican and Ptolemaic systems, and offered to submit to any conditions that the church tribunals might impose if they would allow it to be printed. At last, after discussions which extended through eight years, they consented, imposing a humiliating condition—the preface written in accordance with the ideas of Father Ricciardi, Master of the Sacred Palace, and signed by Galileo, in which the Copernican theory was virtually exhibited as a play of the imagination, and not at all as opposed to the Ptolemaic doctrine reasserted in 1616 by the Inquisition under the direction of Pope Paul V.

"This new work of Galileo—the 'Dialogo'—appeared in 1632, and met with prodigious success. It put new weapons into the hands of the supporters of the Copernican theory. The pious preface was laughed at from one end of Europe to the other. This roused the enemy. The Jesuits, Dominicans, and the great majority of the clergy returned to the attack more violent than ever, and in the midst of them stood Pope Urban VIII., most bitter of all. His whole power was thrown against Galileo. · · · The opening strategy of Galileo's enemies was to forbid the sale of his work; but this was soon seen to be unavailing, for the first edition had already been spread throughout Europe. Urban now became more angry than ever, and both Galileo and his works were placed in the hands of the Inquisition. In vain did the good Benedictine, Castelli, urge that Galileo was entirely respectful to the church; in vain did he insist that 'nothing that can be done can now hinder the earth from revolving.' He was dismissed in disgrace, and Galileo was forced to appear in the presence of the dread tribunal without defender or adviser. There, as was so long concealed but as is now fully revealed, he was menaced with torture again and again by express order of Pope Urban, and, as is also thoroughly established from the trial documents themselves, forced to abjure under threats and subjected to imprisonment by command of the Pope; the Inquisition deferring in this whole matter to the papal authority. · · · The world knows now that Galileo was subjected certainly to indignity, to imprisonment, and to threats equivalent to torture, and was at last forced to pronounce publicly and on his knees his recantation, a follows:

"'I, Galileo, being in my seventieth year, being a prisoner and on my knees, and before your eminences, having before my eyes the Holy Gospel, which I touch with my hands, abjure, curse, and detest the error and the heresy of the movement of the earth.'

"He was vanquished indeed, for he had been forced, in the face of all coming ages, to perjure himself. To complete his dishonor, he was obliged to swear that he would denounce to the Inquisition any other man of science whom he should discover to be supporting the 'heresy of the motion of the earth.'

"Many have wondered at this abjuration, and on account of it have denied to Galileo the title of martyr. But let such gainsayers consider the circumstances. Here was an old man—one who had reached the allotted threescore years and ten, broken with disappointments, worn out with labors and cares, dragged from Florence to Rome, with the threat from the Pope himself that if he delayed he should be 'brought in chains'; sick in body and mind, given over to his oppressors by the grand duke who ought to have protected him, and on his arrival in Rome threatened with torture. What the Inquisition was he knew well. He could remember but as yesterday the burning of Giordano Bruno in that same city for scientific and philosophic heresy; he could remember, too, that only eight years before this very time De Dominis, archbishop of Spalatro, having been seized by the Inquisition for scientific and other heresies, had died in a dungeon, and that his body and his writings had been publicly burned.

"To the end of his life, nay, after his life was ended, the persecution of Galileo was continued. He was kept in exile from his family, from his friends, from his noble employments, and held rigidly to his promise not to speak of his theory. When, in the midst of intense bodily sufferings from disease and mental sufferings from calamities in his family, he besought some little liberty, he was met with threats of committal to a dungeon. When at last a special commission had reported to the ecclesiastical authorities that he had become blind and wasted with disease and sorrow, he was allowed a little more liberty, but that little was hampered by close surveillance. He was forced to bear contemptible attacks on himself and on his works in silence; to see the men who had befriended him severely punished; Father Castelli banished; Ricciardi, the Master of the Sacred Palace, and Ciampoli, the papal secretary, thrown out of their positions by Pope Urban, and the Inquisitor at Florence reprimanded for having given permission to print Galileo's work. He lived to see the truths he had established carefully weeded out from all the church colleges and universities in Europe, and when, in a scientific work, he happened to be spoken of as 'renowned,' the Inquisition ordered the substitution of the word 'notorious.'

"And now measures were taken to complete the destruction of the Copernican theory, with Galileo's proofs of it. On the 16th of June, 1633, the Holy Congregation, with the permission of the reigning Pope, ordered the sentence upon Galileo, and his recantation, to be sent to all the papal nuncios throughout Europe, as well as to all archbishops, bishops, and inquisitors in Italy; and this document gave orders that the sentence and abjuration be made known 'to your vicars, that you and all professors of philosophy and mathematics may have knowledge of it, that they may know why we proceeded against the said Galileo, and recognize the gravity of his error, in order that they may avoid it, and thus not incur the penalties which they would have to suffer in case they fell into the same.' · · ·

"Still another step was taken: The inquisitors were ordered, especially in Italy, not to permit the publication of a new edition of any of Galileo's works, nor of any similar writings. On the other hand, theologians were urged, now that Copernicus and Galileo and Kepler were silenced, to reply to them with tongue and pen. Europe was flooded with these theological refutations of the Copernican system. To make all complete, there was prefixed to the 'Index' of the church forbidding 'all writings which affirm the motion of the earth,' a bull signed by the reigning Pope, which, by virtue of his infallibility as a divinely guided teacher in matters of faith and morals, clinched this condemnation into the consciences of the whole Christian world. · · ·

"He had begged to be buried in his family tomb in Santa Croce; this request was denied. His friends wished to erect a monument over him; this, too, was refused. Pope Urban said to the ambassador, Niccolini, that 'it would be an evil example for the world if such honors were rendered to a man who had been brought before the Roman Inquisition for an opinion so false and erroneous; who had communicated it to many others, and who had given so great a scandal to Christendom.' In accordance, therefore, with the wish of the Pope and the orders of the Inquisition, Galileo was buried ignobly, apart from his family, without fitting ceremony, without monument, without epitaph. Not until forty years after did Pierrozzi dare write an inscription to be placed above his bones; not until a hundred years after did Nelli dare transfer his remains to a suitable position in Santa Croce and erect a monument above them. Even then the old conscientious hostility burst forth. The Inquisition was besought to prevent such honors to 'a man condemned for notorious errors'; and that tribunal refused to allow any epitaph to be placed above him which had not been submitted to its censorship" (pp. 729–35).

"During the seventeenth century in all France, after all the splendid proofs added by Kepler, no one dared openly teach the Copernican theory, and Cassini, the great astronomer, never declared it" (p. 740).

How pertinaciously the church clung to her condemnation of the Copernican system and the works of Copernicus and Galileo this will show:

"The edition of the Index published in 1819 was as inexorable toward the works of Copernicus and Galileo as its predecessors had been; but in the year 1820 came a crisis. Canon Settele, professor of astronomy at Rome, had written an elementary book in which the Copernican system was taken for granted. The Master of the Sacred Palace, Anfossi, as censor of the press, refused to allow the book to be printed unless Settele revised his work and treated the Copernican theory as merely a hypothesis. On this Settele appealed to Pope Pius VII., and the Pope referred the matter to the Congregation of the Holy Office. At last, on the 16th of August, 1820, it was decided that Settele might teach the Copernican system as established, and this decision was approved by the Pope. This aroused considerable discussion, but finally, on the 11th of September, 1822, the cardinals of the Holy Inquisition graciously agreed that 'the printing and publication of works treating of the motion of the earth and the stability of the sun, in accordance with the general opinion of modern astronomers, is permitted at Rome.' This decree was ratified by Pius VII., but it was not until thirteen years later, in 1835, that the condemnation of works defending the double motion of the earth was left out of the Index" (p. 742).

THEOLOGY ON THE RETREAT.

Of the "Retreat of Theology in the Galileo Case," President White adds much that is of interest and value in connection with the preceding. We quote:

"The retreat of the Protestant theologians was not difficult. A little skillful warping of Scripture, and a little skillful use of that time-honored phrase attributed to Cardinal Baronius, that the Bible is given to teach us, not how the heavens go, but how men go to heaven, sufficed. But in the older church it was far less easy. The retreat of the sacro-scientific army of church apologists lasted through two centuries.

"In spite of all that has been said by these apologists, there no longer remains the shadow of a doubt that the papal infallibility was committed fully and irrevocably against the double revolution of the earth. As the documents of Galileo's trial now published show, Paul V. pushed on with all his might the condemnation of Galileo in 1316, and the condemnation in that same year of the works of Copernicus and all others teaching the motion of the earth around its own axis and around the sun. So, too, in the condemnation of Galileo in 1633, and in all the proceedings which led up to it and which followed it Urban VIII. was the central figure. Without his sanction no action could have been taken. True, the Pope did not formally sign the decree against the Copernican theory then; but this came later: In 1664 Alexander VII. prefixed to the Index containing the condemnations of the works of Copernicus and Galileo and 'all books which affirm the motion of the earth,' a papal bull signed by himself, binding the contents of the Index upon the consciences of the faithful. This bull confirmed and approved in express terms, finally, decisively, and infallibly, the condemnation of 'all books teaching the movement of the earth and the stability of the sun.' The position of the mother church, then, was especially difficult. The first important move in retreat by the apologists was the statement that Galileo was condemned, not because he affirmed the motion of the earth, but because he supported it from Scripture. There was a slight appearance of truth in this. · · · But nothing can be more absurd, in the light of the original documents recently brought out of the Vatican archives, than to make this contention now. The letters of Galileo to Castelli and the grand duchess were not published until after the condemnation; and, although the Archbishop of Pisa had endeavored to use them against him, they were but casually mentioned in 1616, and entirely left out of view in 1633. What was condemned in 1616 by the Sacred Congregation held in the presence of Pope Paul V., as 'absurd, false in theology, and heretical, because absolutely contrary to Holy Scripture,' was the proposition that 'the sun is the center about which the earth revolves'; and what was condemned as 'absurd, false in philosophy, and from a theologic point of view, at least, opposed to the true faith,' was the proposition that 'the earth is not the center of the universe, and immovable, but has a diurnal motion.'

"And again, what Galileo was made, by express order of Pope Urban, and by the action of the Inquisition under threat of torture, to abjure in 1633 was 'the error and heresy of the movement of the earth.'

"What the Index condemned under sanction of the bull issued by Alexander VII. in 1664 was 'all books teaching the movement of the earth and the stability of the sun.'

"What the Index, prefaced by papal bulls, binding its contents upon the consciences of the faithful, for two hundred years steadily condemned, was 'all books which affirm the motion of the earth.'

"Not one of these condemnations was directed against Galileo 'for reconciling his ideas with Scripture.' Having been dislodged from this point, the church apologists sought cover under the statement that Galileo was condemned, not for heresy, but for contumacy, and for wanting in respect to the Pope. There was a slight chance, also, for this quibble: No doubt Urban VIII., one of the haughtiest of pontiffs, was induced by Galileo's enemies to think that he had been treated with some lack of proper etiquette; first, by Galileo's adhesion to his own doctrines after his condemnation in 1616; and, next, by his supposed reference in the Dialogue of 1632 to the arguments which the Pope had used against him. · · ·

"Again, as to the first point, the very language of the various sentences shows the folly of this assertion; these sentences speak steadily of 'heresy,' and never of 'contumacy.' As to the last point, the display of the original documents settled that forever. They show Galileo from first to last as most submissive toward the Pope, and patient under the papal arguments and exactions. He had, indeed, expressed his anger at times against his traducers; but to hold this the cause of the judgment against him is to degrade the whole proceedings, and to convict Paul V., Urban VIII., Bellarmin, the other theologians, and the Inquisition, of direct falsehood, since they assigned entirely different reasons for their conduct. From this position, therefore, the assailants retreated." · · ·

"The original documents of the Galileo trial had been brought during the Napoleonic conquests to Paris; but in 1846 they were returned to Rome by the French government, on the express pledge by the papal authorities that they should be published. In 1850, after various delays on various pretexts, the long-expected publication appeared. The personage charged with presenting them to the world was Monsignor Marini. This ecclesiastic was of a kind which has too often afflicted both the church and the world at large. Despite the solemn promise of the papal court, the wily Marini became the instrument of the Roman authorities in evading the promise. By suppressing a document here, and interpolating a statement there, he managed to give plausible standing-ground for nearly every important sophistry ever broached to save the infallibility of the church and destroy the reputation of Galileo. He it was who supported the idea that Galileo was 'condemned not for heresy, but for contumacy,' and various other assertions as groundless. · · ·

"But some time later came an investigator very different from Monsignor Marini. This was a Frenchman, M. L'Epinois. Like Marini, L'Epinois was devoted to the church; but unlike Marini, he could not lie. Having obtained access in 1867 to the Galileo documents at the Vatican, he published fully several of the most important, without suppression or piously-fraudulent manipulation. This made all the intrenchments based upon Marini's statements untenable. Another retreat had to be made."

"And now came the most desperate effort of all. The apologetic army, reviving an idea which the popes and church had spurned for centuries, declared that the popes as popes had never condemned the doctrines of Copernicus and Galileo; that they had condemned them as men simply; that therefore the church had never been committed to them; that the condemnation was made by the cardinals of the Inquisition and Index; and that the Pope had evidently been restrained by interposition of providence from signing their condemnation. · · · The facts are, that in the official account of the condemnation by Bellarmin, in 1616, he declares distinctly that he makes this condemnation 'in the name of his holiness the Pope.'"

"Again, from Pope Urban downward, among the church authorities of the seventeenth century, the decision was always acknowledged to be made by the Pope and the church. Urban VIII. spoke of that of 1616 as made by Pope Paul V. and the church, and of that of 1633 as made by himself and the church. Pope Alexander VII. in 1662, in his bull Speculatores, solemnly sanctioned the condemnation of all books affirming the earth's movement. When Gassendi attempted to raise the point that the decision against Copernicus and Galileo was not sanctioned by the church as such, an eminent theological authority, Father Lecarze, rector of the College of Dijon, publicly contradicted him, and declared that it 'was not certain cardinals, but the supreme authority of the church,' that had condemned Galileo; and to this statement the Pope and other church authorities gave consent either openly or by silence. When Descartes and others attempted to raise the same point, they were treated with contempt. Father Castelli, who had devoted himself to Galileo, and knew to his cost just what the condemnation meant and who made it, takes it for granted in his letter to the papal authorities that it was made by the church. Cardinal Querenghi, in his letters; the ambassador Guicciardini, in his dispatches; Polacco, in his refutation; the historian Viviani, in his biography of Galileo—all writing under church inspection and approval at the time, took the view that the Pope and church condemned Galileo, and this was never denied at Rome. The Inquisition itself, backed by the greatest theologian of the time, Bellarmin, took the same view. Not only does he declare that he makes the condemnation 'in the name of his Holiness the Pope,' but we have the Roman Index, containing the condemnation for nearly two hundred years, prefaced by a solemn bull of the reigning Pope binding this condemnation on the consciences of the whole church, and declaring year after year that 'all books which affirm the motion of the earth' are damnable. To attempt to face all this, added to the fact that Galileo was required to abjure 'the heresy of the movement of the earth' by written order of the Pope, was soon seen to be impossible. Against the assertion that the Pope was not responsible we hav all this mass of testimony, and the bull of Alexander VII. in 1664. · · ·

"In 1870 a Roman Catholic clergyman in England, the Rev. Mr. Roberts, · · · published a book entitled 'The Pontifical Decrees against the Earth's Movement.' In this were exhibited the incontrovertible evidences that the papacy had committed itself and its infallibility fully against the movement of the earth. The Rev. Mr. Roberts showed from the original record that Pope Paul V., in 1616, had presided over the tribunal condemning the doctrine of the earth's movement, and ordering Galileo to give up the opinion. He showed that Pope Urban VIII., in 1633, pressed on, directed, and promulgated the final condemnation, making himself in all these ways responsible for it. And, finally, he showed that Pope Alexander VII., in 1664, by his bull, Speculatores domus Israel, attached to the Index, condemning 'all books which affirm the motion of the earth,' had absolutely pledged the papal infallibility against the earth's movement. He also confessed that under the rules laid down by the highest authorities in the church, and especially by Six-tus V. and Pius IX., there was no escape from this conclusion.

"Various theologians attempted to evade the force of the argument. Some, like Dr. Ward and Bouix, took refuge in verbal niceties; and some, like Dr. Jeremiah Murphy, comforted themselves with declamation. The only result was that in 1885 came another edition of the Rev. Mr. Roberts's work, even more cogent than the first; and, besides this, an essay by that eminent Catholic, St. George Mivart, acknowledging the Rev. Mr. Roberts's position to be impregnable, and declaring virtually that the Almighty allowed pope and church to fall into complete error regarding the Copernican theory in order to teach them that science lies outside their province, and that the true priesthood of scientific truth rests with scientific investigators alone."

A Catholic writer in the Dublin Review endeavors to throw the blame of the Church's opposition to the new astronomy upon God. Mr. White quotes him as follows:

"But it may well be doubted whether the Church did retard the progress of scientific truth. What retarded it was the circumstance that God has thought fit to express many texts of Scripture in words which have every appearance of denying the earth's motion. But it is God who did all this, not the Church; and, moreover, since he saw fit so to act as to retard the progress of scientific truth, it would be little to her discredit, even if it were true, that she had followed his example."

We perceive that Whewell's testimony in favor of the church is valueless, because he wrote before the Vatican Library was opened to the world, and hence did not have access to documents of the greatest importance; that Galileo was punished for heresy; that the doctrines of Copernicus and Galileo were condemned by popes teaching ex-cathedra, and that this fact was understood at the time and for hundreds of years subsequently, and has been acknowledged by eminent Catholics, including St. George Mivart, in recent years; that at the time of Galileo's condemnation the Copernican system was not generally accepted—that, in fact, the teaching of its principles was forbidden in Catholic schools then and long thereafter; that two popes were active in the fight against Galileo and in the attempt to suppress the new astronomy; that Galileo suffered keen mental torture during the term of his imprisonment, and that he is but one of the great number of scientific thinkers persecuted and silenced by the church.

(CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

News and Notes.

Northport is quite an orthodox place. The old Puritan spirit still prevails there, and the churches present a solemn appearance. Notwithstanding this the free modern spirit sweeps in with the Atlantic gales, and keeps things on the move. There are a few here who are willing to be counted for Liberalism, and to do some work in that direction. Charlesworth has already broken the ground and the clergy hav become quite excited. The discussion overflows the local precincts into the Brooklyn papers, and interests even the metropolitan community. So it was thought best to keep the tidal wave in motion, and it was arranged that I should giv three lectures on January 18th, 19th, and 20th, which I did; and it was certainly in every respect a fruitful movement. There was a pretty good number present on the first evening, when I lectured upon the "Bible;" although there were revival meetings going on, receptions, etc., in the various church edifices. The second evening a much larger number were present and after the lecture on "Liberalism and Christianity" an invitation was extended for a discussion upon the points presented. The Methodist minister stepped forward. He said that he was surprised that I had said so many things with which he could agree. However, he would like to find some fault. He demurred to my definition of Infidel; namely, an unbeliver in the popular creed—a doubter, a denier—which of course made Jesus, Luther, and Wesley Infidels. He did not like to hav Jesus classed as an Infidel, but he had to admit finally that Jesus did deny, and did set himself against the established usage, custom, and belief of his time. He was an Infidel in spirit, though not reaching the same results as the Infidel of to-day. My reverend friend was apparently quite astonished when I told him that Thomas Paine was a believer in a God, and so profound a believer that he wrote a most noteworthy argument to prove God's existence. After this it seems that Thomas Paine will be in the preacher's calendar of saints; no longer "Tom Paine," but St. Thomas. However, my clerical critic, although I think he tried to be fair, could not help performing the usual orthodox dodge of wandering from the question at issue. He had to lug in my "Religion a Curse," etc., although I had not made the matter of that book the question before the house at all. He gave some garbled extracts from the book in such a jumble that I would not hav recognized my own offspring had he not told me. It was a case, on his part, of intellectual malpractice and abortion. I told the gentleman that I would defend my book from beginning to end, but for the present, as I had presented a certain line of argument, I would like that disposed of first. He had quoted the expression that "all hypocrits are in the church." I told him this was necessarily true, for no man was a hypocrit except for gain. There is no gain in being an avowed Infidel; but there is gain in being a Christian, either by profession or church attendance, and therefore all hypocrits must be Christians. This is as plain as that two and two are four.

At this point a young man, big with question, arose and talked, and I couldn't at first make out what he was driving at. However, it came out at last that he wanted to know if I came to Northport and lectured for a "consideration." I answered that the "consideration" was none of his business; that it had nothing at all to do with the argument any more than what I ate for dinner. He wanted to make this point—that I had some temptation to pretend to be an Infidel, because, forsooth, I didn't lecture for nothing. I answered to this point that I could get in the service of the church one hundred dollars where I now get ten in the service of Infidelity. If I made up my mind to be a hypocrit I should certainly make a good bargain of it and sell myself to the highest bidder. According to this sharp young man, the only way an Infidel could prove his sincerity was to labor for nothing and starve to death.

It will thus be seen how the clergymen and their supporters fly off from any question at issue. It is almost impossible to bring them within the domain of parliamentary rules. However, the audience was interested in the desultory fire of discussion, and on the last evening I had the largest audience of all, and I had an opportunity to giv a discourse, which no doubt set many to thinking, on the "Rights of Man"—the most important and fundamental question of Freethought. This included a discussion of church taxation, the secularization of the schools, etc. After I had got through, discussion was invited; but the chairman rightly insisted that there should be no personalities or wandering from the subject matter of the lecture. The Rev. Mr. Saunders again took the floor. He expressed himself as in favor of taxation, not because it was just, but to stop the growling of the Infidels. I answered him that I was glad of his conversion on any grounds whatsoever, but that it would be much better to do a thing because it was right and not because somebody growled. But if growling was effectual to make the clergy respect human rights, growling there should be.

The Rev. Mr. Saunders was quite disturbed at the fact of Christian persecutions in this republic, and desired to know the names, etc., of those who had been imprisoned, sent into exile, put into the chain-gang, etc. I gave him the names and assured him that I would present many more facts on this point. He said it sounded like the story of Siberia. I answered that I certainly thought it did; that beneath our flag horrors occurred as in that despot-stricken land.

The discussion on various points lasted about half an hour, and it was evident that a great interest had been aroused among the people. As agitation is the beginning of Freethought, there is no doubt that progress will be made in Northport. There is certainly a good nucleus of Liberals here with conviction and enthusiasm, and the flag now flung to the breeze will not be hauled down.

Mr. J. K. Rudyard presided the first evening and Mr. John W. Olmsted the last two evenings. I enjoyed the hospitable home of Dexter K. Cole. I spent Friday on his steamboat. It was a lovely day, and the landscapes and water views were delightful as we sped along or floated over the oyster beds. I had all the oysters I could eat, fresh, roasted, etc., right from the depths of the sea, and they were delicious. It would be quite a pleasure to liv always on the water like this. It would be a beautiful, dreamy existence. Capt. John Scott gave me a drive over to Huntingdon, Oyster Bay, etc., and on a bright, shining winter's afternoon this was a pleasing journey. There are elegant residences all along, groves and lawns, and the blue waters are to be seen far away, glittering against the varied shores. Mr. N. L. Pidgeon, who has been keeping up quite a discussion with Rev. Mr. Saunders in the newspapers, accompanied me Sunday morning on my homeward journey. In every way I hav enjoyed this Northport trip. There has not been a dull moment in it. I hav found many new friends, and I am sure that our cause is progressing.

I leave Northport Sunday morning and Sunday afternoon I find myself again with my Newark friends, and a crowded house greets me. President Bird is on hand. A new Freethinker has come into existence since I saw him last, "fresh as the morn and brilliant as its star;" and the future shines with its ever-renewing promis. There is a lively discussion after the lecture, which is upon the "Bible."

I spend the evening with Mr. Bentley Bamforth. He is from England, a campaigner with Bradlaugh twenty-five years ago. It was a pleasure to meet his family, all in the atmosphere of Freethought.

I leave this week for Cincinnati and Chicago. I shall hav to mingle lecturing with book-writing for the present. But the "Four Hundred Years" is coming toward completion. I am doing all that can possibly be done to meet the expectations of my subscribers.

TO LIBERAL FRIENDS AND MEMBERS OF THE FREETHOUGHT FEDERATION.

In carrying on the campaign for the present year it is best to concentrate our efforts at the most available point. We must not scatter our fire. Our forces are few and our means are not great. We must make the most of them, and this can only be done by a selection of the field of work.

The ecclesiastical party at Washington will no doubt make a further effort for Sabbath legislation, and we shall watch them; while it is evident that they will not be able to accomplish much in this direction. Our labor at this point would be mainly negativ, to prevent and not to initiate any advance movement. There are too many other questions before the country. The opportunity is not favorable for progress, only for self-defense.

But there is an opening for great and positiv work at the Constitutional Convention of New York state. There is an ever-increasing sentiment in favor of church taxation. Protestant clergymen hav recently given utterance to pronounced views approving of such taxation. They see the danger and acknowledge the injustice of the exemption of church property from bearing its share in the support of government. It is time to take advantage of this growing agitation in the community. The Liberals can unite with the fair-minded adherents of the churches and push this reform before the convention. While we should remit no effort for the secularization of the schools and the abolition of Sabbath laws, yet there is at present the greatest promis of victory in a combined and determined effort for the taxation of church property in the state of New York.

I hav therefore determined, in view of the advantages offered by this Constitutional Convention, to devote my whole time to that convention when it meets; to prepare petitions, arrange our forces, and concentrate effort upon the point of equal and impartial taxation. If we can succeed here, it will be an opening for future successes of great importance. It is an opportunity not to be neglected, whatever may be the result. The church party will certainly be on hand, and the Liberals cannot afford to be idle when the fundamental law of the land is being declared.

It is best to hav something definit in view for our work always—not merely general work—and the definit field now chosen is the Constitutional Convention of New York state. I am sure that every Liberal throughout the country will realize the importance of this move, for a victory here will tell for freedom all over the land. But especially should New York Liberals be interested in this matter and aid to every possible extent.

Of course, this requires some money—not much—but something from every Liberal. Let us be awake and join forces and furnish the sinews of war.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

DR. E. B. FOOTE, JR., lectured last Sunday before the Brooklyn Philosophical Association on "Microbes: Their Place in Nature." The lecture was delivered in the doctor's usual mild manner. On January 18th, the association elected a new board of officers: President, Henry Rowley; vice-president, R. E. Lowe; treasurer, W. Winham; corresponding secretary, T. Dientze; recording secretary, Edward Dobson. Classes for young men who desire to join will be held at houses of members once a week. The subjects to be discussed cover a wider range than those of the Young Men's Christian Association. They intend to disseminate the truths of science at least as widely as their Christian opponents sow the errors of mythology.

Observations.

A circular from the Department for the Promotion of Purity in Literature and Art is at hand. The "department" is evidently a branch of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, as its national superintendent, Mrs. Emilie D. Martin, has her office with Anthony Comstock in the Times building. It is also the smutty end of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, to the members of which organization Mrs. Martin addresses her circular. The object of the department is to organize the women into a vigilance committee to smell out and suppress "matters which cannot be discussed at the family table and which are not admitted into polite society." The places to be investigated are "the home, the church, the Sunday-school, public schools and colleges, the press, news-stands, railroad trains, the mails, and theatrical bill boards." The Bible is to be introduced everywhere in order that its healing leaves may cure the evil; the "objectionable" matter is to be seized and its purveyors prosecuted according to the Comstock law.

As a person of sensibility, I cannot help feeling a shade of sorrow for Mrs. Martin, whose derangement has made her capable of preparing that sort of a program, and for her sister sufferers who may feel themselvs competent to carry it out. I am sorry for them, but I am a good deal sadder when I think of the fate of the people with whom they may chance to come in contact. There are several reasons why these ladies should shut up and subside. In the first place, they are not at all well, and should lose no time in consulting a reputable physician. I would recommend Dr. Foote of Lexington avenue. As he is acquainted with the symptoms and has diagnosed the case, he could prescribe without any of those delays that are proverbially dangerous. In the second place, we hav so much government now that it is difficult to feel patriotic toward the whole of it, without a lot of women unknown to the statute going about making female complaints against citizens. In the third place, they propose to cultivate the blindest ignorance regarding subjects a knowledge of which is important, and to suspend the processes by which the thoughts of men are broadened. If the wise are not to be permitted to explain young persons to themselvs, the young persons are very likely to undertake the task on their own account, with erroneous conclusions and deplorable results. Fourthly, the women of the Department for the Promotion of Purity in Literature and Art are making an indelicate revelation. A quarrelsome cat, being unfamiliar with itself, will scratch at its image in a mirror. These females, in their crusade against what they think indecent in a book or picture, attack it without stopping to think that its apparent indecency is only a reflection of their own minds. They invest the objectionable work with the depravity resident in themselvs, even as they invest the Bible with their notions of virtue.

If there is a sensible woman in the Department for the Promotion of Purity in Literature and Art, I would be pleased to know how she accounts for her course in seeking to expunge every-day literature from the family circle and to replace it with the unexcelled foulness of the Bible. We must decline to engage our scullions at the Department's intelligence office if, after the unavoidable refuse has been cleared away, something much worse is to be substituted.

Few strollers along the shores of streams or bodies of water used for pleasure-boating can hav failed to observe that the same are strewn with the relics of abortiv inventions designed to supersede oars for propelling row-boats. I hav seen them everywhere, from Chesterfield pond in New Hampshire to the Harlem river, and from the Harlem to Puget sound. Every boat-builder has probably dreamed of a craft so constructed that the person propelling it may "look out ahead" without twisting his neck till he sees stars and gets red in the face. For this purpose hav been invented oars with joints in them, boats with side-wheels turned by cranks, aquatic bicycles, and catamarans with paddle-wheels between the two hulls. On the Harlem a few years ago I saw a floating arrangement with four wheels, the wheels being hollow and air-tight, and supplying the necessary buoyancy. The inventor worked it by means of treadles and got ahead about as fast as a horse treading for a thrashing machine. The defect of these craft is that they need a favoring wind and tide and a tow-boat in order to make as much speed as a longshoreman sculling a raft.

It was left to Mr. J. S. Martin of Snohomish, Wash., to show that a row-boat can be made to go fast without the use of oars. For some years he observed strong men tugging against the tide or current of the Snohomish river without seeming to get anywhere. He saw the Siwash canoe hugging the shore, hunting eddies, following all the crooks of the stream, and making a mile an hour. He also thought of Eldridge Morse slowly and laboriously climbing the riffle at Fiddler's Bluff, and thus consuming time that might be more profitably spent discussing Spencer with Justice Burton. Mr. Martin had read THE TRUTH SEEKER for many years, and had learned that man progresses to the degree that he conquers and subdues the forces of nature; and, being a boat-builder, he recognized that it would be within his domain or bailiwick to build a boat that would overcome the natural forces of the river upon which he dwelt. I do not know how many boats and failures he made or how much money he spent before he made a success, but I remember that about once a month during our residence in the neighborhood he gave notice that he was going to launch his hand-power boat, and invited me to be his guest on trial trips which never came off. Nor can I describe the various devices he adopted. One of them, though, involved a propeller, and a big spiral spring in which he designed to store power to help things get past the dead center. It wouldn't work. The cogs and ratchets made a terrible roaring, but the boat failed to proceed. The spiral spring I took off the inventor's hands and set it to flipping the fly of a newspaper press in the Eye office.

Each of Martin's failures must hav given a yank on the old man's pneumogastric nerve like that felt by a person who has started a paper in a good cause and had to suspend, but he never gave up. He discontinued his announcements of successiv launches, and put his new boats overboard in the night. But a few months before I left Snohomish, he had "made the riffle" so far as inventing a practical hand-power was concerned, and was prepared to climb any riffle in the adjacent streams. His successful boat has a light stern-wheel ingeniously connected with levers amidships, where the rower sits with his nose pointed in the direction he desires to travel. Attaching himself to the levers, an alternate forward and backward motion of his elbows sends the boat scooting ahead. I use the word scooting after due delibration, for it accurately states the fact. The exertion required is not great; no headway is lost by the recover, as in rowing, when a man must shut himself up like a jack-knife, driving his stomach upward into the cavity of the chest and squeezing the wind out of his lungs. Neither is there any spattering, unshipping of oars, fishing for crabs, or rear-end collisions with the bottom of the boat. The steering apparatus, worked by the feet, is perfect, and the mechanism moves so noiselessly that you can hear a dewdrop. Anyone with sufficient mechanical skill to turn a grindstone can operate it; so it will abolish the passenger who now keeps his coat on under the pretext that he can't row. I hav a photograph of the boat, which, for the benefit of people of an inquiring mind, I will display.

Under the New York Sunday law it is a misdemeanor to keep a store open on Sunday for the sale of goods. The police enforce the law. The saloon keepers, however, subsidize the police, who do not interfere with them, and the result is that about the only thing to be bought in New York city on Sunday is liquor. This state of affairs is paralyzing both to citizens and to those who would essay to make a comment on the subject of Sunday legislation.

When Putnam's book, "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," sees the light of day and the lesser effulgence of artificial illuminators employed at night, I shall know more about man's struggle for the right to let his tongue report the operations of his brain than I had previously expected to learn. Many others will share the information so disbursed. From books whose authors in many cases could not be suspected of furnishing items for a history of Freethought, Mr. Putnam has gathered the existing facts and arranged them in what evolutionists call a catena—that is, a series of things connected with one another and serving to illustrate the main proposition. As may be understood from the name of the book, it is a history of thought and philosophy, more than of "events which hav transpired," as the local reporter would express it. There is just enough of physical history to account for the philosophy and to show how the thoughts were suggested. The writing of this book is the only work of Putnam's in the performance of which his early theological education is not a damage to him. But here it is quite useful, for the seminary introduced him to the philosophers and sophists—who, I hav concluded, are often two of a kind—and he is now able to weigh them, to girt them, and to otherwise size them up. They usually prove to be light weights and narrow in the chest. Their bumps of ideality were overgrown. They exhaled great clouds of speculation that soared away and were dissipated in the sky. It is refreshing to notice how the atmosphere has been cleared, and how the men who demonstrate, while others are engaged in drawing inferences from fundamental errors and calling them systems of philosophy or religion, hav at length come to be regarded as leading citizens of the intellectual community. Putnam understands Plato, Aristotle, Berkeley, Bacon, and Descartes as well as they understood themselvs, if not better; and I shall always be grateful to him for showing me what they were driving at. He has also a very lucid chapter on the philosophy of Herbert Spencer. Just now he is dealing with religion, where he grasps his pen with both hands.

Over the whole history Putnam throws a glow that never comes from any other writer. It is the same light that he has shed on the path of his own wanderings over the continent; and when he traveled through the Coos bay country in Oregon on horseback it was about all the glimmer he had after sundown. But it is a glow that never dies out; he can't keep it from shining, and it is a part of the light of the world. GEO. E. MACDONALD.

Freethought First, Last, and All the Time.

HULL, IA., Jan. 8, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Herewith find post-office order for $15 to help lubricate the axle of progress. Please apply ten of the amount on subscription to that great journal, THE TRUTH SEEKER, the balance to pay for "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," by Samuel P. Putnam.

I am for Freethought first, last, and all the time. N. G. O. COAD., M.D.

Well Pleased.

ARMSTRONG, FLA., Dec. 30, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $1, for which send copy of "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," in board covers. I get THE TRUTH SEEKER once a week regularly, and am well pleased with it. I received the books you sent me, with which I am also well pleased, especially "The Creation of God."

WM. NEISWENDER.

A City of Churches and Darkness.

NANAIMO, B. C., Jan. 1, 1894

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $3 for renewal of my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER. I could not do without it. I left San Francisco and am back to my old home, Nanaimo, so please hav the address changed accordingly. There are very few Infidels here, but about as many churches as houses. Sunday all the stores and business houses are closed; in fact, everything except the churches. So you will imagin that the people are kept well in the dark. MRS. E. KEMPER.

"Age of Reason" Better Than the Bible.

NEW HAVEN, CONN., Jan. 9, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Please send me a few sample copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER. I am going to try for the prize, "Four Hundred years of Freethought." I hav already one subscriber besides myself, and I ought to get two more with a few copies to show. But priestcraft is pretty powerful here in New Haven.

I hav Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason," and I think more of it than I ever did of the Bible, though I was a Methodist fifteen years. The more I read the Bible the less I believed it and the more disgusted I was with its obscenity and lies.

ROSELLA L. STISSER.

Never Born Again Nor Dipped in Holy Water.

BEAVER DAM, WIS., Jan. 9, E.M. 294.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find express order for $9 to renew the subscriptions of myself and two others. We hav been waiting, as we expected, or had the promis, of two new subscribers, but the hard times beat us out of it. I hav taken the Boston Investigator continuously for forty-eight years, and THE TRUTH SEEKER since it was first started by Brother Bennett. So, as you see, I am an old, unregenerated heretic; hav been born but once, and was never plunged in holy water, although I hav managed to liv alongside of those who hav been blessed with all these advantages for sixty-nine years, and hav been blessed with better health and prosperity than most of them. Very truly yours, ANDREW WILLARD.

Thinks Remsburg Might Be Introduced to the Lake.

CHAUMONT, N. Y., Jan. 7, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed are $2 to renew my subscription. Have been waiting in hopes of getting a new subscriber. There is one Liberal here besides myself, and he has promised to take the paper this year, but failed to raise the money. There are two churches in this place. President Cleveland's brother presides over one and an ex-coachman, who had a call, over the other. I hav never entered either.

I received a letter from J. E. Remsburg, wanting to know if my Liberal friends would like a lecture. I honestly believe if he came here they would drown him in the lake. There are only a few here to whom I dare express my honest thoughts, and they act as though they were sorry for me. The ministers hav called on me, but never mention religion. Yours for liberty and truth, MARY L. RYDER.

Can Civilized People Enjoy Ill-Gotten Wealth?

PORTLAND, ORE., Jan. 3, E.M. 294.

MR. EDITOR: Please send three copies of "Old Testament Stories," one copy "Facts and Fictions of Life," one Hill's "Money," one "Moderne Gotterdammerung," and ten copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER of December 23d. If I were able I would send for one hundred or more copies to distribute, but I am such a poor devil I hav to look out for myself first. Such letters as that of Dr. Mak to President Cleveland will be liked by most people, because it tells the truth in plain English fearlessly. God is nothing; a humbug, a ghost to scare people. It is impossible to prove that there can be such a being. No one can prove it. But say some, You can't make much if so honest as to always tell the truth. I can't see how civilized people can enjoy wealth if they make it in a dishonest way. I inclose $5 money order. W. WEDEKEN.

Is God Afraid of Atheists?

CROSBY, TEX., Jan. 10, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Being a Freethinker, also a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER, it makes my heart glad to read the views of other Freethinkers, Infidels, and progressiv evolutionists, and especially those of Mr. Putnam. I am disgusted with the Christian Statesman, which is mentioned in an editorial in the paper of December 16th—"Applied Christianity"—wherein the Rev. T. S. Stevenson refers to the family as a divine institution and says that it belongs to "God." Why does not the reverend hav "God" raise up some families for general exhibition to convince Infidels of his (God's) rights and of his right to control in state and municipal affairs? Maybe he (God) is afraid of those Atheists that dare to speak their honest convictions in matters political, scientific, and religious. If God makes all things out of nothing, where did he get the electricity to set all nature, animate and inanimate, in motion? Can some of these praying priests answer the above question?

J. C. HARVEY.

The Need of the Hour.

DELPHOS, O., Dec. 28, 293.

MR. EDITOR: At the last meeting of our association we were honored with the presence of John R. Charlesworth, who delivered a masterly and eloquent address to a highly appreciativ audience. In the absence of the president on account of sickness, the vice-president, Mrs. Dr. H. H. Brundage, presided with the dignity and parliamentary ability of a Blaine. Our association was only organized last summer after Mr. Charlesworth had delivered a series of lectures, and the rapidity with which it has grown has far surpassed our expectations. A common expression is, "I had no idea there were so many Freethinkers in the community until we got them together." Many are surprised at finding old acquaintances radical Freethinkers of whose liberal views they had no knowledge until our association was organized.

My humble opinion is that what we most need is the universal organization of local Freethought societies. Freethought lectures and subscriptions to Liberal papers and books will necessarily follow. The people will become aroused, and as they are yet the source of all political power in this country, no man will then be compelled to support a religion in which he does not believe, and the divorce of church and state in the United States will become absolute. B. A. ROLOSON.

Sec. Freethought Ass'n of Delphos, O.

What are We Doing to Liberalize, Educate, and Reform Christians?

SKOWHEGAN, ME., Jan. 12, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I see by the tab on Mrs. Bigelow's paper that you should hav $3, as we hav no right to read unless we pay. Since its founder was imprisoned it has been a weekly visitor in our home and shall be as long as my mother can enjoy hearing its truths read, and I am able to pay $3 per year. I wish I was able to make every Liberal family in Maine a Christmas present of THE TRUTH SEEKER for one year. What are other Freethinkers, Infidels, doing to educate, liberalize, and reform the enemies of liberty more than the Spiritualists are doing? Are not we, Spiritualists, trying to tear down the idols now worshiped? To do away with priestcraft and torture? Are we not serving man instead of gods and devils? Some say to me: "Colonel Ingersoll does not believe as you do." I think if all practiced as he does, little children would suffer no more with cold and hunger. We would never hear of many atrocious crimes now committed by religious fanatics, and all for Christ's sake! I care more for the teachings of Colonel Ingersoll, D. M. Bennett, and other Freethinkers, than for the teachings of all gods. Why not join our forces and vote such men into office? Liberty and the rights of the poor will never be vindicated until we join in one harmonious band of freedom-loving people.

Yours for truth and right,

Dr. F. S. BIGELOW.

Sowing the Seeds of Evolutionary Thought.

PORTLAND, ORE., Dec. 29, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: Last Sunday night a week ago I was handed a lecturer's license, granted me by the Oregon State Secular Union. Mr. Smith said, "We want you to help us now," and I promised to do so. The following Friday I paid the Southern Pacific Railroad company $2 to convey me to Ballston, the home of my most excellent friend, Wallace Yates. Upon my arrival I got acquainted with Mr. Kenneth Campbell, a stanch Freethinker and a constant subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER for the last seventeen years. Owing to the Christmas festivities at the Methodist church nothing was done toward a Freethought meeting until Tuesday evening. I spoke then on direct legislation and I let religion alone. The people perhaps concluded that I was not very diabolical, even though I did associate with Mr. Campbell. Wednesday and Wednesday evening the Grange lecturer spoke in the schoolhouse, and as so much lecturing was quite unusual the people seemed to get a surfeit; but despite that, on Friday evening, although the weather was quite threatening, there were quite a number to hear me speak on evolution. It was a brand new subject to most of those present and of course the fact that it left God out of the universe aroused some opposition. I gave all who wished an opportunity to ask questions or to reply. Three asked questions, among them the principal of the school. A few of my hearers were delighted, some pleased, and a number indignant; one man saying that such talk ought not be allowed. One thing is sure: Whatever else may be the result it will cause a widespread discussion and many of the facts I presented will not be forgotten by some of the boys who were present.

Since the Secular Union has declared me competent for this work I am open for engagements. Address me at 29 Alder street, Portland, Ore. HENRY ADDIS.

The Truth Shall Make You Free.

CHICAGO, ILL., Dec. 13, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: Let us look upon the world, the people, and the condition they are in at the present time, and then honestly ask ourselvs if it really is a blessing to be poor, or a curse to be rich, as stated in Luke vi, 20; Luke vi, 24; or Matt. vi, 19, "Lay not up for yourself treasures upon earth." Another of those fine teachings is, "Take no thought for the morrow;" yes, and a good many hav obeyed these teachings found in the so-called holy Bible, and therefore find themselvs in a not very blessed, happy, nor even healthy condition. It is indeed not a blessing for any followers of Jesus to be poor and helpless, to depend upon charity, for a place to sleep and a meal to eat. No sane man or woman will rejoice in it and call it a blessing; far better would it be, should he or she disobey the teaching of the Bible, take a thought for to-morrow, and lay up treasures upon this earth. Life would then be worth living. The Lord may dislike you, but every good man, woman, and child will love and respect you, and say, "Well done." If the imaginary God love or respect me I know nor care not, but I do care to be respected and loved by every good man, woman, and child. This is my aim, and should be the aim of every one who means to do good. I am with our Robert G. Ingersoll, who says: "Now is the time to be happy and this is the place to be happy." But to be that, you cannot follow the teaching of the Bible. Like a Freethinker take a thought whenever you can; do the best you can to improve yourself and your fellows. That is what Freethought teaches us; therefore, I for one hav broken away from the Roman Catholic church and accepted a principle far better than the old—the Freethought principle. There is the grand saying of the noble Thomas Paine, "To do good is my religion." That is and shall be my religion. Sooner or later I will be appreciated by many more of the better class of people. The truth you shall know and the truth shall make you free. Those are the words of Freethought; they are upon the lips of every honest, outspoken Freethinker. Yes, and more of the truth we shall know when our grand Freethought poet and philosopher, Samuel P. Putnam, givs to the world his great work, "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," and I will therefore inclose $5 for it to help along the cause, as well as to educate myself and friends who wish to know what Freethought has done and what it is to-day.

Please send book when out.

WILLIAM LEMPERLE.

The Science Sermons Society Meeting.

NEW YORK, N. Y., Jan. 20, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: At the Science Sermons Society, Sunday evening, the 14th inst., the attendance was fair. As the hour approached for beginning the exercises, Dr. Foote, Jr., took the platform and reported news items of Freethought progress since his last report, and it was noticed that he used THE TRUTH SEEKER freely in so doing.

Dr. Eccles took the chair and announced the speaker of the evening, Professor Wingate. The professor had for his subject "The Evolution of the City." He told in general about how each of the eighty-four thousand post-office towns in the United States had a beginning. First, a broad prairie and a stream of water or some other natural advantage; then the first settler and a few more, next the cross roads, the saloon, blacksmith shop, school, and of course a church, as otherwise the town would hav no institution to look after the local gossip and matrimonial contracts and scandals.

Finally, he reached the topic of drainage, and thought that this city should conduct its sewerage through tunnels, if necessary, out to sea, and maintained that in the center of every seven hundred by two hundred block here in New York there should be a crematory for garbage. This question of drainage is connected with the subject of fertilization of the soil, as by the plan suggested by the speaker fertilizing products are carried into the sea and wasted.

Allusion to Mr. Wakeman and something that Moses had said touching the subject of fertilization or drainage, had the effect of bringing Mr. Wakeman to his feet after the principal address had been finished. This fluent debater showed himself quite as much at ease on the platform discussing manure in connection with Moses, as he does when tracing the Genesis of Christianity, or in pointing out the evolution and defects of the Holy Ghost. He maintained that by the waste of drainage, the gold of the soil is lost and that we owe a debt to the future generations to return the food elements to the soil. The farms of New England and of the Atlantic coast are even now about worthless for agricultural purposes, and wheat and cereals hav to come from Dakota and the New West. In one or two generations more that source of supply will be exhausted, and Uncle Sam has no more virgin soil to dispose of to his children. Consequently, we see the relation between fertilizing the soil and the "evolution of the city" is very close, and Mr. Wakeman holds that it of fundamental importance to the human race that the elements which produce food should be returned to the soil and not deposited with McGinty at the bottom of the sea. This suggests that as animals breathe the oxygen given off by plants, and plants absorb the carbonic acid gas given off by animals, so the soil and animal life must be made to support each other.

The lecturer next Sunday is to be a professor from the University of Pennsylvania, who will speak on Darwinism.

L. D. CRINE.

The Battle for Liberty Is Not Won.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., Jan. 8, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Two revivals are now in progress here in Los Angeles—one conducted by Mrs. Woodworth, the evangelist, for the glory of God and the salvation of human souls, and the other by W. F. Jamieson for the elevation of humanity and salvation from the toils of priestcraft. This is Professor Jamieson's first visit to this coast, but his reputation had preceded him and created a desire in many minds to see and hear him. He lectured last Thursday night to a good audience on "Freethought and Christianity Face to Face." It is expected that he will deliver a course of eight lectures in this city, and if it is possible to find an opponent, a discussion with some orthodox clergyman will occur. A move is on foot to hav him meet Dr. Ravelin, late of San Francisco, in a discussion of that unsettled question regarding another state of conscious existence. Dr. Ravelin is an ex-clergyman and at present a prominent Spiritualist lecturer.

Times are almighty hard here, and reformers of all kinds are thicker than dollars to sustain them; but it is hoped that "our people" will respond with enough of the needful to make this Freethought revival a successful success, so to speak. Many Freethinkers hav become indifferent and seem to think that Freethought has done its work, and I sometimes feel a lack of enthusiasm when my reading is confined to that class of papers, and little is heard of the follies of Christian superstition. To keep posted on what is going on I lately attended the revival meeting of Mrs. Woodworth, who, as your only brother will recollect, predicted the destruction of San Francisco some two years ago, but made a mistake on the date when the earthquake should swallow up saint and sinner alike. It has been some time since I came out of a religious meeting more nauseated and disgusted than I came out of hers, for she gave evidence of having less sense than the average inmate of a lunatic asylum. And yet there were those present who cried "Amen!" and drank in her foolishness with genuin approval. Outside her tent I saw men with Bibles in their hands discussing the tenets of different sects and trying to convince one another that they were wrong and did not understand what such and such passages really meant; and I listened to their pueril nonsense until an opportunity came to turn loose a few Freethought ideas, which I did; and a general discussion took place that was not expected or desired by those who held the idea that faith is a passport to heaven and reason applied to religion is a sacrilege. The same old worn-out absurdities and disgusting nonsense are still being dealt out to the people, and while it is, Freethinkers must work to nullify and counteract its effects; and if anyone gets to thinking that Freethought has no further work to do let him dispel that idea by going where fools are still made for Christ's sake and the glory of God—into churches or revival meetings.

C. SEVERANCE.

[Let no Freethinker dream that superstition is more than scotched. Christianity is still the dominant force in politics, social life, and literature. Its poison is in the blood of the race and it will take centuries to drain it away. There are 111,000 preachers in the United States. Against these how few are the Freethought lecturers and scientific instructors! A Sunday-school at every crossroads. Against these nurseries of falsehood we can put—what? No, we hav plenty to do. Whoever doubts it needs only to read the bulletins of the census of 1890 and the reports of the churches and their auxiliary societies. Liberals are optimistic only because they view the world subjectivly. The sense of security will vanish when you mingle with the masses.—ED. T. S.]

Red Hot.

CLINT, TEX., Jan. 4, 1894

MR. EDITOR: Having just read a couple of articles in the newspapers, I find myself at the boiling point of indignation, and feel constrained, with your approval, to blow off a little of my caloric in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER. It seems that among a number called on to giv some reasons for publication why Thanksgiving day should be observed by all, the Rt. Rev. Father Ducey had his say. This father (an appellation no doubt deserved for more reasons than one) has been good enough to inform the whole people of the United States that the Washington proclamation was simply justified by the fact of the pope of Rome sending over here this year his beloved and personal representativ, Satolli. Father Ducey, speaking of some little opposition to this move, says: "The winds and waves seemed to hav threatened the bark of the church in this country, but the vicar of Christ, Leo XIII., heard the words of his master. He has spoken them with the voice and authority of the Lord. He has commanded the winds and waves to be still, and the apostolic delegate, representing Leo XIII., is master of the situation." (Do you mind that?) "We certainly hav many reasons to be thankful to God for the wisdom and fatherly spirit shown to the American Catholic church in the personality of Archbishop Satolli." (Jesus wept!)

It was on that same pious Thanksgiving day that the recent Italian importation, now emboldened by his unlooked-for success, saw fit to enlighten this benighted people with his views on our Constitution and to inform us of the only possible way in which to perpetuate it—viz., by universal approval and adoption of Catholic schools and government-money support of same. In short, the union of state with the Romish church. This insolence and effrontery of this Jesuit priest, ignorant of even our language, fresh from the caves and dens of Vatican plotting and sinister design—by nature, education, and practice utterly unfitted to comprehend the principles of our form of government—is alarming to contemplate; for he would not thus insolently push to the front were he not sure of the underhold he has in the masses of ignorance and superstition, soon to be openly wielded in government affairs in the interest of priestcraft and popery, and of the backing he has from great and ill-gotten wealth, which is willing to contribute largely to this army of money-loving priests as a kind of secondary police to hold the starving masses in check when the conflict comes. If the doing of good to us poor heathen, as this oily-tongued, saintly individual would hav us believe, is the object of his coming to this country, representing the holy firm of God, Leo, and Virgin, why didn't he with his vast spiritual graces and adornment stay in his own miserable, bankrupt, poverty-stricken country? Ah! there is where his saintly services are most needed—where the greater part of the legislativ body are now under indictment for robbing the public treasury; where the peasantry of the country are living on chestnuts and the townspeople on beggary and maccaroni; where the whole social fabric is honeycombed with secret organizations for revenge and murder, and where there are more assassinations every year than in all the other European states put together. Why did he leave that glorious field for Christ-like endeavor to cross the broad Atlantic? Because he and his sort hav nearly sucked that country dry. There in that fairest of lands is where that diabolical combination of wealth, jesuitical craft, hypocrisy, and lust of power and gold, which he calls his holy church, has had supreme sway for fifteen hundred years, and see to what a deplorable pass it has brought the most fertil and delightful land on the globe. Then look at poor Ireland, raising principally a crop of priests for export to America, the most devoted followers of popery in the world, torn, bleeding, poverty-stricken, and full of hatred and malignity to Protestant England, and all the work of their insane devotion to their holy religion and the blood-sucking priesthood. Look at Spain, Mexico, Central and South America, wherever this holy church has been firmly planted, and there like a deadly upas tree it disseminates its poisonous, paralyzing influence, and ignorance, poverty, superstition, war, and slavery are its certain fruits.

It was very good of Satolli to come so far to look after our souls, to pray us out of his purgatory, to preserve our republican form of government, and finally to land us with Peter in heaven (all for good pay in the best coin of the realm), and there are millions of credulous, superstitious fools who will believe this; but intelligent men and women all over the country see in his coming and firm planting in princely style almost under the dome of the capitol, the beginning of the establishment of a religious "Mafia," which in a few years will make the profession of a belief in and adherence to popery the prerequisit to a seat in Congress. When Blucher went over to London, just after Waterloo, they took him to the top of St. Paul's to view the city. Looking over that wilderness of wealth, he blurted out from the depths of his brutal heart: "Mine Got, vot plunder!" and so, when this cunning, ambitious Italian came over here and received the fulsome, degrading demonstrations of the great crowds, rode in special palace cars free of expense, towered high over all the other prophets of Israel at Chicago, and received the marked attentions and flatteries of our three hundred pounds of president, he no doubt shouted in the depths of his designing nature, when he viewed the wealth and magnificence of this great country as contrasted with his blood-sucked, ruined Italy: "Mine Got, vot plunder!"

And that, freemen of America, is what he is here for, in the interest of his master, Leo XIII., and that political machine called the holy Catholic church, which grasps at universal dominion through the ignorance, the passions, and the superstitions of mankind. What are you going to do about it? For one thing I should say: Support all the Freethought publications you can, and everywhere and at all fit times denounce this conspiracy against our country and our liberties.

Yours truly, S. G. ETHERIDGE.

Some Questions Pointedly Answered.

NEW LONDON, CONN., Jan. 6, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to announce through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER the death of my brother, John N. Price, who lived in Wayne county, W. Va. He was a Liberal, and a free-hearted one; no beggar went hungry from his door. He died very suddenly from heart failure. His friends and relativs think that his death was a judgment from God, and, in writing to me of the sad occurrence, they asked me several questions, which I will proceed to answer through your paper. In the first place, regarding my brother's death as a judgment from God (for that is one of the questions asked), I will say that if it is one of God's judgments it differs very slightly from many other instances wherein he has brought his judgment to bear upon the unbeliever and believer as well, for both believer and unbeliever die from heart-failure. In the second place, it would be a strange judgment to take it in his own hands to kill the heretic when he had sent only a shouting set of ignoramuses to try and turn him into the ways of the Lord; but right here is presented what is a puzzle to my mind. This is the second one of my brothers that has died in this manner. The first was a believer in the Bible, Gods, and ghosts; he fell dead while doing his chores, and the canting profession pointed to it as a warning to my brother and me to get into the bloody old ship of Zion. Now, when my Freethinking brother dies while out at his work the sky-pilot points to it as a judgment upon him and a double warning to me. Why did God kill one of his believers as a warning to two unbelievers? Fie! out upon such an idea! By saying such nonsensical things you make out God's character to be much worse than I thought it was. I knew all the while that he was a vicious old wretch, but I did not know before that he would sacrifice one of his believers in order to frighten two unbelievers. And again, did he not know that by the Liberal death is looked upon as the result of a natural cause, and therefore is not so frightful as some of God's loved ones think? I see nothing in the death of my brother to cause me to waver in my ideas of death and what may come after death. I hold still more firmly to my belief in the ability of death to end all suffering, all pain, all joys and gladness—in fact, all consciousness. Death is only a change of the chemic l compound composing the animal organism. Nature has run its course; the vital force is depleted, and animation ceases. Then the elements of which the body is composed separate, and decomposition apparently destroys every vestige of them; but the fact is that not one atom of the elements composing the human being has been destroyed; they hav only separated. The water has left the carbon and returned to its simple state, and perhaps the identical water that gave fluidity to the blood of the patriots of the Revolution is to-day quenching the thirst of some living human. So with everything else of which the human body is composed.

I am asked if I don't think it probable that there is an immortal soul in man. I answer, No. No more than I believe that our bodies are immortal. The soul is of matter and is entirely dependent upon matter for its existence. Thus the chemical compound, the brain, givs off the result—feeling, tasting, hearing, smelling, thinking, etc. If a certain lobe of the brain be taken out, then the sense dependent for existence upon that lobe is destroyed; take the brain away altogether, and where would the mind or soul be? It could not exist. Thus when the matter, the compound of elements, giving rise to the soul (mind) be separated or decomposed, the soul ceases to exist just as the senses cease to exist when the body dies.

I am also asked what I think about God or about the existence of God. God exists only in the diseased imagination of the superstitious, and was created through primitiv man's inability to account for the forces in nature which were beyond his comprehension. The Christian points to the savages as a proof of the existence of a God; to the fact that savage nations believe in the existence of a supreme being. That is conclusiv proof that the scientist is correct in his idea of the creation of God. The thunder's roar was the voice of an angry God; beautiful sunshine was his smile; good fortune his favor, while misfortune was evidence of his displeasure. But now the thundering voice no longer terrifies the superstitious, because it has ceased to be the angry growling of a fire-spitting God-myth; the sunshine is no longer the pleasing smile of the deity; fortunes and misfortunes are alike brought about by circumstances, and not by the caprices of a changeful God. God was a terror to the superstitious while he had the power to cause the earth to swallow up whole companies of men, to smite entire armies with blindness or death, or frighten the sweet life out of both king and men by making a big noise that resembled an army's charge. But for several centuries he has either been ashamed to resort to such unfair subterfuges, or has in his dotage lost the power to do so; at all events, he has ceased operations since Napoleon demonstrated so plainly that it was the heavy guns and big battalions that won. God to-day consumes time in counting hairs and watching sparrows as they fall.

My interlocutor goes on and asks me why I cannot be a Christian. That is a question that would take up too much time and space to answer fully. The embracement of Christianity would involve faith in a myth, belief in impossibilities, such as supernatural interference with the laws of nature. To be a Christian I would hav to accept a mass of contradictions as God's holy truths; I would hav to accept as an infallible moral guide a book that teaches cruelty to women, prostitution, polygamy, concubinage, theft, cannibalism, falsehood, deception, lying, robbery, etc. (John E. Remsburg, "Bible Morals.") To be a Christian I would hav to accept the Bible as the truth, the revealed will of God; but that I cannot do.

In conclusion, I would choose morality for its own sake and not for Christ's sake. Go, you who preach the gospel, and take up the ax or the hoe and try to make an honest living as other laborers do, and you will find that you can help yourselvs without the aid of your loving, revengeful God. Yours for Freethought,

SAMUEL B. PRICE.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Birthplace of Burns.

In reverent mood,
I stood within the space, where he,
The true interpreter of Nature's melodies,
First the light of day beheld.
The little room where he was born—
The niche that once the humble cot
Had filled whereon he lay
Clasped in his mother's arms;—
The ample fireplace, where he
Once watched the embers' flickering light,
Or laughed in glee to see the yellow flame
Caress, with wanton touch and boisterous mirth,
The unhewn log.
The hearthstone, where in infancy he frolicked—
The walls, his hands had wandered o'er,
In childish play and pastime;—
The open door, where he ran out and in—
All—all were there
There were the narrow windows,
The modest panes of glass,
Through which, aforetime, he had often looked,
Watching, with wondering eyes, the flecks of floating clouds,
The budding trees, the green, upspringing grass
The singing birds, the flocks upon the hills,
The ivy-covered kirk, and yard of daisied, mounds,
O'er which the banks and braes of Doon
Kept watch and ward;—
The brig that spanned the silver stream,
The generous earth, with all its mysteries and marvels—
All, as of old, were there.
Suddenly, a nimbus,
A shimmering, purpling light,
Flooded the low-walled room;
And in its center arose the figure of a woman;—
Blithe and bonny as the morning glory!—
Herself a poem—a gleam of opal-tinted sunshine,
A dream of love-embodied womanhood.
She was the poet's mother;
The queenly giver of a child of song,
Whose minstrelsy hath echoed in the hearts of millions,
All o'er the wondrous world
E'en as I looked, the vision vanished,
And disappeared the purple mist:
While in its place remained the quiet
Of the sunlit summer day.
Amid the fragrant memories of the hour,
This thought stole in: While we
Weave chaplets for the poet's brow,
Should we not place one little flower,
One sweet forget-me-not,
Upon the bosom of that first, best friend,
His mother? SUSAN H WIXON.

Correspondence.

SALMON ARM, Dec. 14, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I wrote a letter to the Children's Corner, which was published December 2d. My name was misspelled. It was spelled Bella, which makes an l of a difference. Please correct mistake and oblige one of your Liberal friends, BELA S. BOLTON.

[It certainly makes a vast difference. But Bela might do worse than to be mistaken for a girl. The Corner will always hav a place for your letters, anyway.—ED. C. C.]

McCOY, OR., Dec. 18, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As I saw my other letter in print, I will try to write again. I go to school and study reading, spelling, arithmetic, mental arithmetic, history, grammar, and geography. My papa takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I like to read the Children's Corner very much. I go to a dancing club every two weeks. I like to dance very well. I would like to correspond with some of the girls about twelve years old that write to the Corner.

Yours sincerely, DORIS SEARS.

[It is very well to know how to dance, for it is fine amusement.—ED. C. C.]

DELPHOS, O., Dec. 23, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I read the Children's Corner every week, but I hav not yet succeeded in reading a letter from here. I am now taking the pleasure of writing a few lines. We hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for quite a long while, and I don't think we could do without it.

Mr. Charlesworth has delivered us two series of lectures, and we expect to hav Mr. Putnam for January 30th, 31st, and February 1st.

I am thirteen years old. I go to school and I am in C Grammar. I remain your Liberal friend, PEARL MILLER.

[Pearl will hav a great treat in hearing Mr. Putnam, as she did in listening to Mr. Charlesworth. We hope to hear from our Pearl often.—ED. C. C.]

EL PASO, TEX., Nov. 20, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I am visiting my cousin, H. G. Stillwell, of El Paso, who is an old subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I enjoy reading the Corner very much. I never see any letters from Texas, so will write and hope it will escape the wastebasket.

El Paso is a very pretty town of eleven thousand inhabitants, situated on the Rio Grande river, and has street cars running across the river to Juarez, in Mexico. A great many Mexicans liv here, and I am learning to speak their language.

We hav four little wild ducks that my cousin crippled and caught, and we are trying to domesticate them.

I am nine years old Hoping to see this in print, and wishing good luck to the Corner and Miss Wixon, I will close.

JUANITA ROOKH POOLE.

[We are glad to hear from Texas, and hope Juanita will write often to the Corner. The picture of the cactus is handsome, but what is a resurrection plant? Please tell us about it, and tell also that which you may hav learned in relation to the cacti.—ED. C. C.]

COOPERSTOWN, N. D. Dec. 19, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my second letter to the Corner. Well, I want to tell you about a Congregational minister who called on mother and me one day this fall. He brought us a lot of Sunday-school papers. So I gave him some TRUTH SEEKERS. He said he liked to read both sides. He is a college mate of Mr. Putnam's, but he doesn't like him, so he abused him. But mother told him he must not, because he was her favorit writer. He said science and religion went together. Then he said if you take away my religion, what hav you to giv me in place of it? Then I showed him Mr. Heston's picture in THE TRUTH SEEKER August 12th. And then he said, "My, oh my! What are our children coming to?" Then he said he wanted to see father to talk with him. Mother invited him to come when father was at home. Mother told him he would enjoy a visit from a preacher, for father is just one of those Freethinkers who like an argument. Then the preacher said he wasn't afraid to talk to any such man as he. Ma told him that he might hav more talking than he wanted by the time he got through with him. The preacher hasn't come yet. Pa can never meet him when he is in town. I am eleven years old and am proud to say I am a Freethinker.

Yours Truly, B. KUHNZ.

P. S.—The preacher's name is O. P. Champlain.

[That preacher is away behind the times, as most of his ilk are. Bee and his papa and mamma are ever so far away beyond him. Mr. Putnam is one of the best writers of the king's English, and to hear him speak is an inspiration. If that preacher could but listen to him once it would save his "never-dying soul" from ever abusing an absent fellow-creature again as long as he livs.—ED. C. C.]

GORE BAY, MANITOULEN ISLE, Dec. 28, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As I am writing other letters, I thought I would write one to you. I am going to tell you how we spend the winter on the Manitoulen island. When the first snow comes all the children bring out their sleighs to break roads for sleigh-riding (we hav broken a hill in front of our place this winter); then we build forts and snowball each other. We go to school on dog-sleighs; sometimes the boys skate up the river, which flows in front of the school. When the bay is all frozen over we go out and slide on the ice. Sleighing parties go out to entertainments or parties in the evenings. Prohibition meetings are being held all over the island, so that affords quite a bit of amusement. There is going to be one held here next Saturday evening.

We have quite a time to get a mail here in winter. Dogs hav to pull it across the ice to the North Shore. I hav only one correspondent yet; his name is Clyde M. Clough. I wrote him a letter, but he has not answered it.

I gave a recitation at the Church of England's Christmas entertainment. It was entitled "The Christmas Guest." I received a pair of gold bracelets from mamma on Christmas, and I gave her a china porridge set, and papa a china cup, saucer, and plate. Do you think it is right to tell children there is a Santa Claus? I do not. I hav a very large doll that wants a name; I would like you to suggest a name for her.

I think my letter is getting too long, so I will come to a close. Wishing you a bright and prosperous New Year, I am

Your Freethinker friend,
GRACIE E. BEAL.

[It is right to tell the truth always. Santa Claus does not exist, and never did. Name the dolly for some good woman. How would Frances Wright answer?—ED. C. C.]

ST. ANTHONY PARK, MINN., Nov. 23, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my second attempt to write to the Corner, and since I saw my first letter published, I thought I would write again.

I go to school now. I study reading, arithmetic, spelling, history, sentences, and language. I am in the second room, in the highest class; there are three classes in each room. In two weeks I will be in the third room. There are three rooms. I go to Baker school.

I wish I had $100 to giv to the poor little children, so that they might get some warm clothes and food for Thanksgiving day and Christmas.

I would like very well to hav some of the children that write to the Corner write to me. If they do I will write to them.

I will send a piece of poetry, and I hope to see it in print.

I remain one among your Liberal friends. Address,

BLANCHE CHAMBERLIN,
St. Anthony Park, Minn.

[Blanche is sympathetic and benevolent. It is much better to feed the hungry and clothe the naked yourself than to ask God to do it.—ED. C. C.]

LITTLE MAMIE WONDERS.

I wonder why the flowers died,
And why they cannot grow,
And blossom in the winter time,
Out in the soft white snow?

I wonder why the leaves fell off
Just when they looked so gay,
And when the bare trees creak and moan,
I wonder what they say?

I wonder if the crocuses
Are truly fast asleep?
If pansies really bow and smile,
And violets ever weep?

I wonder what the busy bees
Are doing in the hive?
And if the pretty butterflies
Are frozen or alive?

I wonder if the birds went South,
Or if they came together,
And flew above the clouds to heaven,
To miss the stormy weather?

I wonder if they will come back
From some warm sunny clime?
And, oh! I wonder when is spring?
To-morrow, or some time?

TO THE TRUTH SEEKER FAMILY: If any of the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, or any friend of one, builds boats or keeps them to let, I would be pleased to hav him communicate with me, as I hav invented a handpower for propelling small boats that surpasses anything of the kind in the world; can make from six to eight miles per hour with ease, and will stem the swiftest current. Patent is secured and I am now ready to sell state rights. If anyone wishes to know anything about my power without conferring with me, I refer them to George E. Macdonald of THE TRUTH SEEKER staff. He has sat in my boats and worked the power. It is bound to take the place of oars for pleasure. J. S. MARTIN.

Hard Knocks at Christianity.
By R. WHEELER.

This book is just what its title implies—thumping whacks at superstition. It deals with the effect of Christianity on the world, showing what Christians have done to advance their religion and impede the progress of man. It shows that Jesus was a false prophet, that the gospels are not authentic, and that Christianity is a borrowed system of religion. That the Bible is not in accord with Science, that the atonement scheme is futile and foolish, and that religion is not a real benefit to man.

"With Daughter's Babe Upon His Knees."

A new edition of that splendid prose poem, "Life," by "the prince of orators," Col. R. G. Ingersoll. It is larger and better than the old edition, and can be framed or placed upon the table as an ornament. In the center of the card appear the portraits of the Colonel and the baby, surrounded by the prose poem, which has been truthfully described as, "one of the masterpieces of the orator and poet, who now, as far as we know, stands alone in the living world." It will make a delightful present, and will be a souvenir not only of intellectual greatness, but of artistic workmanship. It is printed on heavy board, gilt beveled edge. The size is 12x16 inches, and the price only 75 cents, post-paid.

Pleasure and Progress.

AN ATTEMPT TO PROVE THAT

The Pursuit of Pleasure is the Sine Qua Non of Intellectual, Moral, and Social Development, and that The Promotion of Pleasure is the Duty of Philanthropy and Statesmanship.

By Albert M. Lorentz, LL.B.

CONTENTS:

BOOK I.—PLEASURE: Chap. I.—Sources of Pleasure. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures. Chap IV.—Social Pleasures. Chap. V.—Pleasures of the Savage, the Barbarian and the Civilized. Chap. VI.—Genesis of religions. Chap. VII.—Christianity.

BOOK II.—INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Purpose of life. Chap, II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures: Knowledge. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Reason. Chap.—V. Ideal Pleasures: Character. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures Chap. VII.—Pedagogical Despotism.

BOOK III.—MORAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Morality. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures: Prudence. Chap. III.—Material Pleasures: Refinement. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Foresight, Chap. V.—Ideal Pleasures: Civilization. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Vice Caused by Restraint.

BOOK IV.—SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Progress. Chap. II.—Protection, Capitalism, and Socialism: Respectivly an Actual, an Imminent, and a Proposed Violation of Individual Sovereignty. Chap. III.—Condition of Agriculture. Chap. IV. Public Schools, the Mene, Mene, Tekel of Socialism. Chap. V.—Province of Government. Chap. VI.—Our Social Disorder.

Here are some of the verdicts on this remarkable production which have been rendered by men who are in every way qualified as judges of books:

This is a spirited, rattling sort of a book that skates right along over the deepest subject without much thought whether the ice is thin or not. It answers the greatest question—What is the us , object, motive, purpose, and summum bonum of life, and the real cause and motive of progress? —by one word, Pleasure!—Thaddeus B. Wakeman.

He sharply attacks, also, modern methods of education, and in this he is most abundantly borne out by the facts, and his arraignment is practically unanswerable. His book is altogether a curious and suggestive one.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The man who wrote this book knows how to write a book, and knows what he is writing about. There is not a padded sentence in the volume, not an attempt to fill up with words for lack of knowledge. The author deals hard blows at shams and falsehoods, and hard blows for realities and truth. We do not see how anyone can read this book and disagree with the leading propositions. The work is good; every chapter is worth reading. It is a work of common-sense Socialism. The chapter on public schools ought to be put into a tract and sent to every teacher in the land. Thousands of sentences are worthy of being framed as political maxims and hung up all over the nation. The book deserves a wide reading, not only for its literary style, which is clear and incisive, but for its bold, honest sayings.—L. K. Washburn.

Here we have philosophy up to date, the advance word of the progressive thinker; not a dry, abstruse discourse, but a common-sense essay in plain words upon the conduct of life, and all illustrated with such an abundance of anecdote and metaphor as add real entertainment to solid instruction. This is an important book, striking at superstition and unreasonable tradition, and upholding individual liberty in defiance of governmental law and social custom. After reading this book one feels that the author will never be able to write another, for he has put all his life and knowledge into this one. Every page bristles with points; there is no padding or filling in, no mere literary embellishment; but clean-cut apothegms abound, and every line is dictated by hard-headed common-sense.—Capt. Robt. C. Adams.

After you read this book you will be as enthusiastic in praise of it as are the eloquent editor of the Investigator and the gallant President of the Canadian Secular Union,

"Pleasure and Progress" has 398 pages, is splendidly printed from large, clear type, on excellent paper, and costs, bound in cloth, $1; paper covers, 50 cents.

A most extraordinary publication. We venture the assertion that nothing like it has ever before appeared in this country, and it is very doubtful if another one like it will ever again be published. We must give the Truth Seeker Company the credit of putting the book in the reach of all. At twice the price it would have been a cheap book. Artist Heston as a portrait painter and designer is a wonderful success, and we judge from our own feelings that nearly every Liberal in America will desire a copy of this most wonderful volume.—[Freethinkers' Magazine.

Mr. Heston deserves to be called the artist-hero of Liberalism. He has dedicated his genius to Freethought, and has done faithful and noble work for the cause of right and truth. But the pictures do not make up the whole of this volume. There are nearly two hundred pages of reading matter that serve first as explanations of the illustrations, and secondly as texts to prove the utter falsity of the church's professions and the hypocrisy of those who uphold them. Altogether the book is one of the best weapons against Christianity and the church that has ever been put in the hands of Freethinkers.—[Boston Investigator.

JOHN E. REMSBURG'S WORKS.

Abraham Lincoln: Was He A Christian?

For fifteen years Mr. Remsburg has been collecting material for his work, He presents an array of testimony that is irresistible and overwhelming, and which must put this question at rest forever. In addition to the testimony of twenty witnesses who claim that Lincoln was a Christian, and which is reviewed and refuted, he adduces the testimony of more than a hundred witnesses in proof of the claim that Lincoln was not a Christian. These witnesses include his wife and other relatives; his three law partners; his private secretaries; members of his cabinet; his principal biographers, and scores of his most intimate friends.

False Claims. Revised and Enlarged

As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic. Price, 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Slavery; Witchcraft; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. THE DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND:

An attempt to show that all Organic Beings are both Constructed and Operated by the Dynamic Agencies of their respective Environments.

By JAMES B. ALEXANDER.

Over 400 illustrations, 87 chapters, 1,067 pages, and a 3-column index of 11 pages.

Price, express prepaid by us, only $2.75.

This work endeavors to embrace the field covered by thousands of books, such as those of the "Humboldt Library of Science," the "International Scientific Series," etc., by bringing together, in simple and direct form, with proper correspondence between them, all of the known factors contributing toward the origin and evolution of organic beings.

Do you wish to be well informed? THEN READ A CHAPTER OR VERSE DAILY FROM THIS BIBLE OF SCIENCE!

It is entertaining as well as enlightening, and will lead you to "worth-ship" (worship) nature —i. e., appreciate the worth of the Universal Mother.

You must own this book some day: why not NOW?

Remsburg's Book on Lincoln Now Ready.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN:

WAS HE A CHRISTIAN?

By John E. Remsburg.

One of the most noted controversies of the century has been waged over the question of Abraham Lincoln's religious belief. Soon after the remains of America's most illustrious son were laid to rest at Springfield, one of his biographers, Dr. Holland, put forward the claim that he was a Christian. The claim was promptly denied by the dead statesman's friends, but only to be renewed again, and again denied. And thus for a quarter of a century the question of Lincoln's belief has been tossed like a battledore from side to side.

For fifteen yea s Mr. Remsburg has been collecting material for his work. He presents an array of testimony that is irresistible and overwhelming, and which must put this question at rest forever. In addition to the testimony of twenty witnesses who claim that Lincoln was a Christian, and which is reviewed and refuted, he adduces the testimony of more than a hundred witnesses in proof of the claim that Lincoln was not a Christian. These witnesses include his wife and other relatives; his three law partners; his private secretaries; members of his cabinet; his principal biographers, and scores of his most intimate friends.

Just Out.—25 Cents.—Five Copies for $1.

A Liberal living in Michigan said once that he would give $25 a year to have the Crimes of Preachers recorded, as the frequent lapses of virtue of the ministers showed how little value Christianity possesses to make men moral.

We have just issued the Fourth Edition of the book doing this. The additions for this new edition of the

"Crimes of Preachers"

shows nearly 400 cases of ministerial conduct. While those in previous editions show that within a few years about of one kind or another of criminal conduct. Most of the crimes are against women, for the fair sex are at once the weakness and the strength of the church—"the church" meaning of course the clergy.

Notwithstanding the many additional pages, we have kept the price the same, 25 cents. Send for a copy, and confound the churchmen. Show them just what sort of scamps are the clergy who have closed the World's Fair on Sunday, because it is so holy a day that to look upon machinery or paintings in this period is "immoral."

How To Preserve Health.

By LOUIS BARKAN, M.D.

Fordyce Barker, M.D., Professor Bellevue Medical College says of it, writing to the author: "I regard your book as the most sound, sensible, and useful book on the topics which it discusses that I hav met with. I wish it could be in the hands of every intelligent head of a family. I am particularly pleased with one feature of it that it does not profess to teach dosing and drugging. I congratulate you on the wisdom and success of this effort."

Other noted physicians recommend it just as highly.

Agents Wanted!

We believe that not only can good be done but money made by any Liberal who will canvass for our book "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated." In fact we know one man who worked at it but a few hours weekly and sold nearly fifty copies in a month. The price is low; everybody knows the Old Testament stories, and nearly everybody would like a book applying nineteenth-century wit and knowledge to them. People like to laugh. Reverence for the Old Testament tales has largely disappeared and jokes at the expense of Jonah and Joseph and Esau and Samson and David, and the other worthies of unsavory reputation are keenly appreciated. It seems to us that the book will sell at sight. It does here in the store. Liberals out of employment will find this a good way to make an honest dollar.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A Nineteenth Century Novel.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with a little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The autnor is also the heroine. The narrative is, in the main, a history of a working-girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business-men, kind-hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world.

Not for Parsons.

ENGLAND has four thousand idle clergymen. Thus are the industries of Great Britain blighted by the pernicious influence of free trade.

MRS. JACKSON: I doan' see yer at chu'ch no mo', Uncle Silas, how comes dat? Uncle Silas: Dat ere new pahson done sot me agin him, a-sayin' anermals aint got no souls. How dey gon a git chickens inter hebbin, den, I'd like ter know!—Puck.

IN an article in the current number of the North American Review George W. Cable, the novelist, tells of a parish priest in Louisiana, who said to him in the Creole patois: "Some people say that Victor Hugo is an Infiddle. Oh, sir. sir! he—he perspires rheligion."—New York World.

BOBBY: Pop, what has giraffes got such long necks for? Fond parent: God gave them their long necks so that they could reach the leaves of the palm, which only grow at the top of the trees. That is the only way they can get at them. Bobby, after a pause: Couldn't he hav made the leaves grow lower down?—Puck.

LIGE HAYS, reviewing a recent loss to the community: Yas; Deacon Skinner was purty close, purty close; one of the richest men in the state; and yet I've heard that he searched back two miles fer a nickel he dropped out of his hand. Gabe Barnes: 'Tain't so! Uncle Si Low: Wal, I b'leeve it. Gabe Barnes: Oh, I know he'd search fer it: but (with emphasis) if Deacon Skinner ever got his fingers around a nickle, it was never dropped.—Puck.

FOR fear of accidents, the parrot was not allowed in the breakfast-room till after prayers. One morning, however, by some mischance, he was there; but behaved with becoming dignity until prayers were nearly over. My father had got to the middle of the Lord's prayer when, in a loud voice, Poll called out, "As many as are of that opinion will say 'Aye;' as many as are of the contrary opinion will say 'No.' The 'Ayes' hav it." I need hardly say, prayers were finished under difficulties.—W. R. La Fanu.

A LONDON paper says that when the "missing word" contests were declared illegal, a Salvation Army exhorter addressed a street crowd. At the end of his address he tried to show how much stress is laid on the word "Repent" in the Bible. "Our savior," he said, "spoke the word, and Peter spoke it." (Pause.) "And Paul spoke it." (Pause.) "Hav you read the word?" (Pause.) "Do you know the word?" (Long pause) And then the inevitable policeman, who, ungently pushing the preacher on the shoulder, said gruffly: "You get away, young man; you know it ain't right. We can't hav no 'missin' word competitions' 'ere. You know they're illegal, so just stow it."

HERE is an impressionist sketch of a famous American preacher by an American reporter, who should be equally famous: "Sweat trickled from the back jungle of his disordered hair, along the ravines and furrows of his haggard face. He advanced and retreated, rising upon his toes and coming down on his heels with a dislocating jerk that made the windows rattle, pausing occasionally to inhale through his dilating nostrils tempestuously, and then emitting a shrieking epigram of apostrophe that thrilled the blood like a wild cry at midnight in a solitary place." These "lines of lightning and eclipse" are really too good for a mere preacher. They would fit a cyclone "like a plaster."—London Freethinker.

EPISCOPALIAN: Yes, let us hav Christian unity. In union there is strength. Let all the churches unite in one grand body. And let the basis of the union be the Episcopal creed. It is the only basis which is broad and solid enough, and the only one on which there is a possibility of union. Methodist: Yes, let us hav Christian unity. In union there is strength. But I can hardly ageee with the other remarks of my friend. I can see no other basis of union than the Methodist creed. Let us hav union on that. Universalist: Yes, let us hav Christian unity. In union there is strength. And how is it possible that a union can be formed except on the basis of the Universalist creed—the broadest, most inviting of all creeds? It is not possible. We can hav no Christian unity except on that basis. Baptist: Yes, let us hav Christian unity. In union there is strength. But, let me tell you, my friends, that there can be no successful scheme of union which has not the Baptist creed for its foundation. To adopt any other basis would be to build on sand. Chorus: Yes, let us hav Christian unity with the

Gems of Thought.

Do not make the condition of the chronic indolent easier and better than the condition of worthy people in your midst who toil and economize continually in order to make ends meet.—Galveston News.

THE old is gone: 'tis wise and well
That old things fade and pass away.
Each yesterday's the half-grown bud
That bursts and blossoms in to-day;
And from to-day's imperfect will be born
The finer issue of to-morrow's morn.
—M. J. Savage.

IF, in any department of human interest, there are obstructions to liberty, they will be found only by those working in that department. Political and social changes are so rapid that society is always passing into new conditions, all of which bear upon personal liberty, but in such novel forms that old principles require restatement in fresh applications. Society can never outgrow the ancient issue between liberty and authority; but authority, serpent-like, slips from skin to skin, and liberty is prone to think that because one form of it has gone the thing itself has gone.—Moncure D. Conway.

I HAV heard of people dying for other people; but I hav never seen anything of this class of phenomenon. Once, in Syria, it is said, somebody felt so altruistic that he voluntarily died for the whole world—a stupid thing to do for the world, and a stupid world to do it for! Living for the world does it more good than dying for it. This dying for it was, as the pious old woman remarked, very long ago, very far away, and let us hope, not true. The world is in a very poor state. If it be really the better for this dying, great Christopher, what would it hav been like if this dying had not come off?—Saladin.

THE early savage dwelt in caves and cliffs, and spent his life in seeking food and providing some rude shelter from the cold. He looked at the earth, the sun, the sea, the sky, the mountain peak, the forest, and the plain, at the vegetable and animal life around, and all he saw and heard formed an impression on his brain, and aided in his growth. Like a child he marveled at the storm and flood; he stood in awe as he looked upon disease and death; and to explain the things he could not understand, he peopled earth and air and sea with gods and demons and a thousand weird creations of his brain.—Clarence S. Darrow.

THROUGHOUT the first half of the eighteenth century, Massachusetts was an arena of theological conflict; and though a modified form of toleration was in 1780 grudgingly admitted into the first constitution of the state; it was not until 1833—when the third century of its history was already entered upon—that complete liberty of conscience was made part of the fundamental law. The battle of religious toleration had then been elsewhere fought and won; Massachusetts reluctantly accepted the result. So far from winning laurels in that struggle, her record in it is in degree only less discreditable than that of Spain.—Charles Francis Adams.

IN '57 we had a war in China, known as the "Lorcha Arrow War," a war which involved us in a further Chinese war in '60. The foremost statesmen, including Lord Derby, Lord John Russell, Mr. Gladstone, and Disraeli, united with Mr. Cobden in speaking and voting against it. Lord Derby appealed to the bishops to use "their great and legitimate influence to stay the uplifted hand of violence and oppression and rebuke the shedding of innocent blood." But in the division eighteen bishops voted for the war and five against it. They hav consecrated banners, put up prayers and thanksgiving for victory, but on no occasion hav they denounced the horrors and atrocities of warfare. This has been done by Freethinkers, who, from Voltaire to Frau von Süttner, hav stigmatised war as a barbarism unworthy reasonable civilized beings.—J. M. Wheeler.

CURIOUS, too, though not surprising, is the assumption that progress is the product of Christianity, and that it is seen only in those countries where Christianity prevails. The method of proving this is very simple. Professor Fairbairn, the prince of theological word-painters, shows us how it is done. Take a chronological history of so-called Christian peoples; tick off every item which tells for progress, and then roundly assert that these particular items are the product of the Christian religion. An impartial study of history gives no support to such a view. In their early civilization peoples must hav a religion. Even progressiv peoples gradually assimilate the religion most suitable and nearest to hand; but their character is not radically modified thereby. Gibbon begins his fifty-first chapter with the significant remark that the Mohammedan revolution did not transform the Arab. English history reveals no convulsion when Christianity was introduced.—Furneaux Jordan.

THE HOLY CROSS SERIES.

The Popes and Their Doings. Biographical sketches of the most noted of these vicars of Christ and vicegerents of God, showing what they have done, and what kind of men they were. It contains very plain statements, in very unvarnished language, and the unmasking is complete, proving them to have been cruel, intriguing, and licentious men. Considering the rapid growth of Catholicism in this country, this book cannot be too widely disseminated. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Awful Disclosures of Maria Monk, as exhibited in a narrative of her sufferings during her residence of five years as a novice, and two years as a black nun, in the Hotel Dieu Nunnery, at Montreal. Perhaps not any anti-Catholic book published has created more excitement, and had such a circulation as this work. To counteract its effects the Catholics circulated a story that Maria Monk was "no better than she should be," but investigation disclosed that her "child of shame" was none other than the child of her priest-seducer. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth 75 cents.

Auricular Confession and Popish Nunneries. By Wm. Hogan, for twenty-five years a confessing priest. A revelation of the licentious practices of the priests and nuns in these religious brothels. There is no question that Ex-priest Hogan knew the truth of the tales of vice, seduction, and infanticide he gives in this volume, and equally there is no question that if the people generally knew of them, Catholicism would not be given the vast amounts of money now allowed it by our various city governments. Price, paper, 50 cents, cloth 75 cents.

The Priest in Absolution. A Review of the system of auricular confession, including copious extracts from the "Confessional Unmasked," from the "Master Key to Poperv," etc. The work is a protest against and an appeal to every American citizen to examine carefully and thoughtfully a religious system so invasive of privacy, so powerful for evil in licentious hands, so fraught with danger to female modesty, to the ingenuous openness of youth, and to the freedom of thought, speech, and action. Price, paper, 25 cents.

Priestly Celibacy Exposed A lecture by the Rev. Geo. Townsend Fox, of Durham, England. Revised American edition, showing the result in parishes of the Roman decree that priests shall not mary. Price, paper, 15 cents.

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA IDENTIFIED AS THE CHRISTIAN JESUS.

An important and remarkable revelation concerning the life and times of Apollonius of Tyana, the great sage and philosopher of the first century. It is here claimed that his life and teachings were appropriated and utilized by the formulators of the Christian religion in the interest of so-called Christianity. The plagiarism is made plain in this brief history of Apollonius, especially in view of the historical references and comments thereon. It is quite evident that to conceal the plagiarism, the name of Apollonius was suppressed.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll's ARGUMENT
IN THE
Reynolds Blasphemy Trial,
At Morristown, N. J.

This is the greatest argument ever made in a case of this kind, and will be a model for the Bar so long as the Christians use force to repress free speech. Its legal acumen is unsurpassed, its eloquence never equaled. Wherever Christian persecution is going on this argument should be freely circulated, read to the Christians, and expounded on every occasion.

Darwin and After Darwin.
An Exposition of the Darwinian Theory.
By GEORGE J. ROMANES.

A systematic Exposition of what may be termed the Darwinism of Darwin, and intended to be of service to the general reader rather than to professed naturalists.

Mr. Romanes is well known as one of the most interesting of English writers upon evolution, besides ranking with Professor Huxley in scientific knowledge and ability. And this is a part of his conclusion regarding the great subject of Design, to which the church so often refers:

"Thus whether we look to the facts of adaptation or to those of beauty, everywhere throughout organic nature we meet with abundant evidence of natural causation, while nowhere do we meet with any independent evidence of supernatural design. . . . Adaptation and beauty are alike receiving their explanation at the hands of a purely mechanical philosophy. . . . All nature has thus been transformed before the view of the present generation in a manner and to an extent that has never before been possible; and inasmuch as the change which has taken place has taken place in the direction of naturalism, and this to the extent of rendering the mechanical interpretation of nature universal, it is no wonder if the religious mind has suddenly awakened to a new and a terrible force in the words of its traditional enemy—Where is now thy God?"

News of the Week.

M. WADDINGTON, French statesman, is dead.

THERE is an epidemic of measles in Kansas City, Mo.

THERE were race labor riots in Newtown, L. I., last week

SENATOR WALTHALL, of Mississippi, has resigned because of ill-health.

PRESIDENT HELEN A. SHAFER, of Wellesley College, died Jan. 20th.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has vetoed the New York and New Jersey bridge bill.

THE mayor of Cincinnati has been authorized to expend $100,000 in furnishing work to the unemployed.

THE Brazilian war does not seem nearer conclusion than it was months ago. Reports are very contradictory.

BUSINESS will continue to drag in the United States Senate. There will be no change in its rules this session.

AT Wellman, Iowa, a converted saloon keeper made a bonfire of his bar fixtures and gaming tables. Iowa is a prohibition state.

JANUARY 19th a severe wind storm swept over a part of Dallas, Tex., killing one person and destroying $100,000 worth of property.

LAST Saturday night the New York police raided many saloons and other resorts and carried hundreds of prisoners to the station-houses.

THE income tax bill as a rider to the tariff measure is likely to cause several political horsemen to do some marvelous but disastrous tumbling.

EIGHT thousand persons crowded into the Chicago Auditorium on Jan. 20th to hear Adelina Patti sing. Thousands were unable to gain admittance.

RACE hatred broke out in Camden, N. J., a few days ago, where an attempt was made to lynch a negro who had taken the place of a discharged white laborer.

STREET car men are out on a strike at Bridgeport, Conn. Three big mobs defied the police last Sunday. Cars were burned, saloons opened, and barricades built.

T. DE WITT TALMAGE will resign the pastorate of the Brooklyn Tabernacle in the spring on the completion of the twenty-fifth year of his occupancy of its pulpit.

MANY protected industries, including the lead trust, are cutting the wages of their employees on the ground that their business will be injuriously affected by the Wilson tariff measure.

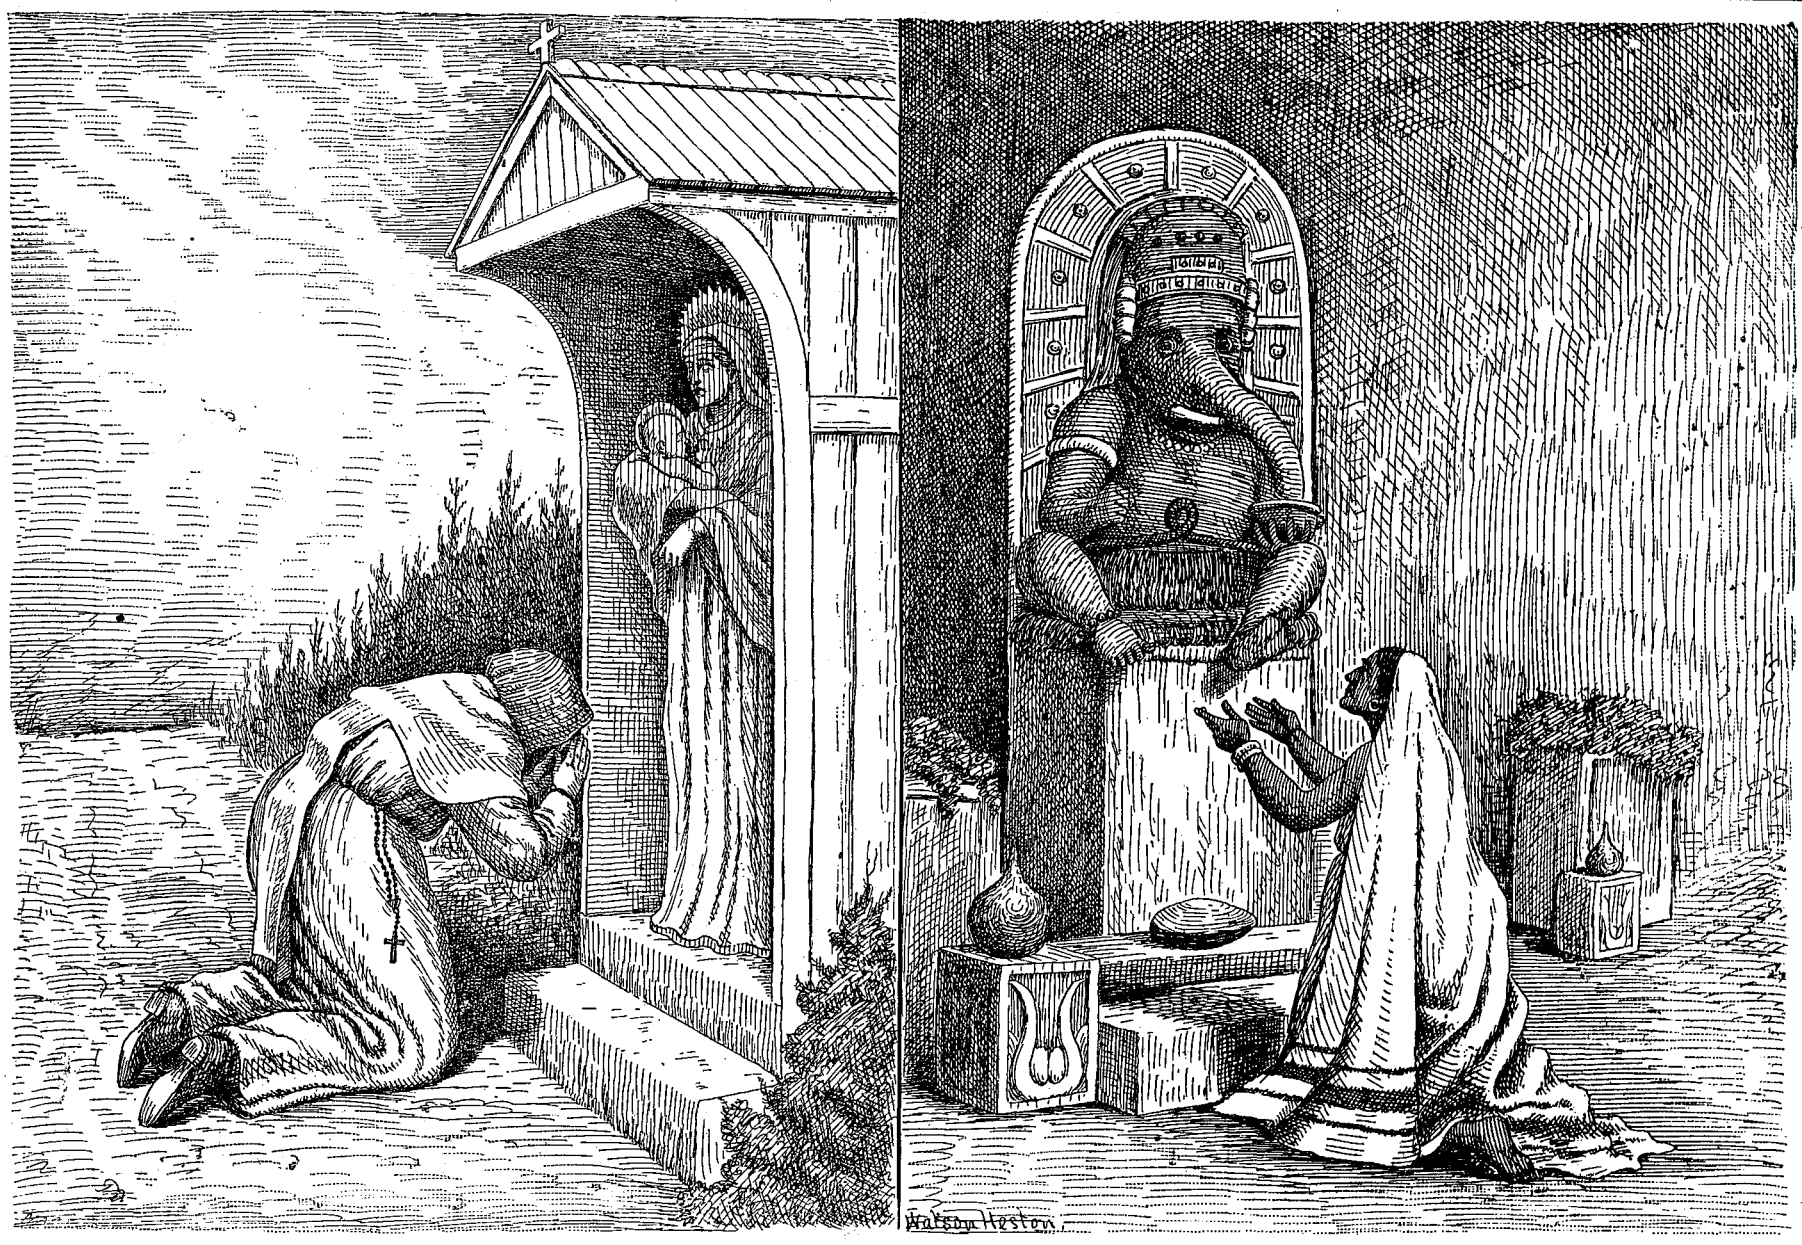
THE Knights of Labor are talking of enjoining Secretary Carlisle from issuing new bonds. They will find it constitutionally impossible to do this. Such an official is liable to impeachment, but cannot be enjoined.

THE New York county visiting committee of the State Charities Aid Association in its annual report says that Gouverneur Hospital and the Infant's Hospital on Randall's island are in a deplorable condition.

CHARLES ECKHARD, who was treasurer of the American Secular Union in 1887, died last Sunday at Bloomfield, N. J., aged about sixty-seven years. The body was cremated at Fresh Pond, Long Island, on Tuesday.

H. W. ROSEBORN discharged the singer, Katherine Germaine, from the "Rainmaker of Syria" company on the ground that she has the shape of a barrel. Miss Germaine (Mrs. Biers) sued for damages and recovered $1,925.

JUDGE ROGER A. PRYOR, of this city, refused a divorce to a husband who secured proof of his wife's alleged unfaithfulness by smuggling witnesses into her room. The judge held that the husband was accessory before the fact to the wife's act.



THE Senate has rejected the nomination of W. B. Hornblower for justice of the Supreme Court. He was nominated last September, and owes his defeat to the antagonism of Senator Hill, who was offended by his opposition to the candidacy of Maynard in this state last fall.

SECRETARY CARLISLE and Senators Chandler, Vilas, and Pugh hav just refused to accept the St. Gaudens design for a World's Fair medal, on the pretext that it is "indecent." The artist very spiritedly refuses to modify the design, as that would be an admission that it was improper. The politicians are enjoying the mingled pity and contempt of the educated.

CHRISTIAN AND HEATHEN IDOLATRY.

TO NEW READERS OF THE TRUTH SEEKER.

We send this issue of The Truth Seeker to a great many Liberals who are not subscribers, with an earnest invitation to them to become such, and thereby help along the Liberal cause.

We would also respectfully call their attention to the many points of excellence of the Paper.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is the Largest Freethought Journal in the World.

The Cartoons of Heston appear each week, and each picture is worth the cost of the paper a year to one who appreciates plain and telling arguments against ecclesiasticism.

THE TRUTH SEEKER constantly prints the most varied and entertaining Selection of Original Papers of any Liberal Journal Its Contributors are all the noted Liberals of the country. All that Col. R. G. Ingersoll gives to the Public can be found in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and that Poet of Freethought, Samuel P. Putnam, writes more for its columns than for any other. The Liberal speakers send us accounts of their journeys, and the best writers of Freethought freely devote their services to the cause of Liberalism through the colums of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Charles Watts, perhaps the greatest Debater of our time, certainly the foremost Secular orator of England, will send us monthly letters from England with all the news of our movement there and such reflections and pertinent observations as will surely make every English Secularist living in this country and Canada want to read THE TRUTH SEEKER. George E. Macdonald, one of the rarest combinations of humorist, satirist, philosopher, logician, has been engaged to write regularly for our columns. As the "Man With the Badge Pin," he is known to nearly all the Liberals of the country and we are willing to make him known to more.

THE TRUTH SEEKER gives all the news of Freethought, and is always on Guard Against the Encroachments of Ecclesiastics upon the People's Liberties.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is devoted to the defense of Mental Liberty, of American Institutions, and the Preservation of the United States Constitution, so far as regards religious tests and the maintenance of human rights. It advocates the abolition of all laws based on religion or religious observances. It demands the taxation of church property. It is uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of church and state, either in name or in fact.

The Sunday Question is now to the front all over the country. On that THE TRUTH SEEKER will voice the demands of the Liberal minded men and women of the country, and nowhere else will the rights of the people as against Puritanism be found so sturdily defended.

To sum it up, THE TRUTH SEEKER is the biggest, best, and bravest Freethought journal in the world, and if you are a Liberal or Freethinker, you want it and ought to take it. We appeal also to fair-minded Christians to hear our side and then decide Bigots and fanatics, we suppose, wouldn't take it on any terms.

RELIGION A CURSE, RELIGION A DISEASE, RELIGION A LIE.

By Samuel P. Putnam.

Dedicated to the American Congress, of 1892, which for the sake of Religion, Stabbed Liberty to the Heart.

A work burning with indignation inspired by the Congressional act closing the World's Fair on Sunday—an act which practically united the government and the Christian church.

To which is added Mr. Putnam's address delivered before the Columbian Exposition Committee of the House of Representatives against Sunday closing.

Also the following Essays and Poems by Mr. Putnam, which have never before been put in book form: Orthodoxy; Freethought; Man, Not God (written for a Paine anniversary); The Statue of Liberty and Thomas Paine; a poem written for the opening exercises of the Silverton, Ore., Freethought Hall; Death and Life; The Golden Age; Shut the Door (a poem on the closing of the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia, in 1876).

The main essay in this work is one of the strongest arraignments ever made of the religion which cramps and fetters the minds of the people of this country. It should be distributed widely. It has been commended in the highest terms as it appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER and we hope every reader will buy a copy to lend his neighbor and arouse thought.

Price 25 cents; Five copies for $1.

A NEW BOOK.--AND A MOST ORIGINAL ONE.

The Creation of God.

By DR. JACOB HARTMANN.

An explanation of the origin of the God Idea, and the mental processes that led to the formation of idols and the worship of them. From the time of Terah's apostasy, Abraham's reformation and his banishment for heresy and blasphemy against the Chaldean idols, to Christ's coming, the principal characters are analyzed and shown to be human, by thought and deed. It is made plain that the peculiar phraseology, cant sayings, subterfuges, miracles, wonder-workings, and supernatural padding are the proper offspring of the then existing barbarism, ignorance, and superstition, constituting the peculiar politics of the day.

PEN PICTURES OF THE WORLD'S FAIR.

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

It is, besides being a complete Guide-Book, the best description of the Fair yet given—poetic, beautiful, accurate. It describes the inauguration ceremonies, gives the director-general's address, the efforts to close the Fair Sundays and the triumph of the Sunday-openers; describes the various buildings and what they contain, and is, all in all, the very best picture of the Fair that can be painted with a pen.

ILLUSTRATED.

A MAP OF JACKSON PARK, enabling the visitor to make his way around, and the stay-at-home to see where he went.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE FAIR, enabling one to comprehend at a glance the magnitude of the Exposition, the greatest ever known to the present time.

For $3.50 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," in board covers ($1).

This is a splendid opportunity to obtain books which every Liberal desires to hav, at an exceedingly low price. Old and new subscribers can avail themselvs of it, and we shall be glad if our present readers will call the attention of their friends to the values offered.

Clerical Functions, Past and Present.

Rev. G. Monroe Royce, once rector of the American Episcopal church in Florence, Italy, and author of a series of articles on "London Preachers," writes in the January Forum of "The Decline of the American Pulpit." He thinks there are many very inferior men in the ministry, and it is probable that none but the inferior ministers themselvs will question the truth of his statement. Occupants of the depreciated pulpit and the religious papers are very sharply criticising him. He quotes a professor in a divinity school as saying that very poor material is sent to him out of which he is expected to make ministers. Bishop Potter, of New York, recently addressed a diocesan convention, and in the course of his remarks he said that there is a large and increasing class of clergymen who hav, it is clear, "gravely misapprehended the nature of ministerial qualifications." In the American pulpit are to be found but few graduates of Harvard and Yale. Mr. Royce adds that while in all other professions the ratio of specially trained men is continually advancing, in the pulpit it is receding. He notes the melancholy fact that when Harvard Divinity School and Union Theological Seminary raised their standards they immediately lost in numbers.

Mr. Royce discusses the question, "Why is it that so few of our able young men are drawn to the pulpit?" The usual answer is, "Because of the deep and wide pread skepticism of our times." Mr. Royce does not accept this explanation. He admits that there is a widespread skepticism, and that the scientific spirit is its chief source, but this skepticism, he avers, is neither deep nor earnest. We, in turn, are compelled to confess that there is some truth in this observation. Were the inquiring spirit of the age more profound and more in earnest to uproot falsehood and plant the seeds of truth, we should not find Liberals giving their adhesion to so many schemes which diametrically oppose the fundamental principles of Freethought, and we should witness the erasure from the rolls of church membership of the names of hundreds of thousands of men and women who hav no more faith in the basic dogmas of Christianity than hav Robert G. Ingersoll and Susan H. Wixon.

Rev. Mr. Royce thinks that the American pulpit needs an awakening similar to that which aroused the English ministry a half-century ago. Locke, Bentham, and the elder Mill, we are told, "were all swept away as so much rubbish and dead-wood" before the "mighty spiritual flood," set in motion by the "poet-philosopher," Samuel Taylor Coleridge. "Intuition has held its ground in England ever since." Seldom has the spiritual power of the English church "been stronger than at the present moment." "The very best minds of England are to be found in the pulpit," while Gladstone is a representativ of her laymen. "The English pulpit can not be drawn by the scientific fly." That is, the English pulpit is careful to avoid the consideration of living, practical questions. The able ministers are merely "spiritual" poets. They hav profited by the experience of their predecessors, who set their lances in rest against the geologists and other scientific investigators and went down into the dust and into disgrace as the result of the foolish encounter. So long as the English or any other clergy can ignore the results of scientific discovery, intuition "can hold its ground," in so far as those who take their instruction from the ministers are concerned. The assertion that "the very best minds of England are in the pulpit" is merely an assertion. One Herbert Spencer will outbalance, in the scales which weigh the great world-forces, all the ministers of England, not omitting the brilliant Maurice and Kingsley, whom Mr. Royce names. Gladstone has done good work in politics and literature, but when he enters the arena of theological controversy he is found fatally weak, because his cause is weak.

Mr. Royce declares that the attention given in the American pulpit to "such men" as Tyndall, Spencer, Huxley, and Harrison is "worse than absurd, it is mournful." In England they are ignored by the clergy; not the "slightest reference is made to them by any English clergyman in his public ministrations," so far as Mr. Royce has heard. This might hav been expected. The English conservativ is the last man to feel the influence of a new thought. No wonder that England's great scientists—and no country has given to the world greater ones in the last half century—are strangers in English pulpits. It would indeed be a miracle if the attorneys of retrogression should hav words of praise for the champions of progress, while they are just a little too shrewd—made so by experience—to advertise the scientific foe by attacking him.

The New York Evening Post thinks that Mr. Royce erred in calling the change that has taken place in the American pulpit a "decline." It observes that "the whole controvery seems to us a profitless one, because it is so largely a dispute about words. · · · If he [Mr. Royce] had contented himself with pointing out the great changes that hav come over the Protestant pulpit in the last thirty years, and refused to call those changes a decline or an improvement, we think he would hav fared better. At any rate he could hav kept himself more closely in touch with fact, and could hav written with less warmth and been replied to with less wrath. For there can be no doubt, in the mind of one with an unprejudiced eye on the development of church life in the United States, that the pulpit has undergone a sweeping metamorphosis within a generation. · · · The whole thing may be resolved into the query whether the changed conditions and demands of the congregations hav not, in fact, produced a changed type of the clergy."

It may be noted, in passing, that if the American Protestant ministry has been compelled to undergo a transformation because such a change was demanded by the laity, then it is apparent that the ministry no longer leads in the churches. The ministers hav been forced to submit to innovations initiated outside the pulpit, and doubtless also outside the church.

The Evening Post continues: "Just here, we think, is where Mr. Royce made a fundamental mistake in assuming that the kind of preacher the people want to-day is a 'seer,' a man of 'spiritual insight,' a 'poet in the poise of his mind.' Taking the average congregation in the older parts of the country, this would be far from the fact. Such 'a prophet of the soul' as he has in his mind's eye represents, rather, the unpopular and disappearing type, which is being replaced by quite another. The best way to find out what kind of preachers the people want is to ask what kind they hav. They get what they want in the long run, and we may be sure that the most successful ministers of the present come nearest the ideal of the present."

The first of the principal qualities of the successful minister is, according to the Post, social usefulness. "Church people want a pastor who is thoroughly acquainted with all the proprieties and amenities of life, who is as much at ease in a parlor as in a pulpit, who can meet them and their friends on terms of social equality, and never giv them occasion to blush for him. They are more and more coming to insist upon surrounding church services with an air of quiet decorum. They would simply shudder at one of Mr. Royce's prophets, blurting out all sorts of unpleasant and ill-bred truths. Some crusty old fellow has said that all preaching is essentially bad manners. It may hav been once, but we hav changed all that. 'Doctrinal preaching' has gone, mainly because it is not 'good form.' Dr. Shedd laments its disappearance, but his complaints are as nothing to what would be heard from the congregations if it were to reappear. But it will not, nor will the famous doctrinal preachers of other days, who were invisible through the week and incomprehensible on Sunday."

Of course if the church is simply a fashionable Sunday rendezvous we must expect to find the minister, who is "at home" on that day, a polished gentleman who will not say anything that can offend any of his guests. It is permissible for him to occasionally vent his usually suppressed ill-humor on the outspoken Infidel, for the latter is supposed not to hav any friends in that club house reception room.

Executiv talent is the ministerial qualification next in order, according to the Post. "The modern church is a complex business requiring administrativ ability of a high order. More and more of this is coming to be required of the minister. Let one take up the year book of a city church, with its ramified charitable, educational, and missionary interests, and he will see what a head for business the clergyman in charge of it must hav. · · · What would a prophet do if plumped down at a table with a lot of intricate accounts and tough business problems thrust in his face? He would rather tackle Jezebel or the prophets of Baal twenty times over."

The Evening Post concludes its timely observations with this paragraph: "It makes little difference whether we call the changes in the pulpit which these inexorable demands hav brought about a decline or an advance. They amount, in fact, to a transformation, which is all the while becoming more complete. How it works in individual cases may be inferred from a colloquy between two college classmates, one of them a clergyman, ten years after graduation. They were comparing notes about intellectual growth and their opportunities for it, and the clergymen said grimly: 'You will see at once how much wiser I am than in college when I tell you that I hav since gone to two or three hundred afternoon teas, hav played five hundred sets of tennis with the daughters of my parishioners, hav attended many scores of receptions, and gossiped three hours on an average at each; hav presided at a thousand or two meetings of trustees and boards, circulated a couple of hundred subscription papers, and built three churches, two chapels, and a rectory.'"

Need we wonder that ministers know so little about science, including sociology? The course of life so many of them in the cities and fashionable suburbs are compelled to lead makes them as unfit to be the intellectual and moral leaders and teachers of the people as are the male and female butterflies of the "society" to which they render homage. On the other hand we find such mountebanks, buffoons, and vulgarians as Sam Small, Sam Jones, Talmage, Mills, and the other sensationalists, with Joseph Cook, Parkhurst, Dixon the sport, Herrick Johnson, and the National Reform Association fanatics and petition-forgers thrown in to complete an olla podrida of incompetence, unveracity, clownishness, nescience, bigotry, intolerance, treason, and cruelty. No wonder Rev. Mr. Royce thinks the American pulpit is in a decline. But bad as it is, and covered from sight as most of the naturally good men in it are, it cannot exert the evil influence which came from the Christian pulpit in America in the days when Increase and Cotton Mather and Jonathan Edwards were its bright and shining lights. For so much let us be thankful to the patient students of science and the heralds of Freethought.

The Truth Seeker Company has just printed a new descriptiv catalog of books published and sold at 28 Lafayette Place, New York. It will be sent free on application.

Wanted—New Subscribers.

We solicit the kind attention of our friends to the need which exists of increasing the subscription list of THE TRUTH SEEKER. There are several reasons for this, which our readers will readily see. First, It will do a world of good, by making more Liberals and by interesting those already liberal in the work of Freethought. The church is making great encroachments upon our liberties, and the people need to know about it, in order to defeat its tyranny. And those who read THE TRUTH SEEKER are a hundred times more interested and activ than those who do not. Second, It is a duty we owe to our fellow-men to giv them the light of reason we hav obtained. Liberalism makes for true civilization, and freedom from fear of an angry God makes men happier and better. Every Liberal should do all he can to lift up his neighbors from the darkness of superstition to the glorious plain of mental liberty. And, as Mr. Wakeman says, referring to the resolution regarding the Liberal papers passed at the late International Congress: "They are the very life of the cause of intellectual and practical emancipation of the people. As such they are to be built up and sustained by constant care, payment, encouragement, and solicitation for subscribers for them." Third, An increase in the list will relieve the readers from the occasional "duns" we are compelled to send out in order to get money with which to pay bills. If we can obtain two or three thousand new subscribers, the increased revenue will make the business work of the paper easier, and we can continue to improve the paper without fear of financial embarrassments.

To reward those who will do a little for us in this matter we hav arranged to take a large number of Mr. Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," and to every one who sends us four new yearly subscribers at the regular rates of $3 ($12 in all), we shall send a copy of that magnificent work free. Those who send the club before the book is on the press will be enrolled among the original subscribers and patrons in the book.

And to make it easy to get these four new subscribers we will offer them as a premium either of two spendid works—The "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought" in cloth binding. Our readers know the value of these books, and that about every Liberal in the country would like a copy of one or the other. Either one of these, as may be chosen, will be given to the new subscribers obtained in these clubs of four, and a copy of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" to the one who gets up the club and sends the money and names.

We cannot afford to make this premium to single subscribers, but to enable old subscribers and single new subscribers to obtain these and other desirable works at a great reduction, we hav made a list of premiums in connection with subscriptions to the paper, to be found in the first column of the first editorial page of THE TRUTH SEEKER. We are willing to do our part toward making the obtaining of good Liberal works easy and cheap, and hope our readers will take advantage of the terms offered.

Once more we ask that a favorable eye be turned in our direction, and a helpful hand extended. As the resolutions of the International Congress expressed it, Boom the Liberal papers and you boom the Liberal cause.

To the close and fair observer it appears that the American Protectiv Association has just one object—to put and keep Catholics out of office and to put and keep Protestants in office. Instead of opposing the Catholic church at the points where it antagonizes liberty, the American Protectiv Association is in politics for the spoils, using opposition to "Roman influence" as its deceptiv rallying-cry. It represents and includes the most bigoted and unthinking elements of Protestantism, intent on establishing a Protestant state-church. Its papers which come to this office are as fanatical and less reasonable than the Christian Statesman, and surpass in bigotry all other religious papers—Catholic and Protestant—that we see.

A great revival is in progress in Brooklyn. The New York Times observes that "it is one of the curious coincidences of our history that movements of this sort hav invariably followed periods of great business distress." This is a polite way of stating the familiar truth that the church invariably thrives on the misfortunes of the people.

Susan H. Wixon has in press a new book, "Right Living." It will be bound in cloth only and will sell for $1. Those who want it can send for it now, and we will book all orders and fill as soon as the volume is ready. No doubt most of our readers will be eager to know what the Editor of the "Children's Corner" has to say on so important a subject.

Some weeks ago our good friend, Erwin Auffurth, of New Orleans, sent us four new subscribers. One of these, who received as a premium, "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," writes to Mr. Auffurth: "The book is out of sight; laughed more over it than any other thing I ever read. It is worth its weight in gold." That is the way they talk. The book is a regular nerve tingler.

The sore need of cash compels us to ask our friends to renew their subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER at the earliest convenient moment. The "hard times" hav hit us, but we must crawl through them somehow, and we turn with confidence to our readers. The amounts in individual cases are small and easy to pay, but the aggregate is large and we must hav it to meet expenses. We hav made such a combination of books and paper that everyone can get a get a good deal more than his money's worth, and attention is called to these offers. Purchasing books will help us also. But please renew your subscription now. We need it.

Talmage announces that he will resign his pastorate of the Brooklyn Tabernacle next spring upon the completion of twenty-five years of acting there. This is certainly welcome news, but our pleasure is alloyed by his further statement that he intends to tour the country as a peripatetic sermonizer and also to afflict a long-suffering people through the medium of the syndicate press. Years ago the irreverent Times of this city said that it was Talmage's custom to chalk his sermons upon the soles of his boots and then enthusiastically wave the latter from the pulpit of the Tabernacle, his pedal extremities being in his boots, of course. Advancing years may hav somewhat stiffened his joints, and so it may be that his provincial houses will find the evolutions of the Brooklyn acrobat less hazardous and diverting than they hav anticipated.

In the Open Court of January 25th Moncure D. Conway announces the discovery by himself of a work of Thomas Paine's, which has remained buried for one hundred years. It was written in France between the dates of the publication of Parts I. and II. of "The Rights of Man," and in reply to four questions put to Paine by Condorcet, or, possibly, Lafayette. The questions related to the basis of the new constitution of France and the legislativ and executiv powers of the government under the constitution. Paine's reply was not necessarily for publication, and Condorcet held the manuscript until 1792, when he translated it and caused it to be printed in the Chronique du Mois (May, June, and July of that year). The essay covers twenty-four folio pages, and will appear in full in the second volume of Mr. Conway's new edition of Paine's works.

A city paper remarks that the churches appear with advancing civilization to draw away from the conception of "conversion" as a state of feeling and to "insist that it shall be coupled with a firm and practical morality." It concludes that the change is, from the point of view of morality, "a gratifying one." In other words, civilization is gradually reforming Christianity by eliminating the non-human elements. As God and heaven and hell recede into the background, the powers, virtues, and duties of true manhood and womanhood come to the front. Many of us yet on the morning side of life can easily remember hearing Christian clergymen frantically declaim against the moral man as the most dangerous foe to religion. And they were undoubtedly right, defining religion to mean the theory of man's relation to the supernatural, which is the only scientific and historically true definition that can be given.

Referring to the resignation of Talmage the New York Times remarks that the announcement is "neither unexpected nor unwelcome." That a Talmage should sooner or later "play out" it thinks "is a conclusion that every lover of civilization was bound to entertain." In every field of human activity, in "everything that transcends the bargain counter, the hope of the lover of civilization must hav been that a time would come when people would distinguish between what was evanescent and what was permanent, between what was false and what was true." But it regretfully adds that there is, to our shame be it said, no evidence that Talmage is less popular than he was two decades ago. It quotes an enterprising manager as saying, not many years since: "Do you know that there are two hundred thousand copies of that man's sermons printed and read in England every week—and no respectable person ever heard of him." The Times continues: "The common people hav heard him gladly, and the more gladly the commoner they are. He has never had anything to say to any educated or fastidious or sensitiv person. The commoner his audience the more he has had to say to it." It is a shame to the Americans as an ostensibly free and supposedly intelligent people that they should hav opened so many and such expansiv ears to the inanities and ravings of such a moral and mental "sport" as T. De Witt Talmage.

How religion—which has been aptly defined as superstition in fashion—has been modified by science and Freethought since Cotton Mather and the other witch-hunting Puritans of Massachusetts hounded to death helpless old women at Salem is strikingly shown by the fate which has just befallen three members of a Methodist church near Salem, Ohio. We hav before alluded to this case. Certain events had occurred of which these good Christians could not furnish a ready explanation, except by recourse to the theory of witchcraft. So they circulated the story that a family in the neighborhood—who were foreigners and somewhat exclusiv in their associations, hence supposedly fit for the service of the devil—had bewitched divers persons and things. A cross-roads war immediately resulted, and a church trial soon followed. It was decided that the accusers had been guilty of immoral and un-Christian conduct in bringing a charge of witchcraft against the other people, and they were promptly expelled from the church. Now, they hav taken an appeal to the conference. They should appeal to John Wesley's famous and logical Bible-based argument for witchcraft. It does seem cruel for the church founded by that great and good man to kick out such genuin Methodists as these, whose only crime is believing more implicitly in the Bible than do most other modern Christians. This witchcraft affair is very suggestiv. The survival of the most disastrous delusion of the Dark—Christian—Ages through the centuries and its recrudescence in the minds of those Ohio Methodists demonstrates anew that we are not yet out of danger, that the habit of superstition is not yet eliminated from the blood of those whose ancestors felt the heavy and cruel hand of the church in the days of her supremacy. Given a community composed of such as the three expelled Ohio Methodists, isolate them and put into their hands the Bible, and time would be the only factor whose operation would be needed to produce the same ghastly fruit that ripened in Spain, Germany, and Scotland and at that other Salem in earlier ages. Given the seed and the fruitful soil and nothing more is required than the season of germination and development. Only Freethought can redeem the world.

Stevens, ex-minister to Hawaii, is a religious canter of the most nauseating type. In the last number of the Universalist magazine, To-Day, he magniloquently asks, referring to the Sandwich Islands:

"Why did the Almighty Creator, by laws and forces of his own, lift those islands from the depth of the sea, place them in that commanding position, surround them with a genial climate, clothe them in perpetual green, and invite men there to make their homes? Why was gathered that vast Pacific area of water, the most splendid field on the globe for the pathway of ships, and for commercial intercourse and commercial power? The enormous wealth of waters must hav been accumulated for some other purpose than for the life abodes of sea monsters which roam in its depths and for the fish which sport in its waves. Plainly enough the volcanic fires which pushed up these beautiful isles as sentinels and guardians in the North Pacific sea were the servants of God in a great work which he was preparing for the uses of man. All those who hav made history a serious study and recognize that its undying lamps are shining for the guidance of nations, know that seas and oceans and the islands within them hav a remarkable relation to each other and to the nations adjacent to them, who make use of them as agencies of their intercourse, their commerce, and for the media of their power."

From these vast assumptions he deduces the "justness and necessity of American possession" of those islands. How much your cock-sure theologian knows about God's purposes! Judging from the words and tone of Stevens we might be led into the error of supposing that he is the Almighty's private secretary or perhaps his Minister to Earth. It does not appear to hav occurred to this Universalist logician that when "God" lifted those islands out of the waters and put the Hawaiian people upon them he intended that people to hav the islands, instead of the missionaries and their sons, who hav "civilized" nearly all the gentle nativs out of existence. Great is Cant and Stevens is his prophet.

Self-Education.

Educate yourself. If all the colleges were wiped out literature and science would suffer no loss. Thomas Paine, Horace Greeley, and Abraham Lincoln were self-educated; Voltaire was not college bred. Historian Buckle quit college at sixteen; Francis Bacon at fifteen. W. H. Burr.

George Macdonald is continuing his "Observations" in The Truth Seeker. We hope they are to be a permanent feature of that journal. George has been inspecting the exhibition of the instruments of torture, which were some time ago on view in London, and are now on tour in America. "As exhibiting the method by which the religion of love gets followers," he says, "they cannot be equaled."—London Freethinker.

New Publications.

The many admirers of Mr. Otto Wettstein's writings, which are of the unsophisticated materialistic variety, will be glad to learn that his Congress address on the "Giant Delusion" is now obtainable as a pamphlet for 10 cents.

The address delivered by Miss Susan H. Wixon at the International Freethought Congress is now printed in pamphlet form, the title being "Woman: Four Centuries of Progress." None of the speeches at the Congress has received as much praise as this one, and none was more worthy of the eulogiums bestowed. Single copies 10 cents.

A new edition of A. Jacobson's "Bible Inquirer" has just been issued from the press of the Truth Seeker Company, which has secured both the plates and the copy right of the work. As a concordance or index to the absurdities of holy writ, the "Bible Inquirer" is not equaled by any other book of its size. It has enjoyed a large sale, which it still maintains. The price is 25 cents.

"Self-Contradictions of the Bible," the ninth edition of which is hereby announced, will hereafter bear the imprint of the Truth Seeker Company, to whom all orders for said work must now be addressed. We hav purchased the plates from the author and original publisher, Col. W. H. Burr, and added "Self-Contradictions" to the Truth Seeker Library. The work is not an argumentativ or persuasiv one—it is simply convincing, as it gives a hundred and fifty instances where the Bible contradicts itself, and he who runs may read. Price 15 cents.

Lectures and Meetings.

The Pittsburg Secular Society meets in Curry University Hall, Sixth street, near Penn avenue, every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

W. F. Jamieson is lecturing in Los Angeles, Cal., to good houses. He desires to make lecture engagements in Nevada, Utah, and Colorado, along the lines of railroad East. Address W. F. Jamieson, Elsinore, Cal.

The First Secular Church of Portland, Ore., meets in Central Labor Council Hall, 170½ Second street near Yamhill, every Sunday at 7.30 P. M. Katie Kehm Smith, lecturer. Sunday-school in same place at 12:30 P.M.

The Ohio Liberal Society meets in College Hall, 168½ Walnut street, Cincinnati, Sunday evenings at 7:45, prompt. Admission is free. Program for January:

The Women's Liberal League, of Philadelphia, meets in the Skerrett Building, Ridge avenue and Green street, Tuesday evenings at 8 o'clock. Admission free. All are welcome.

S. P. Putnam's lecture appointments:
Chicago, Ill., Feb. 18th, 25th.
Toronto, March 4, 11.

Those who desire lectures at any points between New York and Chicago, and in the vicinity of Chicago during the month of February, will please write at once to Mr. Putnam, care of The Truth Seeker, New York.

The Brooklyn Philosophical Association holds meetings every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in Long Island Business College, South Eighth street, between Bedford and Driggs avenues. Program of lectures for February:
February 4th—Paine Celebration. "Paine's Religious Work," Henry Rowley. "Paine's Political Career," T. B. Wakeman. Vocal and instrumental music.
February 11th—"Survivals of Sex Worship," Miss Ida C. Craddock.
February 18th—"Personal Hygiene," Dr. Charles H. Shepard.
February 25th—"Morality without Christianity," Franklin Steiner.

Franklin Steiner's lecture engagements are as follows:

Feb. 8, 9, 10, Murray, Ia.	Mar. 9, Meriden, Conn.
" 11, Chicago, Ill.	" 11, Boston, Mass.
" 18, Alliance, O.	" 12, 13, Harwich, Mass.
" 23, New York City.	" 14, Cotuit, Mass.

" 17, 18, Cortland, O.	Mar. 2, New York, N. Y.
" 19, Jamestown, N. Y.

Appointments for New York and Pennsylvania, also additional appointments for Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri, will be published later.

At the Brooklyn Philosophical Association last Sunday John Swinton spoke on "John Brown of Osawatomie." He showed the part that kind-hearted man played in bringing about the end of slavery. He said, among other things, that in the needless revolution which may be precipitated for industrial change, the memory of John Brown will hav a prominent place. Mr. Swinton also said that a statue should be erected of that noble man in New York harbor and on the spot at Charleston, Va., where he was hanged.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture appointments and subjects for the present month are as follows:

February 1st—Elgin, Ill.,	Shakspere
February 2d—Chicago, Ill.,	Some Mistakes of Moses
February 3d—Joliet, Ill.,	Lincoln
February 4th—Chicago,	What Must We Do to Be Saved?
February 5th—Bloomington, Ill.,	Shakspere
February 6th—Peoria, Ill.,	Shakspere
February 7th—Keokuk, Ia.,	Shakspere
February 8th—Burleigh, Ia.,	Shakspere
February 9th—Ottumwa, Ia.,	Shakspere
February 10th—Des Moines, Ia.,	Shakspere
February 11th—Davenport, Ia.,	Shakspere
February 12th—Dubque. Ia.,	Shakspere

THE CHURCH AND THE SCIENCE OF GEOGRAPHY.

Regarding the science of geography we find this assertion in "What Catholics have Done for Science":

> Catholics have been the great pioneers of discovery. In gathering the materials for the edifice of geography, Catholics have done the great bulk of the work. · · · We have inherited almost the whole of the science of geography from Catholic sources.

But the vital question is not what individual Catholics have contributed to the fund of scientific knowledge. What is of interest to all is the attitude which the church assumed toward new theories and discoveries which contradicted or seemed to contradict old ideas. Take, for instance, the proposition that there may be inhabitants at the antipodes. The idea had been combated by most of the representative men of the early church. Early in the eighth century Bishop Virgil of Salzburg broached the doctrine again. We will let Mr. White tell what followed:

"There then stood in Germany, in those first years of the eighth century, one of the greatest and noblest of men—St. Boniface. His learning was of the best then known. In labors he was a worthy successor of the Apostles; his genius for Christian work made him unwillingly primate of Germany; his devotion to duty led him willingly to martyrdom. There sat too, at that time, on the papal throne a great Christian statesman—Pope Zachary. Boniface immediately declared against the revival of such a heresy as the doctrine of the antipodes; he stigmatized it as an assertion that there are men beyond the reach of the appointed means of salvation; he attacked Virgil, and called on Pope Zachary for aid.

"The Pope, as the infallible teacher of Christendom, makes a strong response. He cites passages from the book of Job and the wisdom of Solomon against the doctrine of the antipodes; he declares it 'perverse, iniquitous, and against Virgil's own soul,' and indicates a purpose of driving him from his bishopric. Whether this purpose was carried out or not, the old theological view, by virtue of the Pope's divinely ordered and protected 'inerrancy,' was re-established, and the doctrine that the earth has inhabitants on but one of its sides became more than ever orthodox, and, in the mind of the church, necessary to salvation. · · ·

"Nor was this the worst. In Italy, at the beginning of the fourteenth century, the church thought it necessary to deal with questions of this sort by rack and fagot. In 1316 Peter of Abano, famous as a physician, having promulgated this with other obnoxious doctrines in science, only escaped the Inquisition by death; and in 1327 Cecco d'Ascoli, noted as an astronomer, was for this and similar crimes driven from his professorship at Bologna and burned alive at Florence. · · ·

"The warfare of Columbus the world knows well—how the bishop of Ceuta worsted him in Portugal; how sundry wise men of Spain confronted him with the usual quotations from the psalms, from St. Paul, and from St. Augustine; how, even after he was triumphant, and after his voyage had greatly strengthened the theory of the earth's sphericity, with which the theory of antipodes was so closely connected, the church by its highest authority solemnly stumbled and persisted in going astray" (Popular Science Monthly, Vol. XLI, pp. 579–81).

Mr. White adds that the influence of the church upon geography was, upon the whole, "steadily hostile to truth." Here he draws a line of distinction between the religious and the theological spirit, giving due credit to individuals whose religious ardor led them on voyages of discovery, and censuring the church which persecuted those whose reasoning it deemed at variance with scriptural and ecclesiastical authority.

ENMITY TOWARD OTHER SCIENTIFIC INNOVATIONS.

The author of "What Catholics Have Done For Science" makes this claim in his preface:

> Yes, every branch of modern science owes, not only its origin, but the main part of its growth to Catholic scientists, so that it can be said with sincerest truth that the scepter of science belongs to the church.

Under the head of "Galileo" we show something of what the church did to retard the development of astronomy. Rational hygiene had to contend against the grossest of superstitions fostered by the church, and within two years Catholic towns in Europe have resorted to religious mummeries to stay the progress of the cholera, while the simplest sanitary precautions were neglected and scientific physicians denounced as emissaries of the devil. Scientific treatment of the insane and hysterical was impossible so long as the very peculiar ideas inculcated or encouraged by the church alienists were generally accepted. In the fields of geology, anthropology, medicine, meteorology, philology, human antiquity, Egyptology, comparative mythology, and other sciences the balance of the influence of the church was heavily against reason and progress. The evidence in support of this statement is overwhelming; lack of space alone prevents its appearance here as part of this article. But we cannot forbear quoting a few passages from Mr. White's chapters on "Demoniacal Possession and Insanity":

"The idea of the Satanic possession of lunatics led to attempts to punish the indwelling demon. As this theological theory and practice became more fully developed, and ecclesiasticism more powerful to enforce it, all mildness began to change, or to be driven into remote corners of Christ ndom; the admonitions to gentle treatment by the great pagan and Moslem physicians were forgotten, and the treatment of lunatics tended more and more toward severity; more and more generally it was felt that cruelty to madmen was punishment of the devil residing within or acting upon them. · · · · To deny Satan was Atheism; and perhaps nothing did so much to fasten the epithet 'Atheist' upon the medical profession as the suspicion that it did not fully acknowledge diabolical interference in mental disease. · · ·

"Curiously enough, the only really important effort [for humane treatment of lunatics] in the Christian church was stimulated by the Mohammedans. Certain monks, who had much to do with them in redeeming Christian slaves, found in the fifteenth century what John Howard found in the eighteenth, that the Arabs and Turks made a large and merciful provision for lunatics, such as was not seen in Christian lands; and this example led to better establishments in Spain and Italy. · ·

"The revival of the science of medicine, under the impulse of the new study of antiquity, suddenly bade fair to take out of the hands of the church the profession of which she had enjoyed so long and so profitable a monopoly. Only one class of diseases remained unquestionably hers—those which were still admitted to be due to the direct personal interference of Satan—and foremost among these was insanity. · · · Already, before the close of the fifteenth century, Pope Innocent VIII. had issued the startling bull by which he called on the archbishops, bishops, and other clergy of Germany to join hands with his inquisitors in rooting out these willing bond-servants of Satan, who were said to swarm throughout all that country, and to revel in the blackest crimes. A half-dozen popes had since reiterated the appeal; and, though none of these documents touched on the blame of witchcraft for diabolical possession, the inquisitors charged with their execution pointed it out most clearly in their infamous hand-book, the 'Witch-Hammer'" (Popular Science Monthly Vol. XXXIV., pp. 437–9, 578).

If the sins of commission of the authors of these parochial school books are many and rank, not less numerous and offensive are their sins of omission. It seems to be as easy for them to suppress the truth as to tell positive falsehoods. e have a striking instance of this in their treatment of the subject of persecution. They describe with great particularity the persecutions to which Catholic Christians were subjected by the Roman government, by Protestants, and others, but they are silent as the grave regarding the awful persecutions of which THE church is guilty. In only two instances do they give even a hint that the Catholic power has ever been instrumental in putting men to death save in defensive wars. One of these apparent exceptions is the burning of John Huss. Businger in "Church History" says that "this proud and obstinate man withstood both entreaty and threat, and was burnt to death, at Constance, on the sixth of July, in the year 1415, as a heretic and disturber of the public peace." This statement, misleading as it is, was not sufficiently so to satisfy Mr Businger, so he subjoins this footnote:

> It is untrue to allege that the Church, in the Council of Constance, put Huss to death. The Council did nothing but its duty; namely, to adjudge him guilty of heresy, to deprive him of his office, and to excommunicate him from the Church. He now became amenable to the civil courts, as a disturber of the public peace. These pronounced his sentence, and executed it, though the bishops of the Council, according to the testimony of Ulrich Reichenthal, who was an eye-witness, petitioned King Sigismund and the judges to spare Huss's life" (Church History, p. 227).

Of this event the Encyclopedia Britannica (ninth edition, Vol. XII., p. 421) says:

"The sentence he expected was pronounced on July 6th in the presence of the emperor and a full sitting of the council; once and again he attempted to remonstrate, but in vain, and finally he betook himself to silent prayer. After he had undergone the ceremony of degradation with all the childish formalities which are usual on such occasions, his soul was formally consigned by all those present to the devil, while he himself with clasped hands and uplifted eyes reverently committed it to Christ. He was then handed over to the secular arm, and immediately led off to the place of execution, the council meanwhile proceeding unconcernedly with the rest of its business for the day."

The other exception to the rule of absolute silence concerning the slaughter of the defenseless by the church power is in the case of the subjugation of the Albigenses. Businger says:

> Such abominable theories, if reduced to practice, would have destroyed the foundations, not only of the church, but also of the state. · · · A body of soldiers, led by Count Simon of Montford, marched against them, and a number of cruel and sanguinary battles were fought. About the year 1229 the Inquisition came into existence, and handed these heretics over to the chastising hands of the civil power as disturbers and mischief-makers dangerous to society.

"Disturbers and mischief-makers dangerous to society" probably is thought to grate less harshly on the modern ear than "heretics," "blasphemers," "children of the devil," and other similar designations so popular when the church was in the plenitude of her power.

The children in the parochial schools will know what a rack is, for one of these writers describes it, but they will never know that it was one of the most effective agents in the propagation of the Catholic doctrine in Europe and elsewhere. They will not know that it was used at all by the ONE church unless they come under the perniciously truthful influence of heretics. But they will read this about Calvin's crimes: "James Gruet he had several times put to the torture and finally beheaded. The unfortunate doctor, Servetus, he burnt to death at the stake. And all this wicked cruelty because these persons held views different from his own." The sublime audacity of that last sentence has never been paralleled. Think of a Catholic historian writing of cruelty and of persecution for opinion's sake in that innocent way, as of something entirely foreign to the spirit and unknown in the career of his church! But why should he not thus suppress the truth? Has it not been the policy of the church from the first? What teacher in a parochial school would dare call in question before her pupils the accuracy of the works put into her hands to expound to the children under her care? She, too, must obey.

It is worthy of mention that the author of "What Catholics Have Done for Science" deals chiefly with sciences which are innocuous to "Bible truths." Investigators in mechanics, mathematics, acoustics, optics, electricity, chemistry, mineralogy, and botany did not come in conflict with scripture texts which contradicted their discoveries, and hence they did not often invite the censure of the church. Mr Brennan discreetly abstains from making any definite claims for the church in so far as most of the other sciences are concerned. Geology, geography, and astronomy are the chief exceptions, and here he got on to such terribly thin ice that he at once went through and to the bottom. We have already mentioned a number of important sciences which he did not touch.

Are these reckless falsifiers of history, these disseminators of the grossest of superstitions, qualified to write school-books for American children? Should the public school fund be divided for their benefit?

SCIENTIFIC INSTRUCTION IS NOT SECTARIAN TEACHING.

It is sometimes claimed that the teaching of modern science and scientific ethics in the public schools should not be allowed, because, not being universally accepted, the propositions, averments, and demonstrations of such science and scientific ethics are really sectarian dogmas, and the teaching of them is sectarian instruction within the proper meaning of the term. Referring to this matter the editor of the Popular Science Monthly wrote in that periodical in the issue of November, 1889, as follows:

"A Protestant minister in Oakland, Cal., in a recent address on the subject of the public-school system of the United States, expressed himself as follows; 'In one of the schools of San Francisco Herbert Spencer's "Data of Ethics" was introduced as a text-book of morals—as palpable a violation of the law forbidding sectarian instruction as the introduction of the Catholic or Methodist catechism; for Herbert Spencer belongs to that very small and narrow sect which promulgates the creed of Agnosticism.' If the reverend speaker had taken the ground that the 'Data of Ethics' was too abstruse a book to be placed in the hands of public-school pupils, we should have felt inclined to sustain his objection. But when he says that to introduce such a book is to give a sectarian character to the school in which it is used, we must enter a protest. Science is never sectarian; philosophy is never sectarian. Sectarian teaching begins when you ask a man or a child to assume what cannot be proved, for the sake of keeping within the dogmatic lines that fence round some particular creed. The followers of Mr. Spencer may be a minority, but they are no more a sect than were the adherents of the Copernican system of astronomy, or than are the believers in the Darwinian theory of natural selection. Mr. Spencer makes no appeal to faith, but finds his premises in the common experience of mankind. A pupil who was being taught out of the 'Data of Ethics' would be quite at liberty to dispute either the premises or the arguments of the author; and he would not be silenced by the declaration that Mr. Spencer was infallible. But when catechisms are taught they are taught, not as containing matter for discussion, but as containing doctrines that must not be disputed, on pain of more or less disagreeable consequences. Similarly, when the Bible is read in school, it is read not as a fallible record of events or a fallible guide in morals, but as something absolutely authoritative—the very voice of God. It is perfectly obvious, then, where sectarianism in education begins. It begins just at the point where doctrines of any kind, accepted on faith by a portion of the community and not discussible on grounds of reason, are made a part of public-school instruction. Sectarianism comes in whenever the teacher is obliged to say 'Hush!' to the inquiring schol r who wants his reason satisfied before he will believe. There is no sectarianism, on the other hand, in making use of a book which lays no claim to any kind of privilege, and which, therefore, cannot force the belief of any one. The followers of Mr. Spencer do not form a sect, because they have no beliefs which they wish to exempt from criticism or discussion, and because they hold themselves at full liberty to pass beyond the bounds of Mr. Spencer's thought whenever they can see their way to doing so. Mr Spencer's 'Data of Ethics' may not contain all the truth on the subject of morals, but the truth which it does contain lends itself to demonstration; and no one can be the worse for being taught demonstrable truths. Upon that foundation he can afterward build what he likes—hay, stubble, or what not; and after his superstructure has been tried by the fire of experience, as it is very likely to be, he will still have something solid left on which to rebuild in perchance wiser fashion."

SOME PAROCHIAL SCHOOL FRUIT.

Rev. Madison C. Peters has gathered some interesting statistics which throw a flood of light upon the parochial school question. We reprint below part of a letter of his which appeared in a late number of the New York Herald. The matter quoted is part of a controversy between Mr. Peters and the Paulist Father Young. Of course Mr. Peters writes as a Protestant, and a Protestant who would commit the gross injustice of keeping the Protestant Bible in the common schools; but these facts do not weaken the force of the statistics he has collated:

"He did not and he cannot disprove the charge that in Italy, the home of the parochial school, where the Pope for fourteen hundred years had his own way, less than five per cent. of the people were able to read and write at the time that the temporal power of the Pope was overthrown.

"He did not and he cannot disprove that Catholic Spain is reduced to beggary and sixty per cent. illiteracy. Will Father Young please answer why Protestant America, with all her freedmen, frontiersmen, and foreign population, has less than sixteen per cent. of her people who cannot read and write, while old Catholic Spain, with no influx of foreigners and no untaught colored population, has sixty per cent. of her people unable to read and write?

"He can furnish no evidence whatever against my charge that only a small per cent. of the people of Mexico, Chili, and so on down through the whole list of Catholic countries, are able to read and write. I pointed him to Catholic countries and showed masses dwelling in ignorance till they shook off the parochial schools.

"I challenge him to mention one nation whose children the Catholics have taught to read and write. Will he answer why the parochial schools have been repudiated and common schools established in such Catholic countries as Italy, France, and Mexico?

"Why is it that in Catholic Guatemala, San Salvador, and Costa Rica the state has taken education out of the hands of the priests and made education compulsory under state control?

"Why is it that in Catholic Argentine Republic, Chili, Uruguay, Venezuela, and Brazil the parochial schools have been closed by the Catholic authorities and free public schools have been established? (See W. E. Curtis's "Capitals of South America.")

"Ecuador is the only one of the South American republics holding on to the old system of the parochial school. In all Ecuador there is not a single railroad or a stage-coach, only one newspaper, and only forty seven post-offices. About four per cent. of the people can read and write, and no person can vote unless he is a Roman Catholic (Rand-McNally's Atlas).

"The nations of South America and Europe say that the parochial schools have failed to teach the people, and is not this the reason why many progressive Catholics of the world stand for the public schools?

"The eight Roman Catholic countries of Venezuela, Austria-Hungary, France, Brazil, Spain, Portugal, Belgium, and Italy, with an area of 4.452.275 square miles and a population of 148,087,027, of which the average is ninety-one per cent. Roman Catholic, show an illiteracy of sixty per cent.

"The eight Protestant countries of Victoria, Sweden, Switzerland, Netherlands, Germany, Denmark, Great Britain, and the United States, with an area of 4,134,300 square miles and a population of 149,702 830, of which the average is eighty per cent. Protestant, show an illiteracy of four per cent.

"This statement is from data furnished by the reports of the United States Commissioner of Education, the documents issued by the Bureau of Education, the census of 1880, and the 'Statesman's Year Book for 1887.'

"But, dear Father, since you are so very particular you may not like the census of 1880, and since it is our aim to please you I call your attention to the following statistics, collected by the United States Bureau of Education in 1890, showing the ratio of illiteracy in Roman Catholic and Protestant countries:

IN ROMAN CATHOLIC COUNTRIES.

	Per Cent.		Per Cent.
Austria	39	Spain	63
Hungary	42	Ireland	21
Italy	48	Belgium	12
Portugal	82

IN PROTESTANT COUNTRIES.

	Per Cent.		Per Cent.
Germany, less than	1	Norway, less than	1
Denmark, less than	1	Sweden, less than	1
England	9	Switzerland	2¼
Scotland	7

"The eminent Catholic theologian, Dr. Orestes A. Brownson, who affirmed that 'Protestantism of every form has not and never can have any right where Catholicity is triumphant,' wrote thus in the Catholic Review concerning parochial schools: 'They who are educated in our schools seem misplaced and mistimed in the world, as if born and educated for a world that had ceased to exist. The cause of failure of what we call Catholic education lies, in our judgment, in the fact that we educate not for the present or the future, but for the past.'

"Is it not a fact that the Catholic church controls a large proportion of the desperate people of society? Do not our criminal classes come from countries where the Catholic church has been dominant for centuries? You do not and cannot disprove the testimony of the Catholic journals and Catholic chaplains which I quoted—that your church contributes more criminals than any other religious denomination. You did not disprove the Parliamentary report for 1881, which shows that while the Catholics form only three-quarters of the population of Ireland, they furnish six-sevenths of the criminals.

"Her majesty's inspectors' report concerning juvenile offenders in reformatories and industrial schools in Ireland shows that there were in reformatories in 1883 143 Protestants and 956 Catholics. In industrial schools in 1883, 805 Protestants and 5,179 Catholics. In five counties in the North of Ireland it required only 11 or 12 policemen to keep order among 10,000 people, while in five other counties of Ireland, where there are more parochial schools, it requires from 41 to 46 policemen to keep order among each 10,000 people.

"Leon Bouland, an ex-priest, in the Forum of July, 1888, calls attention to the fact that in the city of New York seventy-five per cent. of the criminals are members and adherents of the Roman Catholic church.

"If you will study the reports of our jails and penitentiaries you will find that your church has from more than three to four times its due proportion according to the population. The same is true of our pauper institutions. The inmates are nearly all foreigners and nearly all Roman Catholics. Out of 2,362 state paupers in Massachusetts, Ireland contributed 945, or 40 per cent. of the whole, while of those born in Massachusetts there were only 348.

"You made no reply to my charge that out of 4,000 children born in Rome 3,000 are illegitimate. You want the charge authenticated, do you?

"El Solfeo, an Italian journal of prominence, publishes the following statistics: 'In 1870 Rome had 2,469 secular clergy among cardinals, bishops, prelates, and cures; 2,766 monks, and 2,117 nuns, in all 7,322 religious of both sexes. The number of births reached in the same year to 4,378, of which 1,215 were legitimate and 3,163 illegitimate. The illegitimates, therefore, being in the proportion 75.25 per 100 of the total births.'

"The illegimate in Protestant London are only four per cent. You will also find similar statistics by referring to a Papal source—namely, L'Amico di Casa, Almanacco Popolare, published at Turin.

"And from the same source we find that the average committals for murder per year are in Protestant England 72, or 4 to every 1,000,000; in Catholic Bavaria 311, or 68 to every 1,000,000. More than four-fifths of the white men hanged in America are Catholics. It distresses me to give you all these facts, but you pressed me to do it.

"I have stated the actual truth so mildly that I feel that I ought to apologize to my readers, and I promise you that for every fact and citation I have brought I can cite from equally unimpeachable sources ten times as many more.

"Now how about the liquor traffic? I charged your church with having a monopoly of the business.

"Father Elliot, who is associated with you in your work, in the Catholic World (September, 1890), of which you are one of the editors, made this honest confession: 'The horrible truth is that in many cities, big and little, we have something like a monopoly of the business of selling liquor, and in not a few something equivalent to a monopoly of getting drunk. I hate to acknowledge it; yet from Catholic domiciles—miscalled homes—in those cities and towns three fourths of the public paupers creep annually to the almshouse, and more than half the criminals snatched away by police to prison are by baptism and training members of our church. Can anyone deny this, or can anyone deny that the identity of nominal Catholics and pauperism existing in our chief centers of population is owing to the drunkenness of Roman Catholics? For twenty years the clergy of this parish have had a hard and uneven fight to keep saloons from the very church doors, because the neighborhood of the Roman Catholic church is a good stand for the saloon business; and this is equally so in nearly every city in America. Who has not burned with shame to run the gantlet of the saloons lining the way to the Roman Catholic cemetery?'

"But this same Father Elliot, speaking of his recent missionary tour among the non-Catholics of the West, declared: 'America will be converted and made a Catholic country.' Perhaps it would be in order to suggest that charity begins at home, and that the priests convert their own people before they attempt to convert Protestants."

We hope our readers will carefully file the record of these facts, so abundantly established by authentic history.

The orthodox press of Spain is roaring mad at the "insult" offered the holy mother church by the mayor and municipal council of Madrid, by attending in a body the funeral of that great Freethinker, Ramón Chies. ∴∴∴ The Spanish Free Mason Lodge "Progreso" has started a subscription among Spanish Free Masons, the proceeds of which are to be used to erect a monument in honor of the late Ramón Chies. ∴∴∴ Memorial services in honor of Ramón Chies are being held by all Spanish Freethought societies, and resolutions of sympathy hav been sent to his family and Las Dominicales by numerous foreign Freethought societies, by prominent Freethinkers, and the Freethought Federations of France and Belgium, and we do not doubt also by the Freethought Federation of America. The address of Las Dominicales is Calle de Carranza núm 21, segundos, Madrid. ∴∴∴ Fernando Loyana (Demófilo) is now sole editor of Las Dominicales, and he proposes to convert this weekly journal founded by him and Ramón Chies in 1882 into a daily paper.

One of the numbers of "The Truth Seeker Library" issued this month is entitled "Thumbscrew and Rack." It embodies the "Historic Means of Grace" published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of January 6th, with additional matter, and several new illustrations, including the famous "chastity belt," drawn expressly for this work. As a handsome pamphlet, with cover, "Thumbscrew and Rack" will be sold at ten cents per copy. Being the only work of the kind in existence, it should hav a large circulation. Geo. E. Macdonald wrote it.

Sparks From the Lecture Field.

Despite the hard times our cause still maintains its ground and the Freethought lecturer is able to keep his head above water. Trade is almost stagnant and we hav hard work even to get expenses, but somehow we manage to get there.

From Mechanicsburg I go to Delphos, O., where I giv one lecture to the members of the recently organized society, at their regular meeting. I came here more to spend a portion of my leisure time than otherwise, but I happened along at the right moment and my visit was not entirely for nothing.

After a few days of pleasant idleness I resume my journey. Mr. and Mrs. Roloson had made me a welcome guest and I disliked going, but had it been heaven itself I would hav had to go just the same.

I reached Waterloo, Ind., and found Jake Saltsman on the lookout for me. And so was the weather. The Lord had taken a mean spite and sent us one of the severest snowstorms I hav witnessed for some time. This storm did not abate during the three days that I lectured there; therefore it had, to a great extent, a disastrous effect upon my audiences. It was impossible for most of our friends to get in from the country, but Mr. and Mrs. Brecbill were there and would not hav stayed away even if they had to make the journey in a boat; and at one time it looked as though they would hav to use that method of transportation. Still we had little of which to complain; we had splendid audiences, made up of the townspeople, and I was gratified to see such a large number of young people present at each lecture. It will giv the local clergy something to do when they tell them that "Jonah swallowed a whale" and ask them to believe it. Squire Daniels was chairman, while Charley Voss and Jake Saltsman made splendid ushers. The rain could not cool or dampen the ardor of their enthusiasm.

My next lecture was in Chicago, before the Secular Union. I was favored with a fair audience, considering the inclemency of the weather, for Chicago had received its due share of the storm. I was pleased to get back on the camping-ground of our recent Congress, and once more I met a host of friends. My lecture was on the Bible, and it brought out a good and spirited discussion. W. S. Bell presided at the meeting. It was the first time we were on the platform together, and I hope it may not be the last.

Monday evening I dined with Mr. and Mrs. Freeman, and during the week I was the recipient of the same hospitality from Judge Waite and his estimable wife. During these few days plans were discussed for the harmonious co-working of the Secular Union and the Federation, whereby the general good of the cause may be promoted. The desire to work together, to assist each other, was truly encouraging, and it will not lessen.

During my stay in Chicago, I was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Reichwald. Mrs. Reichwald is not an avowed Freethinker, though she has too good a heart and far too generous a nature to believe in hell. But to giv up a belief in hell is to giv up a belief in orthodox Christianity. It is the bedrock upon which the whole edifice is built. Shatter that rock with the dynamite forces of education and Freethought, and the whole structure will topple and fall. I had expected to enjoy the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Reichwald through the holiday season, but this privilege I was denied, for I received a message from Delphos, O., informing me that the wife of one of our friends had died. It was her special desire that I should conduct the funeral services, and I turned back to comply with her request. The deceased was the wife of Wm. Euston. Both were members of the local Freethought society. She died at the age of thirty-seven, after a protracted illness, and the funeral took place on Sunday, December 24th. It was the first time that a Secular funeral had taken place in this district. As a natural result great crowds were drawn hither to witness the funeral ceremonies, many coming out of sheer curiosity. The services were held at the grave, and there were fully four hundred people present. The Delphos Herald gave a full and favorable report of the proceedings. The day was raw and chilly. Therefore, to stand with bare head in the cold for thirty minutes was not conduciv to good health. Suffering from a slight cold at the time, this seriously aggravated my ailment, and the next day found me suffering from an attack of "la grippe." Thanks to Mrs. Roloson and her brother, Dr. Brundage, I soon recovered. This slight indisposition caused me to miss some of my lecture appointments, but beyond this no serious damage was done.

Leaving Chicago by a midnight train I reach Kansas City. It is my first lecture in this city. The train arrives just about the time my lecture should commence. I found a good-sized audience awaiting my arrival with patience. Kansas City boasts a population of one hundred and fifty thousand. Once a pioneer settlement, it is now the site of large commercial houses and hives of industry. It is full of enterprise—one glorious result of the large element of Liberal thought it contains. Like most Western cities of like proportions, it has a free Sunday. The theaters, museums, etc., and other places of public resort are wide open on the first day of the week, and as is usual in such instances, the clergy do not like it, and they are sparing no efforts now to try and close them. The clergy hav always been the greatest enemies of freedom, and it seems to be generally determined that they shall so remain. Every Sunday in Kansas City they may be heard denouncing Sunday opening and decrying in vociferous tones the alleged evils thereof.

My lecture was a success in every way, thanks to the worthy efforts of T. J. Tanner, a young and enthusiastic Freethinker. My audience, for the most part, consisted of well-known Freethinkers, who gave me a splendid welcome among them. Milton J. Payne, president of the gaslight and coke company, occupied the chair. Among the friends are Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Matthews. Mr. Matthews is one of the foremost architects of Kansas City and a Freethinker from away back. He is one who has never stifled his honest thoughts in deference to public opinion. Honest and fearless in expression, he lets the public know what he really believes. Respected by all who know him, he is ever ready to advance a new idea that could in any way benefit the race. In this relation I might also mention Leon E. Bailey, Dan H. Nourse, T. E. Palmer, R. Kriete, Charles Ison, J. P. Reisinger, E. W. Kenyon, and others, who constitute a grand host of Freethought warriors who are determined to preserve the freedom of the people in Kansas City against the machinations of the clergy.

The next morning I am off again, this time for Wichita, a beautiful little town situated about fifty miles north of the Cherokee Strip. I lectured here on Sunday evening, and I was greeted by a large audience. Through the valuable assistance of Z. Tuttle I am to giv a course of lectures in this place, extending over the winter months. We are in hopes that a permanent organization of Freethinkers may be established. Mr. Tuttle is now advanced in years, but he retains all the enthusiasm of his youth for the cause of Freethought. Without him these lectures could not be had here at this time. Wichita has a large number of Liberals, and with their help we may achieve the success for which we are striving. Among the Liberals here are Dr. and Mrs. Martin, together with their daughter Isis B. Martin. The latter is the librarian of the city, and now she is deeply interested in the establishment of a Freethought library. Besides these are Mr. and Mrs. Collins, the founders of an "Edward Bellamy Club," wherein the members liv, eat, and sleep upon the ideas laid down in his now famous work, "Looking Backward." Also Mr. and Mrs. Cooper, Mr. and Mrs. Garst, Mr. and Mrs. Haley, with many more, are numbered in our ranks.

In the morning I attended the Unitarian church. Being the most Liberal meeting in the town, many Freethinkers are regular attendants thereat for the want of a more suitable place. The pastor, Dr. Vail, is a very liberal-minded man; many such may be found in the ranks of Unitarianism—a school, by the way, which Erasmus Darwin termed "a featherbed to catch a falling Christian." I had never met the doctor, and when I read his subject, "As a Christian Minister, What Would You Do with Ingersoll?" I had half made up my mind that I was to sit and hear the colonel denounced and abused in terms that only a "Christian minister" can use. To my intense surprise, however, the sermon was a glowing eulogy of Colonel Ingersoll throughout. The preacher asserted that "he could not agree with all he said or taught," but declared that "there was much in his philosophy that had moved men to lead nobler lives." What honesty of thought and utterance; what candor, to come from an assumed Christian pulpit!

During my stay in the Southwest it is my desire to lecture as much as possible in Kansas, Texas, and Oklahoma. Friends in these districts desiring lectures may address me, for better convenience, at 243 N. Lawrence street, Wichita, Kan. Terms and dates may be had upon application.

JOHN R. CHARLESWORTH,
Sec. Freethought Federation of America.

Hell is full of people who ask questions about things which our Heavenly Father wishes to keep quiet.

Observations.

This is translated from the Hoodoo. A certain Adherent of the church heard an Unbeliever express the opinion that the so-called Word of God is simply the word of the men who wrote it; that religion in general is delusion touched with hypocrisy; that the church is not necessarily a mundane type of the kingdom of heaven; that clergymen are guilty of unlawful solicitation when they claim to belong to a third sex; and that preaching is equivalent to talking through the hat. Such was the anger of the Adherent at thus hearing ideas expressed which he had devoted his life to concealing that he sprang upon the Unbeliever and beat him to the earth with a club. A police officer who was unintentionally present arrested the Adherent for disturbing his peace, while the Unbeliever was taken to the stationhouse as a drunk, where he died before the newspaper reporters could call the attention of the department to the fact that the man's skull was fractured. The Adherent being brought to the bar of justice, the Court inquired why he had killed his neighbor.

"Because," said the Adherent, "he was an Infidel and a Scoffer, denying those principles which lie at the foundations of society I cannot tolerate either his presence or his existence, or abide with him in the same community."

"If that is your trouble," replied His Honor, who was a just judge and whose judicial mind was crossed withal by a streak of humor, "I can provide you with a retreat where you will not meet an Infidel once in a hundred years."

And he sentenced him to the penitentiary for life.

The American Protective Association claims to hav proof that the Roman Catholics of the United States are arming and drilling as military organizations. This is hotly denied by the pope's papers, and even Protestant journals, like the New York Independent, scoff at the report or treat it lightly. What, then, are we to make out of the fact that the president of the college of St. Francis Xavier, a Catholic Institution of this city, has received the following communication?

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON CITY, Jan. 4, 1894.

By direction of the President, and in accordance with section 1,225, Revised Statutes, as amended by the acts of Congress approved September 26, 1888, and November 3, 1893, Captain John Drum, Tenth infantry, is detailed as professor of military science and tactics at the college of St. Francis Xavier, New York, and will report in person for duty accordingly. DANIEL S. LAMONT, Secretary of War.

Is the Catholic church drilling men at her own expense for the government service? When Monsignor Capel, the papal emissary, was in this country a few years ago, he warned us that Catholics would demand their "rights"—namely, a division of the public school funds; and he added that the demand, when it came, would be quick and sharp, like the click of a musket. Evidently the students at the college of St. Francis Xavier are getting in form to furnish the click.

The Seventh Day Adventists are with us in the endeavor to prevent the church from becoming the state. They hav a vital interest in the repeal of the Sunday laws, because they "lay back stiff" on Saturday that they may do about two days' work on Sunday. To enforce the Sunday law would giv them two idle days in a week—one self-impelled, the other compelled by the policeman. Any one who has visited, on the first day of the week, as I hav, a Second Adventist hive of industry like the big printing establishment in Oakland, California, will see that it is their busy day. If the hands dig in on the other five days as they do on that one, it is not strange that the institution thrives. I believe that on Sunday the foreman may swear at dilatory hands without offense, and accelerate their movements by telling them that they are slower than the second coming of Christ. Sunday idleness would rob them of at least twenty-five per cent of their earnings.

So the Adventists are with us; and they are so not only from a different present reason, but likewise with an eye on the future. According to the doctrin of this sect, religious legislation was foretold at the beginning of the Christian era—longer ago, it will be seen, that any Republican prophesied hard times as a result of Democratic monkeying with the tariff. John the Revelator then prognosticated that the United States would come to be formed in the image of the beast which is the Roman Catholic hierarchy. Furthermore, the Adventists assert that the beast is in no wise to be overcome by the spirit of liberty latent in the American breast, but only by the power of God to be put forth at the fulfillment of his promis to Christ: "Ask of me, and I shall giv thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." The Adventists now oppose the beast in order that when breaking begins they may be strictly in it, as we say in modern English slanguage. The Adventist's faith in prophecy is not shaken by the fact that the speaker assured his hearers that these things should come to pass before persons within the sound of his voice had let go of the willows. A thousand years from now, sustained and soothed by an unfaltering trust, they will still be fighting some beast or other foreshadowed by the Revelator. Their lack of faith in the spirit of liberty is susceptible of explanation. They are themselvs the willing bondmen of a delusion, and giv neither themselvs, their employees, nor the stranger that is within their gates any more liberty on Saturday than the strictest Sabbatarian would giv them on Sunday.

"Educate yourself," says Col. William Henry Burr. "If all the colleges were wiped out, literature and science would suffer no loss." The colonel's statement may be true, but his advice is not good for these days of civil service and of other examinations patterned after that humbug. In San Francisco a man who applied for a position as mail-carrier was asked, in the course of his examination, if he could giv the distance to the moon. He had not thought of that matter in connection with his application, not understanding that the moon would be included in his route, and he failed to pass. If he had been college bred he might hav answered the question and got the job. Another instance: A great daily in this city, having in view a department devoted to progress in mechanical engineering, sought as an editor a young man who possessed a thorough practical knowledge of the subject, together with fine literary facility, and long experience as a journalist. He was the ideal man for the place. For a dozen years he had earned his living at just that sort of work, as editor of a scientific journal. Arrangements for his transfer to the great daily were nearly completed, when the manager put the crucial question: "Are you a college graduate?" The young man was not, and that settled it. The great daily secured at a good salary a college-bred "professor" who attached "C. E." and other characters of the Roman alphabet to his name, and the department of mechanical progress was inaugurated, while the young man kept his less lucrativ position, writing articles which the professor-editor of the great daily plagiarized, garbled, spoiled, and published as his own. The young man one day had the keen pleasure of taking a piece of his own work, thus stolen, to the manager of the great daily and asking him to compare it with the professor's effort and to state which was the more worthy performance. This, it is true, terminated the college-bred professor's engagement with the great daily, but it did the young man no appreciable good from a worldly point of view.

Times hav changed since Colonel Burr made his pile as a stenographer. In journalism a diploma is almost as much a necessity as in the medical profession, and the young man who does not possess one is handicapped. A college course must certainly add something to the student's education, and in a time of sharp competition he can utilize every advantage he may acquire. Thomas Paine was possessed of great genius, but he needed it all to effectivly meet the assaults of those who pointed out that he could not spell or write grammatically. Think of the added power the polish of Burke or Junius would hav given him! If Shakspere had entered college he might now be accredited with the works which he wrote.

Sometimes the force of an illustration employed by a preacher or a political speaker may be totally destroyed by an ill-timed inquiry about something which the orator has overlooked in preparing his speech. This was proved last week in the National House of Representativs, when Mr. Hall, a gentleman from Missouri, was addressing the chair, and quoted the "Gadarene pig story" (Huxley) as describing the present condition of our beloved country. Said Mr. Hall: "A certain man was possessed of a legion of devils. When our savior approached the man to cast the devils out, the devils asked to be let alone. Our savior then commanded them to leave, but before they left the man's body, they threw him down. They wrenched him, they racked him, and they knotted and contracted his muscles, and he went through the most excruciating agony; but when eventually the legion of devils did go out of the man's body into the swine, and the swine ran down into the sea, the man arose and praised God. Mr. Chairman," continued the gentleman from Missouri, "for thirty years our body politic has been possessed of Depublocratic devils, and its vital organs hav been tied up in preat knots by the Depublocratic party; but the Recratodublican party —the savior of the people—has commanded them to abdicate, and soon, Mr. Chairman, they will go out of the body politic into the swine; the swine will go into the sea, and the nation will rise up blessing God."

While the house yet enjoyed the sustained thrill induced by the danse du ventre of the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Hendrix, of New York, arose and inquired: "When that incident occurred back in Galilee, was there no sympathy felt for the man who lost the pork?"

Here the hammer fell.

The financiers say that Secretary Carlisle's fifty millions of United States bonds won't go because he has not offered a commission to bankers for floating them. But there is one thing that will go, and that is the fifty or one hundred millions of uncoined and uncovered silver in the treasury vaults. The bankers naturally do not want the silver, because there is no pound of flesh behind it; but the people would handle it joyfully, and if the bankers would not, they might close their doors, or stand behind counters and twiddle their thumbs instead of doing business. While under the bond system the people are paying from five to ten per cent interest on their medium of exchange, which is to that extent a tariff on trade of every description, the cause of hard times ought to be so plain that a blind man could see it with his stick.

GEO. E. MACDONALD.

At the Front.

My next engagement after Correctionville was Pierson, a town about six miles distant. On Sunday afternoon, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Petty and Mr. Dunlap, we began the journey through a storm of sleet and snow. I was advertised to speak at three o'clock, and we arrived in ample time. Everything was excellently arranged. A number of ladies and gentlemen, under the direction of Mr. S. F. Benson, had been preparing themselvs to furnish some musical entertainment at the meetings. Anything of this kind always makes a lecturer feel good. Some think that because we do not giv the attention to music that the churches do, Freethought has no melodies, and that the art of Orpheus will die with Christianity. We know that this is not so, yet Freethinkers do not realize how much music adds to their meetings. Before the lecture began the house was full, and many more came in afterwards. In the evening, though it was very stormy, we again had the hall well filled, and on Monday night many were standing up. Probably no town of its size in this country contains so many Freethinkers as Pierson. The church has little influence, and the spirit of Freethought abounds. The leader of our movement here is Mr. S. F. Benson. He is activ and enthusiastic. The people respect him and impose confidence in his honor, notwithstanding his heretical views. Though engaged in business he finds time for Freethought work, and is ever ready to defend Liberalism. He is well read and can meet all Christian arguments.

Next to Mr. Benson is Dr. Efner, who always lets his light shine. Mr. Brooks, who owns the hall in which I spoke, is a Liberal of the right stamp, as also are Mr. Cummings and Mr. Hoffman. I received a large number of names for the Freethought Federation, and sold many Freethought books both in Pierson and Correctionville. Literature circulated in a community at the time of lectures sets many to thinking. Hundreds are ready to embrace Liberalism if only it is put before them. Hundreds of others are Liberals at heart, but do not know just where to place themselvs. Hearing a lecture or reading a book often brings these people out of the church.

On Tuesday morning I bade the Pierson friends adieu, and returned to Correctionville. As I surmised, the Rev. Mr. Zellhoefer replied to me while I was away. He preached a sermon attacking me and Freethinkers generally in a genuin Christian manner. The defunct Paine death-bed story was revived, and told. The reverend did not know that I was coming back, and he opened his eyes wide when he saw me on the street. The friends decided to hav me reply to him. We had but a day's time in which to secure necessary funds to pay for the opera house and advertise. No bills were printed. It was announced from mouth to mouth that I was to reply to the reverend, and when the time came the house was well filled, and about a half dozen from Pierson who had heard of the meeting had also come. Mr. Petty sent Zellhoefer word through his friend, the Rev. Mr. Parnell. It was late when we began, and as I did not want to reply to the sky-pilot until he came, I took up the time giving another lecture. We missed the fun, for he did not materialize. I answered him just the same. When he replied to me, he had his church well filled. He ought to hav had, for he advertised himself at my lectures. A friend who went to hear him the next night told me that he had just about twenty-five people to listen to him.

I shall go back to Correctionville on my return from the East, when I will lecture in several other places in the neighborhood where they are unable to arrange at the present time.

Des Moines, Ia. FRANKLIN STEINER.

Churchly Purpose and Performance.

The wholesale murder of Catholic Christians by Greek church Christians in Kovna, Russia, is one of the later evidences of the great civilizing influence of Christianity. ∴ Abyssinia boasts of having been a Christian country for fifteen hundred years, long before the mass of Europe was Christianized. Christianity is there seen in its original light as a vast monastic system which has left the people in a state of barbarism. ∴ Some time ago a conspiracy was discovered against the life of the Negus Menelik. Well-known members of the court were implicated, but in view of the influence they possessed, the emperor pardoned them. A youthful attendant on the negus had been aware of the secret movement against his majesty and took to flight on the conspiracy being revealed. He was captured, and, without the pretense of a trial, was condemned to hav his tongue cut out and one of his feet sawn off. The sentence was duly carried out; but not content with the torture to which the boy had been subjected, the negus, eight days afterward, ordered that his right hand should be cut off, and that he should then be left exposed in the desert, in the full glare of the sun, until he was devoured by vultures.—Agnostic Journal. ∴ Baron Katte, a Prussian, says of these Christian Abyssinians: "I found everywhere in Abyssinia a confirmation of what I frequently found in the East—namely, that the professors of Christianity are, in all moral respects, far below the Mahommedans." ∴ The depth of superstition in which the early Christians were sunk may be inferred from the inscription on a papyrus in the Edwards collection, University College, London. It is a Greek Christian invocation and reads, as translated for the Academy, as follows: "Ye angels and archangels who guard the floods of heaven, since I hav a quarrel with a headless dog [heretic?], if he comes, overpower him and rescue me through the might of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. Amen. Iao Sabaoth. Thou who barest God inviolate, spotless Virgin Mother of Christ, remember that thou saidst this to thyself, again heal the woman who carries this amulet. Amen." ∴ Canon Monahan moved in the Nottingham (Eng.) school board that no teacher who did not profess belief in the divinity of the Lord Jesus should be allowed to giv religious instruction. The motion was not seconded. So much for religious teaching in public schools. In such schools it is an even race between proscription and hypocrisy. ∴ It would seem that the Russian church men hav determined that no liberty shall be granted to dissenters, which decision means exile or extermination for the latter. ∴ At a recent election at Barcelona, Odon de Buen, professor of the university of that city—an outspoken republican and Freethinker—received 399 votes, while the orthodox, F. Traver, received but 377. Christian honesty could not stand this and fixed the ballots so that the orthodox candidate received 629 votes. The election will be contested by Spanish republicans, and the Barcelona scandal is the talk of the day. ∴ The queen-regent of Spain, Maria Christina, is to found a university at Escurial, which, according to the wishes of her late husband, is to be strong in "Christian sciences." ∴ Nov. 1, 1893, was a great day for the Austrian army. The soldiers were made to take the oath of allegiance to the Austrian flag. Bible, Koran, and Talmud were opened, and priest, minister, rabbi, and imam announced that "to serve as soldier monarch and fatherland is an honor; it is a religious duty. The God of armies bless your admittance to the holy duty of a new life." ∴ The Spanish government is in arrears to the amount of 12,724 pesetos in salary to each school teacher. It does not owe the church anything. ∴ A new religious sect has appeared in Russia. Its members consider the telegraph and railroad inventions of the devil, but they make up in crossing what they lack in sense. They make the sign not alone on forehead and breast but also on the stomach, which they consider the most "holy" part of mankind.

The Sabbath worshipers of Wisconsin propose to sow the state knee-deep with Sunday law literature. This work has been assigned to the Young Peoples' Society of Christian Endeavor. Documents in English, German, and Norwegian are to be circulated. Hav Wisconsin Liberals got their eyes open yet? ∴ We learn from an authoritativ source—the Christian Statesman—that "the executive committee of the National Reform Association has appointed the Rev H. H. George, D.D., one of its secretaries, to visit Washington, D. C., with a view to establishing a Bureau of Legislativ Reform, especially in the interest ofSabbath legislation by Congress." Do you understand that? ∴ The New York Mail and Express is fretting about the crying of Sunday papers on the streets. It says: "It is an infringement of the rights of all citizens to quiet in their churches and homes on the day of rest and worship. It is in violation of an explicit law of the state of New York, which forbids on Sunday 'all noise disturbing the peace of the day.'" Christians hav no more right to stop newsboys from earning a few cents on Sunday than Jews and Adventists would hav to prevent their doing the same on Saturday. Besides, people who want to buy papers on either day hav just as imperativ a right to an opportunity to do so as others hav to sit in church, and a large minority of the latter also buy the Sunday paper. And how about the wholly unnecessary noise of church bells? ∴ In December last many Jewish merchants and others were arrested in this city for keeping their places of business open on Sunday. Sunday law persecution was rampant during the closing months of the year.

Not Afraid of a Two-Toed Devil.

LONG HILL, CONN., Jan. 17, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I hav recently found a man who has not the fear of a two-toed devil in his heart, whom I hav induced to subscribe for THE TRUTH SEEKER. I inclose $5 to pay for my renewal and for his subscription. JOHN L. BEARDSLEY.

One Hopeful Sign in Canada.

HARRINGTON, P. E. I., Jan. 6, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find order for $3 to shove my subscription along another year. I am unable to send you the name of a new subscriber. The church is running things to suit itself. The only hopeful sign of the times is that there are quite a number that do not go to church, yet they do not want to be called Infidels nor subscribers for our kind of literature.

The Right Kind of a Fighter.

BRANDON, MINN., Jan. 16, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I am well aware that my subscription is past due, but I hav been in such circumstances that I could not send you any money before now. I had the money to send you when my subscription was due, but I had to fight the school district to keep the Bible and prayer out of the school. I had to get the county attorney to help me, and that took money. Do not stop my paper. I will send you some more as soon as I can. I got the Bible and prayer out of the school, and they will stay out as long as I remain here. I had to fight the county superintendent and all the school board, but I beat them all, and I am loaded for bear if they try it again. Hav mercy on me and do not stop my paper. I will pay you if I hav to sell my farm. Yours truly, DAVID WERT.

Was Never Tinctured With Creedal Cussedness.

HAMBURGH, CAL., Jan. 5th, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: After settling up with the year '93, I find I am $12 ahead, and to show you I am liberal for an old Infidel of seventy years I will send the amount to your address, with the following order: Send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year and Bell's "Handbook" to this address, and to the next address send the paper one year and "Old Testament Stories." Also, the paper one year and same book to the third address. Also Bell's "Handbook" and THE TRUTH SEEKER one year to the fourth address. The above I hav donated in order to receive Samuel P. Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought."

I indorse the Nine Demands of Liberalism, and never yet was tinctured with creedal cussedness. Hav no use for money after the string of life comes to an end with me. All the surplus cash I handle goes into Liberal literature. Hoping Freethought may spread the gospel of liberty, truth, justice, and love, I will close.

The Privilege of Keeping Green the Graves of Dead Gods.

STRASBURG, ILL., Jan. 1, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Mrs. Mattie P. Krekel lectured here the 27th, 28th, and 29th of December. She had a large audience each night. She chooses the constructiv side of Liberalism; and prefers the term "Rationalist" to that of Freethinker. Any person who desires to know what Liberalism offers in place of Christianity should hear her lecture. She has an earnest, though pleasant, way of sifting the fruit of Rationalism from that of Christianity. And she does not find fault with Christians for claiming what is left. Neither can they claim consistently what she has sifted out. She leaves them the joy and comfort of a divine revelation and the blessed privilege of keeping green the graves of dead gods, while she claims for Rationalism every improvement in science and art, from the rude hut of the savage to the last revision of a creed. She spoke from an hour to an hour and a half, and the time passed so quickly that the babies did not become restless. A. YORK.

Fear Fair Discussion.

NOTTINGHAM, IND., Jan 8, 294.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3.50 for one year's subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and one copy "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated." Last spring Remsburg gave a lecture at Bluffton, our county seat; after he was gone the orthodox pitched into him through our county paper. They abused all Freethinkers, calling them liars and sensualists, until it became unbearable, when I wrote an article in answer to their false statements; but the editor is orthodox, and, of course, would not publish it, though I offered him big pay to do so. I got one hundred printed in circular form and painted the town red with them, since which the clergy hav been as still as a grave-yard. Not one word has since been said in the paper against Paine, Voltaire, Hume, or Ingersoll. I thought I would get them to debate, but they flew the track at once.

A Recruit Wants Information.

CINCINNATI, O., Jan. 16, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: On inclosed card please inform me the best way of ascertaining the names of all the Liberal clubs and of their secretaries in the United States, and oblige.

I am leaving a ten years' work of ministry in the Disciple church after a post course of six years' study and illustration of universal history, religion, Freethought, science, and philosophy.

My lecture themes are:

1. The Downfall of Theology versus the So-Called Fall of Humanity.
2. The Ideal Christ (Truth), the Universal Harmonizer and Guide.
3. Systems, their Origin, Merits, Demerits, Downfalls, and Transformations.
4. The Chaos of Church Matters.
5. The Universal Cyclic Progressions.
6. Eternal Universe, Visible and Invisible.
7. Twenty-six Conflicts Between Science and Religion.

My central address will be care W. Life, Elyria, O. Truly, S. A. WURTS.

Enlisted for Life.

NORTH POWDER, OR., Jan. 13, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find money order for $5 for THE TRUTH SEEKER another year and Peck's "Christian Absurdities," "Age of Reason," "Holy Bible Abridged," "Strike of a Sex," and Foote's "Mother's Manual." I commenced taking THE TRUTH SEEKER at this place in 1884 and hav always been an outspoken Infidel. Although I hav tried many times to get subscribers for the paper I always failed until a short time ago, when we sent you four new subscribers. This is a small and very orthodox town, but as there are six copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER coming here now we hope yet to see the time when superstition will hav to take a back seat. We hav enlisted in Freethought ranks for life and will do all we can in our humble way to help destroy the greatest curse that ever afflicted the sons and daughters of men, i. e., the Christian religion. We think THE TRUTH SEEKER is the best Freethought paper we hav ever seen and would like to hav its circulation doubled this year. Heston's cartoons cannot be beat.

God Let the Hogs Eat the Potatoes.

LEAD HILL, ARK., Dec. 26, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: I am a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER and like it very much. I am the only naturalist in this part of the country and you may believe I hav a happy time reading the paper to the people here; they think I am bound for hell. You may put my name down on your list for "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." I will send for it soon. I am a machinist and am running a foundry and machine shop in this place. I am a Bohemian by birth. I was reared a Catholic and was kept very strictly under the Catholic rule until I came to this country in 1863. I could tell you a great deal of my experience in praying when I was young. It happened to be our lot to be very poor in the old country, so my parents had to hire me out to the farmers when I was only seven years old. I worked for the sum of $3 a year. It was not for the $3 alone that I worked, but you see it left the ones at home a little more to eat. I was employed as herd-boy to care for the hogs. I had to drive them through a long lane. The fence was made with the boards two feet apart; the first board was two feet from the ground, and the last board two feet from the first. There were potatoes growing on both sides of the lane; some of the hogs were big and heavy, and some were small and light. The smaller ones would run so much faster than the big ones that they would get far ahead and into the potato fields and eat the potatoes in spite of all I could do. Here was my trouble, so when I got to the lane I would get down and pray to God not to let the hogs eat the potatoes, but while I was praying the hogs were eating potatoes, and consequently I got my pantaloons well tanned every night, and at the end of the year I got no pay and my father had to pay $3.50 damage. That was my first experience in prayer.

FRANK R. TEE.

All Gods Stand or Fall Together.

WORCESTER, MASS., Jan. 6, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of December 16th, Mr. T. B. Conner attempts to criticise the critics. Please allow me a few lines in reply. Our friend claims that you, Ingersoll, Putnam, and himself, know there is no God. Mr. Conner asserts that either of the four mentioned can prove it, but omits the proof; showing how near akin he is to the Christ man, expecting his assertion to stand unsupported except by his statement that he can prove it. Why did he mention Ingersoll, Putnam, and the Editor? Was it to giv weight to his argument? Why does he question the veracity of Ingersoll and Putnam? Does not his presumption surpass the "Christ man's" when he claims they don't mean what they say?

Can Mr. Conner demonstrate in any way that there is no God, or that there is no life after this—that death ends all? He will in doing this please remember that the God of the Old Testament is a thing of the past, and the God of the New is not in it. So he need waste no time in going over the well-worn and threadbare stories of the Bible, but prove that there is no overruling power, and that we are not accountable for our acts, except in this world. After this has been accomplished, will Mr. Conner tell us how proving there is no God will benefit the world or those in it? And it might be well to remember, in using the names of other men to strengthen his arguments, that it is better to let their utterances stand just as they came from the authors; and not prolog by saying that they don't mean what they say, and epilog by telling them they know things of which they hav never claimed the knowledge, and sandwich in the idea that they can furnish proof to satisfy all, fools and bigots excepted, that his statement is true; viz., there is no God.

J. A. FORSYTHE.

[Mr. Forsythe may recollect that last year there appeared on the editorial pages of this paper an exhaustiv examination of the God theory. He will find in our advertising columns that that examination has been put into a pamphlet under the title of "Design Argument Fallacies," and may be had for fifteen cents. We are surprised that so apparently intelligent a man as Mr. Forsythe should ask how the disproof of the existence of a God would benefit the world. If the belief in the existence of a God does not rest on fact, would it not be well for the world to know it? What good results can flow from the nursing of a falsehood? So far in the development of humanity it has been found that man has been benefited in the ratio that he has been brought into right relations with his environment; that is, in the ratio that his views of himself and the universe in general conformed to ascertained facts. It has been discovered that deception—whether self-induced or otherwise imposed—is a positiv hindrance to civilization. This being true, it necessarily follows that if there is no God, the race will be benefited by being put in possession of the proofs which establish that proposition. It may properly be added that, in the opinion of very many careful investigators and cool reasoners, the God idea has been the cause of more suffering than any other theory which has ever taken possession of the human brain and influenced the conduct of men and nations. Shall we now be accused of making unsupported assertions? What student of history, who reads the annals of the peoples with eyes which seek for the causes of the frightful persecutions and awful wars which hav drenched this world in blood, can doubt that belief in the existence of gods and of a place of future rewards and punishments has been one of the most productiv factors which hav caused the "martyrdom of man"? One word more: Arguments good against the Jehovah of the Old Testament are just as valid against any other God of whom omniscience and omnipotence are predicated.—ED. T. S.]

Tax Those Seven Churches. Or Do You?

MERCED, CAL., Jan. 14, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I read the letters from friends with much interest, because they come from our brothers in the cause from all parts of the world. These letters giv us an idea of the condition of society in distant states, and through these letters we learn that where free speech and the liberty of the press are tolerated, there people are far advanced morally and intellectually beyond the people of those countries that are groping their way through the foul slums and swamps of misty creeds and superstition.

Merced, the town in which I liv, has seven church buildings, six Protestant and one Catholic, and I believe that without an exception any one of the buildings could hold all the Christians in the town, which has a population of about thirty-five hundred.

We hav not organized a Federation here, although we hav plenty of material—good citizens, too.

We will bring some Liberal speaker, and keep him for a week, as we did so well after Mr. John R. Charlesworth delivered his two lectures here to good houses.

Any of the friends wishing any information about the Golden state can write to me direct if they wish, and I will acknowledge all favors. H. H. MINER.

In a Fix Between the Devil and God.

TIPTON, CAL, Jan. 9, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find money order for $3.50, for which extend my subscription one year and send me your "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated."

It has been a long time since I hav said anything to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER. I believe the last time that I wrote to you I promised to send some more subscriptions soon, but the was-to-be subscribers failed to subscribe. There are many disbelievers hereabouts, but they are of the don't-care sort; we need some good lecturer to stir them up, though where the needful would come from no man knoweth. By the way, what is Jamieson's address? [Elsinore, Cal.—ED. T. S.]

We hav two preachers here now, but one, who livs just across the street from me, never mentions outside of the church the faith that is in him, so I never bother him; I mention him as a specimen of some strange species of gospel pedler. But the other preacher keeps his horse in my barn, which joins my shop, and I hav a picnic with him, or would if he had any conscience. I hav been trying to hav him help me find the blessed grace of the Lord, but he does not seem to know just how to go about it; the only advice he could giv me is to pray for it. I hav pointed out to him that my prayers without faith would do no good. He says we must hav faith; without faith we can never be saved, that the devil it is who keeps me from having faith, and that I can never get rid of the devil without God's help; must pray to God to help me down the devil. Anyone who has ever talked with orthodox clericals can imagin how he spread himself while prescribing the above sure cure; but I showed him that, according to his doctrins, I cannot get rid of the devil without faith in God, and cannot hav faith in God till I get rid of the devil, so between God and the devil I am in a devil of a fix.

Your Liberal, Infidel friend,

F. B. HAWKINS.

P.S.—Some people treat the above terms as synonymous, but they are not, by any means. As a usual thing, he whose mind is strong enough to overcome inbred superstition is self-willed and often unreasonably dogmatical. F. B. H.

Snstain Watson Heston—Loans or Gifts, Which?

COLUMBUS, KAN., Jan. 9, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I want room in THE TRUTH SEEKER to express a few thoughts suggested by Watson Heston's published statement. Last September I sent him a dollar, which some one had sent to me, wishing it was a hundred. I sent it most willingly and gladly as a gift, or, I might better say, I really owed it to him for the good and pleasure I hav received by and through the cartoons; the masterly productions of his fertil and ingenious brain. It is true he would prefer to pose as a debtor, nominally; but I hope no one who has sent or will send him small sums will expect him to pay them back, but will see the matter in the light that I do, and feel already paid for what they hav given to our gifted Freethought artist. For my part, I think every reader of the paper, every lover of truth and humanity, is in debt to Watson Heston. I presume THE TRUTH SEEKER is not able to pay him one-half that his services are worth. It seems as if the resources of his brain are inexhaustible in variety of conception, combination, and illustration. He shows up, he pictures so true to life and reality, the false and inhuman absurdities of both ancient and modern times. It would be a great loss to me if, for want of support, those cartoons should cease to adorn and so greatly add to the power of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Reader, I beseech you to sustain Watson Heston. J. H. COOK.

Wants a Spirit Ordinary Men Can Perceive.

NEW YORK, N. Y., Jan. 1, 1894

MR. EDITOR: I hav been reading for years the arguments which hav appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER for and against Spiritualism; hav waited patiently, hoping that some one of the many toilers who read your paper would tell those gladiators that we are not interested in their wordy warfare.

The majority of your subscribers are workers, daily toilers, men and women who hav to work with muscle and brain to gain a daily sustenance. I belong to this class; we hav little time for reading, and when we can spare the time to read we are desirous of gaining some knowledge, adding some little to what we already know.

The men and women who think, study, and by writing impart to the many the fruit of their labor, not by bare assertion, but by conclusiv proofs; who sweep away the cobwebs of the musty past; who shed light and clear the clouds of doubt and dread and fear, deserve the thanks of all mankind.

The controversialist who enters into debate to hear his own trumpet blow; who builds men of straw to show how valiant he is in destroying them; who cuts deep gashes with sarcasm, for no other purpose than to irritate—these men are not helpers, they are persistent pests who disturb the weary traveler's rest.

I propose to show in this letter that Mr. Perry is one of these pests. After reading what he has to say for Spiritualism I feel that my time has been wasted; in other words, I hav been imposed upon by a juggler in words. Perry says houses and engins exist after the man who made them is dead and buried; is it not a waste of time to tell us this? That a mother produces a child and the child livs after the mother is dead. Most of us know this from experience. The child is distinctly separate from the mother after it is born. What would happen to the child if the mother died before it was born?

Will some Spiritualist tell us why the hands which fashioned the house and engin do not continue to exist, and what union or bond exists between houses, engins, and spirits? Perry harps on the dissection of the dead body; it is too good a thing for him to drop; here he can sound his trumpet to his heart's content, and blast after blast he sends forth. But why did you not, Mr. Perry, tell us where to look for spirits? You are good enough to tell us that anyone versed in Spiritualism would not attack a dead body. If you assert that spirits are in live bodies nothing would giv me greater pleasure than to dissect yourself and prove to the world that Spiritualism is true.

Moses, we are told, was the meekest of men; but he lived a long while before Perry's time. Mr. Perry informs us that he has seen all parts of spirits; to see spirits you must hav sensitiv eyes; fine, delicate, keen vision. After this Moses can stand in the shade. You are allowed to be the meekest of men.

Farmers, tailors, sailors, and others who minister to our wants in this world, are coarse mortals and unable to discern the beauties of Spiritualism; this is reserved for the mystery man. Walk up, gentlemen, pay your dollar, and commune with the departed spirits; but don't forget, this can only be done by and through the man with the keen vision.

We are further assured that spirits preserve their identity and can be readily recognized by their mental characteristics as they appeared while on earth. Personally, I hav no desire to associate with the monsters of the past; think of the countless number of the insane who hav lived on this earth and suffered continuing their existence forever; the man with the keen vision assures us that the imbecil will be an imbecil still; this is not desirable; I for one prefer an everlasting sleep.

A spirit is substance, we are told, but so fine that most Materialists cannot grasp it. Is it the Materialists' fault that the spirit is so fine? The Materialist had no part in making spirit; it is the Spiritualists' fault. Make your spirits larger and coarser, that they (or it) can be grasped.

WILLIAM BROADBELT.

How Wide a Meaning Shall We Giv to the Word "Religion"?

CHICAGO, ILL., Jan. 9, 1894.

I find at this office (the Progressive Thinker) a book issued from your house entitled "The Higher Criticism in Theology and Religion," etc., by Thomas Ellwood Longshore, which I hav read with great care and interest; and I write you to say that there is much in it that I like, and to the ordinary reader the historical data it contains will be of great use. To those who hav not the opportunity or means of research, the light it throws on the mythological origin of the scriptures, and the impossibility of preserving the original in its entirety while being copied and recopied and translated into different languages, will hav the very desirable tendency to throw them back on their own reason, judgment, and common sense.

Even the profound thinker, who may differ from the author in much that he says, will admire his cleverness and perspicuity in stating his thoughts. Altogether, it is a valuable acquisition to Freethought and Liberal literature.

But there are two points on which I differ from the author very materially. The first is "religion," which, he says, "has to do exclusivly with the demons called gods (or God), and morality or ethics is no part of it."

Religion, as I understand it, embraces every thought, word, and action toward God and man; in other words, a true life, the product of that element in the soul of which aspires to the higher good and is inherent in man's nature, else he could no more attain to it than he could be a philosopher without the intellectual capacity to understand it.

I agree with the apostle James, who taught the religion of a true life (see James ii, 14-26). But I differ from Paul, to whom our author seems very partial, and who taught justification by faith alone.

The Nicean Council followed Paul and brought on all the bloody wars and persecutions which hav disgraced Christianity ever since.

My second objection is to the author's treatment of the new spiritual dispensation known as modern Spiritualism, and which is so well authenticated by indisputable evidence as to be beyond debate. It furnishes the only verifiable proof we hav of immortality, and if our author is ignorant of the reality of immortality, as he says he is, it is his own fault, as the means of knowing it are all around him, and if he would rather remain ignorant than accept evidence he has no right to call those who do know "crazy Spiritual lunatics."

Selling at Less Than Cost.

ETIWANDA, CAL., Jan. 7, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: For the inclosed money order please send the books named. In renewing my subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER—three months late—my only apology is poverty. While I hav to sell raisins at two cents per pound that cost me two and a half to produce, and every other branch of industry in a similar condition, how can we do otherwise than plead poverty?

I hav tried long and hard to find a new subscriber for the paper, but all are financially short. However, I think I can get two in a few weeks. The picture books in the order are for them.

Send THE TRUTH SEEKER, Alexander's "Dynamic Theory," "Freethinkers' Pictorial Text Book," "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," "God and His Book," Bell's "Handbook," paper; "The Creation of God," paper; "All in a Nutshell," and "Candle From Under the Bushel." C. NEWTON ROSS.

Two Reports From Oregon.

PORTLAND, OR., Dec. 25, E.M. 293.

MR. EDITOR: I will send you some notes from this "Oregon of ours," to let our friends and co-workers in the cause of science vs. superstition know what we did to celebrate—not the birth of the son of God, but the sun-god, as Christmas (December 25th) was known to the pagan world before the Christians appropriated it as the birthday of their mythical Jesus Christ. We, the members of the First Secular Church of Portland—having decided to keep Christmas in a purely secular style—arranged an interesting program, consisting of musical and literary features, which was enjoyed by the large and enthusiastic audience. As usual, the leading feature was an address by Katie Kehm Smith. Her subject was, "The Origin of Christmas," and she explained to the uninitiated that December 25th was a pagan holiday, much older than the Jewish Jesus. She surpassed herself on this occasion. We handed a synopsis of her able lecture to the leading paper (the Morning Oregonian) of this church-cursed city, and the editor, who is a "liberal," agreed to publish it if he could arrange space for it. Of course they did not hav space, but they published lengthy synopses of three orthodox Christmas sermons—Presbyterian, Methodist, and Unitarian. Even Secular Sunday papers are afraid of the churches and their sky-pilots, who would order a boycott on any newspaper that would dare to publish a Secular lecture. But enough of this digression for the the present.

Preceding the lecture, Nettie A. Olds recited Voltairine de Cleyre's beautiful poem, "Nameless." Our choir rendered their parts well. Following the lecture, our Christmas ship "Progress" arrived in port, laden with a large cargo of presents for all. As she hove in sight—drawn from behind the curtain on to the stage—with flags and streamers flying, myriads of tapers lighting up the rigging, which was heavily loaded with gifts for the Secular Church, our Science Sunday-school, and our numerous friends—our lecturer, Katie Kehm Smith, proposed three cheers for the ship "Progress," which were given with a will by all present. Among the numerous presents was an elegant ebony-finished clock, the gift of our church to Katie Kehm and D. W. Smith, with the wish: "May you liv to hear this clock strike the hour when every orthodox church shall be turned into a temple of reason." But I fear that we were too sanguin—unless the Freethinkers take a more activ interest in organizing, it will be a long time before all of the untaxed temples of superstition are transformed into "temples of reason." One very notable feature of the evening was a tableau, "The Burning of Bruno." That veteran Materialist, Dalhousie Priestly, was tied to a stake, the fagots piled high around him, while on each side stood a full-robed priest (our friends W. W. Jesse, president Oregon State Secular Union, and Michael Spahn, looked like Jesuits), with crosses in hand in case he should recant. The lights were turned off; Secretary E. E. Girard handled the greek-fire, so that the red flames flashed up around Bruno as he burned. It looked as though the Christians might hav absolute control again. The effect was weird and awe-inspiring. As the curtain was drawn over his dying agonies, it reminded us that vigilance is the price of liberty. If the church had the power again she would like to burn some of the Brunos of the nineteenth century—our brave Freethought speakers and writers, as well as the publishers of Infidel papers.

So closed the most enjoyable Christmas evening we ever experienced.

ORVILLE C. LEE.

PORTLAND, OR., Jan. 11, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: You will oblige us by changing the meeting-hour of our Sunday school from 10:30 to 12:30 P.M.; also by inserting Katie Kehm Smith's name as lecturer in the notice you hav been so kind as to giv us in the grand old TRUTH SEEKER. I know that the notice is doing us much good, as THE TRUTH SEEKER has a great many readers in Oregon and Washington, and I hope there will be a thousand times as many in a year's time. We had a splendid meeting here Christmas eve. The hall was packed, and although we can seat over two hundred and fifty people, about fifty stood up during the evening and a great many went away when they could not get seats. But no wonder. Mrs. Smith, Nettie Olds, H. E. Girard, and other members of our church—"the only church in the world founded on common sense"—worked hard to get up a splendid entertainment. The following was the program of the evening: Song, by the choir, "Hunters' Chorus;" recitation, by Edith Kemp, "The Moneyless Man;" dialog, by five Sunday-school children; duet, by Nettie Olds and Edith Kemp; tableau, the burning of Bruno at the stake, Mr. D. Priestly representing Bruno, and Messrs. Spahn and Jesse two Roman priests; next a recitation, by Nettie Olds, "Nameless," and then an address by Katie Kehm Smith, "Christmas the festival of the sungod, not the sun of God," which was highly appreciated by the audience, as her lectures always are. The last, but not least, feature of the entertainment was the arrival of the ship "Progress," which was loaded with presents for every, man, woman, and child in the hall. After the other presents were distributed, Katie Kehm and D. W. Smith were presented with a handsome mantel clock by the members of the church, Nettie Olds making a neat little presentation speech.

On December 31st we held our semi-annual election of officers, at which we selected the following: Thos. R. Kemp, president; D. W. Smith, first vice-president; D Priestly, second vice-president; Nettie Olds, third vice-president; Fred Kern, fourth vice-president; A. R. Tozier, fifth vice-president; Mary Hagner, sixth vice-president; three vice-presidents at large are D. C. Stewart, D. C. Hatch, and O. C. Lee. H E Girard, secretary, and Chas. Hagner, treasurer. Mr. Girard declined to serve a second term as secretary, but was elected against his will, as everybody seemed to be convinced that they could not get another man to fill the office who would be as enthusiastic and efficient. Too much cannot be said in praise of Katie Kehm Smith for the noble work she is doing in Oregon. We consider her the woman Ingersoll of the world. She had to work under great disadvantages here in Portland. There had been a number of Secular Unions started here, but they all failed, although times were a hundred times better than they are now, and I know that this church would not hav lasted long if it had not been for her wonderful eloquence and enthusiasm. I wish there was a Katie Kehm Smith in every city in our country. It would not be fifty years before every temple of superstition would hav the sign on it, "For Rent." Inclosed please find a half dozen "blanks," which we would like to hav signed by THE TRUTH SEEKER staff as honorary members, and returned to us. CHAS. HAGNER.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

When Spring Began.

While roaming in the woods one day,
I asked the question, half in play,
"Who can tell when spring began?"
Straightway the answer came, "I can!"
And Robin Redbreast cocked his head—
"All right! Then pray proceed," I said.

"I must," said he, "express surprise
That anyone with two good eyes,
Or even one, should fail to see
Spring's coming must depend on me.
When I come, then will come the spring,
And that's the gist of the whole thing."

"Ho, ho! He, he! Well, I declare!"
A squirrel chuckled, high in air,
"That is too droll—that you should bring,
Instead of being brought by spring.
I hadn't meant to boast, but now
The cause of truth will not allow
My silence; so I'll merely state
That spring for me must always wait.
The thing admits not of a doubt;
Spring can't begin till I come out."

"Well, bless my stars! For pure conceit," Began the brook, "you two do beat
All I hav heard. As if 'twere true
Spring never came at all till you
Were born, and can't come when you're dead.
I'm sorry, sir, you've been misled,
But I can set you right. I know
Spring comes when I begin to flow,
When my ice melts, and not till then,
Spring dares to venture forth again.

"Whew!" sneered the breeze, in high disdain,
"You're wrong, as they are, it is plain.
When first I came, not long ago,
I found you naught but ice and snow,
'Twas my warm breath, you thankless thing,
That broke your bands and brought the spring,
The robins and the squirrels all
Come only when they hear me call.
In fact, I may assert with truth
I am the spring itself, in sooth.
Spring's here because I'm here, and when I leave, you'll hav no spring again."

—St. Nicholas.

The Poetry of Science.

Nature is the most beautiful, the grandest and most complete book it was ever man's good fortune to study. When I walk forth over the green earth, with my eyes open, and take in the full significance of the story the glorious volume before me unfolds, I am lost in admiration of its beauty, impressed with its magnificence, and astonished that all others also do not appreciate its grandeur.

The winds and the clouds hav each a tale to tell more pleasing than that of the "Arabian Nights." The simple blade of grass is more marvelous in its structure than the tallest spire men ever built. The sunlight whispers to the violet and the dew kisses the crag-crowning pine, and each tells a tale of chemical changes more wonderful than was ever conceived in the wildest dreams of poets or vagaries of metaphysical philosophers.

I walk along the river's bank and I see earth's vital current flow in her veins to the sea, and hear the rhythmic beating of her great heart. I pass a ledge of rocks and lo! the leaves of the great book are laid open to my admiring gaze. I read not only the "testimony of the rocks," but Mother Earth's own story. Her autobiography, written by her own finger in letters of adamant; characters so plain, so unmistakable, and so undeniable that he who loves truth more than fanatical or stolid adherence to a creed can easily read, comprehend, and profit by the lesson.

When I gaze up into the blue vault at night, studded with thousands of twinkling stars, they are transformed into millions of complete, grand, and beautiful worlds, sweeping in magnificent spiral paths through the infinitude of space, each in perfect time, sounding its own note in the grand anthem of the universe.

Every ray of light that comes trembling across the vast ocean of space to greet us is freighted with a grander revelation than ever Menu, Zoroaster, Confucius, Moses, Buddha, Mohammed, or Jesus dreamed of.

The telescope and microscope open up to us vast fields of beauty and mines of intellectual wealth of which Moses, and David were as ignorant as children and more wonderful than any vision Patmos-anchored John ever saw.

To a mind freed from the dark pall of superstition and open, like a flower, to the glad sunlight of truth nature presents a panorama of exhaustless variety, interest, and instruction. The kaleidoscopic clouds, the rainbow, the ice-crystal, the hummingbird and innocent child, not only appeal powerfully to man's nature, but

Wheeling her flight through the gladdened air,
The spirit of beauty is everywhere.

The popular idea of science is that she is iconoclastic, or analytical and destructiv, only; that, vandal-like, she is only intent on destroying all that we hold beautiful and sacred. That is not the true idea. The mission of science is to discover, first and foremost, what is true. This is her main object.

Her second is, to make the world a better place to liv in. And if in the pursuit of her object she should unconsciously jostle against some venerable error, some respectable prejudice, and they, for want of support, should topple over and fall to the ground, she does not stop to mourn the loss, but marches straight on to her shining goal.

The true, the good, and the beautiful hav nothing to fear from science. True, she must first clear the ground before she can erect a temple; but this done, she applies herself diligently to the synthetic or constructiv labor of her mission, which consists in discovering the true, fostering the good, and developing the beautiful; everything that tends to lessen pain and increase human happiness, or make "The wilderness blossom as the rose."

A STUDENT.

Correspondence.

MISSOULA, MONT., Dec. 26, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my first attempt to write to the grand Children's Corner. I am ten years old. My father has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for over a year, and he likes it very much. I go to school and study arithmetic, language, spelling, geography, physiology, and reading. My papa and mamma hav joined the Liberal League, and as soon as I get older I will join it too. Hoping to see this letter in print, I remain, ROSIE DAVIS.

[We are pleased to hear from Rosie, and hope she will write again, and tell the Corner about Missoula.—ED. C. C.]

GEORGES STATION, PENN., Dec. 3, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my first letter to the Corner. Papa takes THE TRUTH SEEKER. I hav one brother. I go to school. I am thirteen years old. In school I study the Fifth Reader, Physiology, Spelling, History, Geography, Arithmetic, Grammar, and Writing. My teacher's name is Frances Shaffer. We liv about two miles from Greensburg, our county seat. It is snowing here this evening. We are the only Freethinkers around here, except in Greensburg. It is only three weeks from to-morrow till Christmas. This is Sunday evening. I had nothing to do and I thought I would write a letter to the Corner. We liv on a big farm of over one hundred acres of land. We hav the "Freethinker's Pictorial Text-book," and "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated." There are some comical pictures in them. I read the Children's Corner every week. From your Liberal friend,

IRENE STOREY.

[Next time you write please describe Georges Station for the benefit of the Corner.—ED. C. C.]

KALAMA, WASH., Dec. 27, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my first letter to the Children's Corner. My parents do not take THE TRUTH SEEKER, but papa intends to subscribe for it when he comes home in the spring. I like to read it very much. I am sixteen years old, and I am a Freethinker. I go to school and study arithmetic, grammar, constitution, algebra, literature, and spelling. Our school is closed till after New Year's. There are quite a number of Freethinkers here in this little place.

I will tell you about the church people here. There are four different denominations, Catholics, Methodists, Congregationalists, and United Brethren. The three last named are holding revival meetings here. They hav had a large attendance till the last few days. They hav been praying and singing, and it sounded like so many frogs in a mill-pond. Some of the biggest drunkards in town hav been converted, but I don't think it will last long. The church has always been crowded, so you could not get a seat till Christmas night there was a dance, and one of the preachers called it "the devil's prayer-meeting;" but when the time came, I went to church, and it was about empty. As soon as church was out. I went to the dance, and the devil had more than three times as many as the Almighty. The next day the preacher of the Methodist Episcopal church said he was going to keep up the meetings till he breaks up all the dances, but I am afraid he will hav a sweet time of it. There is to be another dance New Year's, and I will write and tell you who has the largest crowd There has been a lot of them standing up on the Lord's side, as they call it, but last night they opened the doors of the church and there were only two that wanted to join, one for the Congregational and one for the Methodist Episcopal. The United Brethren was left in the cold. The preacher said last night that they hav been praying for more to come to Christ, but they may pray till they are gray-headed, and I will not go. I think there are a good many here in the same boat as I am. I will close for this time, for fear my letter will be too long. I remain,

Your friend and Freethinker,
ALFRED F. STONE.

P.S.—I hav a brother that will write when I write my next letter. A. F. S,

[Keep aloft the flag of Freethought, Alfred, always.—ED. C. C.]

HARLAN, IA., Dec. 27, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my second letter to the Children's Corner. I hope that you will see fit to publish it and my piece of poetry. It is the first piece I ever wrote for publication. My sister has gone to visit my other sister. That leaves papa and mamma and me at home. We liv on a farm. I never farmed much; I hav to do all the housework, for mamma is sick and cannot do any work; she may never get well. I like to liv on the farm, the air is so fresh. My sister has been corresponding with Daisy Suter in Egypt. She wants to know what kind of a paper THE TRUTH SEEKER is, and what a Freethinker is. She says she looks forward to a better life above. This was a surprise to us after seeing her letter. I am a Freethinker, but not an Infidel. Well, I guess this is all I will write. Hoping to see in print what I hav written, I remain,

Your Freethought friend,
ARTHUR J. BAKER.

P.S.—If any of the writers to the Corner will write I will gladly answer. Address, Harlan, Shelby county, Iowa. A. J. B.

[No need to say that Arthur is good, for his letter attests it. There is fine thought in the verses, which we are pleased to print.—ED. C. C.]

MY MOTHER.

Her form is old and worn with care.
Upon her head lies silvered hair,
So fair to see.
The light of love shines from her eyes,
And there's no prize beneath the skies
So dear to me.

I wish to say this, while I write,
Her face so dear, her eyes so bright,
Show love—not scorn.
Her heart so true swells fast with love—
She's like an angel from above
In human form.

She said to me, about a year
Before the time I'm writing here,
"Speak but the truth."
Another thing she said to me:
"When others mourn cast off all glee—
Be full of ruth."

And I'll remember till I die
Those words, and to the purblind cry:
"Speak but the truth."
A blessing then I'm sure you'll get
If "speak the truth" you'll not forget,
And mind the "ruth."

A. J. B.

ATCHISON, KAN., Dec. 31, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: In the last hour of the day, in the last day of the week, in the last week of the month, in the last month of the year, and while waiting for the New Year to come in, I will again take the pleasure of presenting a few lines to the Children's Corner.

Well, Christmas has once more come and gone, and the New Year is close at hand. Christmas was rather dull here this year; or at least seemed that way to me. Nobody seemed to take any interest in getting up anything. The Christian people had what they called Christmas trees at their churches; but if they were all like the one I attended I would call them anything but that. They had the tree decorated with fancy paper and illuminated with candles, so as to make it appear that the tree was loaded with presents. They had a few speeches in regard to their dear savior, and then came the time to receive presents, when they presented each and every one with a small package of candy, and adjourned. Little children went with the expectation of enjoying a good time and receiving many presents, but were only fooled and disappointed by their Christian parents. It seems to me that they did not show much respect for their father above or they would undoubtedly hav presented him with a fine present. I did not once think, or I would hav tried to sell them a piano to present to the old fellow; but I guess it is a good thing that I did not try, as they would hav been fools enough to accept my offer and would hav tried to send him the piano. By the looks of things on the street that night and the next day they wanted to save their extra change and satisfy their appetites with a wet lunch. All such nonsense is monotonous, and is not worth writing.

We were going to hav one of the best lecturers in the field speak here January 1st, viz., the noted John R. Charlesworth; but we could not find enough people that would take any interest in it, therefore could not raise the necessary amount. We only hope that we will be able to hav him and many others in the future.

Well, as the bells are ringing and the whistles blowing and guns firing for the arrival of the New Year, I will close for this time. Wishing you and the friends of the Corner a happy New Year, I remain, Your sleepy Liberal friend,

JOHN REMSBURG, JR.

P.S.—George sends his best regards and wishes you a happy New Year, and says he will write soon. J. R.

Hard Knocks at Christianity.

By R. WHEELER.

This book is just what its title implies—thumping whacks at superstition. It deals with the effect of Christianity on the world, showing what Christians have done to advance their religion and impede the progress of man. It shows that Jesus was a false prophet, that the gospels are not authentic, and that Christianity is a borrowed system of religion. That the Bible is not in accord with Science, that the atonement scheme is futile and foolish, and that religion is not a real benefit to man.

"With Daughter's Babe Upon His Knee."

A new edition of that splendid prose poem, "Life," by "the prince of orators," Col. R. G. Ingersoll. It is larger and better than the old edition, and can be framed or placed upon the table as an ornament. In the center of the card appear the portraits of the Colonel and the baby, surrounded by the prose poem, which has been truthfully described as, "one of the masterpieces of the orator and poet, who now, as far as we know, stands alone in the living world." It will make a delightful present, and will be a souvenir not only of intellectual greatness, but of artistic workmanship. It is printed on heavy board, gilt beveled edge. The size is 12x16 inches, and the price only 75 cents, post-paid.

Pleasure and Progress.

AN ATTEMPT TO PROVE THAT

The Pursuit of Pleasure is the Sine Qua Non of Intellectual, Moral, and Social Development, and that The Promotion of Pleasure is the Duty of Philanthropy and Statesmanship.

By Albert M. Lorentz, LL.B.

CONTENTS:

BOOK I.—PLEASURE: Chap. I.—Sources of Pleasure. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures. Chap IV.—Social Pleasures. Chap. V.—Pleasures of the Savage, the Barbarian and the Civilized. Chap. VI.—Genesis of religions. Chap. VII.—Christianity.

BOOK II.—INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Purpose of life. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures: Knowledge. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Reason. Chap.—V. Ideal Pleasures: Character. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Pedagogical Despotism.

BOOK III.—MORAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Morality. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures: Prudence. Chap. III.—Material Pleasures: Refinement. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Foresight, Chap. V.—Ideal Pleasures: Civilization. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Vice Caused by Restraint.

BOOK IV.—SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Progress. Chap. II.—Protection, Capitalism, and Socialism: Respectively an Actual, an Imminent, and a Proposed Violation of Individual Sovereignty. Chap. III.—Condition of Agriculture. Chap. IV. Public Schools, the Mene, Mene, Tekel of Socialism. Chap. V.—Province of Government. Chap. VI.—Our Social Disorder.

Here are some of the verdicts on this remarkable production which have been rendered by men who are in every way qualified as judges of books:

This is a spirited, rattling sort of a book that skates right along over the deepest subject without much thought whether the ice is thin or not. It answers the greatest question—What is the use, object, motive, purpose, and summum bonum of life, and the real cause and motive of progress?—by one word, Pleasure!—Thaddeus B. Wakeman.

He sharply attacks, also, modern methods of education, and in this he is most abundantly borne out by the facts, and his arraignment is practically unanswerable. His book is altogether a curious and suggestive one.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The man who wrote this book knows how to write a book, and knows what he is writing about. There is not a padded sentence in the volume, not an attempt to fill up with words for lack of knowledge. The author deals hard blows at shams and falsehoods, and hard blows for realities and truth. We do not see how anyone can read this book and disagree with the leading propositions. The work is good; every chapter is worth reading. It is a work of common-sense Socialism. The chapter on public schools ought to be put into a tract and sent to every teacher in the land. Thousands of sentences are worthy of being framed as political maxims and hung up all over the nation. The book deserves a wide reading, not only for its literary style, which is clear and incisive, but for its bold, honest sayings.—L. K. Washburn.

Here we have philosophy up to date, the advance word of the progressive thinker; not a dry, abstruse discourse, but a common-sense essay in plain words upon the conduct of life, and all illustrated with such an abundance of anecdote and metaphor as add real entertainment to solid instruction. This is an important book striking at superstition and unreasonable tradition, and upholding individual liberty in defiance of governmental law and social custom. After reading this book one feels that the author will never be able to write another, for he has put all his life and knowledge into this one. Every page bristles with points; there is no padding or filling in, no mere literary embellishment; but clean-cut apothegms abound, and every line is dictated by hard-headed common-sense.—Capt. Robt. C. Adams.

After you read this book you will be as enthusiastic in praise of it as are the eloquent editor of the Investigator and the gallant President of the Canadian Secular Union.

"Pleasure and Progress" has 398 pages, is splendidly printed from large, clear type, on excellent paper, and costs, bound in cloth, $1; paper covers, 50 cents.

A most extraordinary publication. We venture the assertion that nothing like it has ever before appeared in this country, and it is very doubtful if another one like it will ever again be published. We must give the Truth Seeker Company the credit of putting the book in the reach of all. At twice the price it would have been a cheap book. Artist Heston as a portrait painter and designer is a wonderful success, and we judge from our own feelings that nearly every Liberal in America will desire a copy of this most wonderful volume.—[Freethinkers' Magazine.

Mr. Heston deserves to be called the artist-hero of Liberalism. He has dedicated his genius to Freethought, and has done faithful and noble work for the cause of right and truth. But the pictures do not make up the whole of this volume. There are nearly two hundred pages of reading matter that serve first as explanations of the illustrations, and secondly as texts to prove the utter falsity of the church's professions and the hypocrisy of those who uphold them. Altogether the book is one of the best weapons against Christianity and the church that has ever been put in the hands of Freethinkers.—[Boston Investigator.

JOHN E. REMSBURG'S WORKS.

Abraham Lincoln: Was He A Christian?

For fifteen years Mr. Remsburg has been collecting material for his work. He presents an array of testimony that is irresistible and overwhelming, and which must put this question at rest forever. In addition to the testimony of twenty witnesses who claim that Lincoln was a Christian, and which is reviewed and refuted, he adduces the testimony of more than a hundred witnesses in proof of the claim that Lincoln was not a Christian. These witnesses include his wife and other relatives; his three law partners; his private secretaries; members of his cabinet; his principal biographers, and scores of his most intimate friends.

False Claims. Revised and Enlarged

As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic. Price, 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Slavery; Witchcraft; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbatic Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of the Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies $1.

Image Breaker. Six Lectures:

Decline of Faith; Protestant Intolerance; Washington an Unbeliever; Jefferson an Unbeliever; Paine and Wesley; Christian Sabbath. Each 5 cents; bound, paper, 25 cents; per doz., 40 cents.

Thomas Paine. Tells the story of the Author-Hero's Life, delineates the leading traits of his character and genius, and vindicates his name from the aspersions cast upon it. Choice extracts from "Common Sense," "American Crisis," "Rights of Man," and "Age of Reason," are given; also, tributes to Paine's character from more than one hundred noted persons of Europe and America, many of them written expressly for this work. Second edition, 160 pages, printed on fine tinted paper, neatly bound, and containing a handsome steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Bundehesh (a sacred book of the Persians,) states that Ahuramazda after creating the first man and woman, Mashya and Mashyana, bade them "to be humble of heart; to observe the law; to be pure in their thoughts, pure in their speech, pure in their actions." But an evil demon came to them in the form of a Serpent, sent by Ahriman, the prince of devils, and gave them fruit of a wonderful tree, which imparted immortality. Evil inclinations then entered their hearts, and all their moral excellence was destroyed. Consequently they fell, and forfeited the eternal happiness for which they were destined. They killed beasts, and clothed themselves in their skins.

THE story is told of a parent who had become a recent convert to hypnotism. His small son, who had heard him discussing the subject, asked what hypnotism was. He did not answer, but with the imperativ manner of a professional mesmerist said: "Now, Jimmie, do you hear? That is not a clock, but a dickey-bird, chip, chip!" WE had adjourned to the sitting-room for religious devotion, and the good old man read a chapter in Deuteronomy, his plan always being to read the Bible through from the first chapter of Genesis to the last one in Revelations, one at a time. With great solemnity he stumbled over the long list of names, and when he had finished he knelt in prayer. Upon the mantel was a parrot, seeming to listen with great attention. The prayer commenced with a supplication for the entire world, then followed the national government, then the state, then the neighborhood, then the relativs of the family, each being named, until it had lasted about twenty minutes, when suddenly the parrot in loud and angry tones cried: "Oh, shut up—shut up, I say!"—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A BAPTIST minister had to travel several miles on horseback through a country where the Redskin had put in an appearance. This minister was what was known, I believe, as a hyper-Calvinist. One Sunday morning he armed himself with a six-chambered revolver to protect himself against an attack by the Indians. A free-will friend pointed out to the good man how inconsistent he was, because if the Lord had foreordained that he should be killed by an Indian, it would so happen, and nothing could save him. The minister cast a glance at his friend and said: "Yes, but if the Lord had foreordained that the Indian was to be shot by him, how was the will of the Lord going to be carried out if he hadn't got his revolver with him?" Predestination won the argument on that occasion.

IT is a matter of knowledge that, since the day of the godly John Calvin, of blessed memory, the population of Paradise has suffered few additions, the freedom of the city being rather conferred upon them who by chance passed that way than upon all who desired that boon. Now certain devout men, seeing this, wondered whether they might not facilitate emigration thereto; and to this end they wished it should be known that infants were welcome, and that three adults—at the least—out of every million might, by long perserverance, liv within the gates. Wherefore these men with their brethren assembled and did debate the matter. And they who would hav opened the gates were not enough to prevail. And they who willed that heaven should remain a close corporation, neither were they enough to prevail. So the decrees of the Almighty were in nowise amended. Now of them who stood out most valiantly for the integrity of heaven were two, a tall man and a short man. And they were strangers each to the other. But after that the gathering had dispersed did they two meet, and, looking each in the eyes of the other, did say, "Congratulations!" And the tall man said also: "Fxperience has taught me that few men are fit for heaven." And the short man said: "Yea. And it were well that the society of the place should be select." Then the tall man said: "I am the chaplain at the penitentiary." And the short man said: "I minister to a congregation of millionaires."—Wardour Street, in Kate Field's Washington.

Remsburg's Book on Lincoln Now Ready.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN:

WAS HE A CHRISTIAN?

By John E. Remsburg.

One of the most noted controversies of the century has been waged over the question of Abraham Lincoln's religious belief. Soon after the remains of America's most illustrious son were laid to rest at Springfield, one of his biographers, Dr. Holland, put forward the claim that he was a Christian. The claim was promptly denied by the dead statesman's friends, but only to be renewed again, and again denied. And thus for a quarter of a century the question of Lincoln's belief has been tossed like a battledore from side to side.

For fifteen years Mr. Remsburg has been collecting material for his work. He presents an array of testimony that is irresistible and overwhelming, and which must put this question at rest forever. In addition to the testimony of twenty witnesses who claim that Lincoln was a Christian, and which is reviewed and refuted, he adduces the testimony of more than a hundred witnesses in proof of the claim that Lincoln was not a Christian. These witnesses include his wife and other relatives; his three law partners; his private secretaries; members of his cabinet; his principal biographers, and scores of his most intimate friends.

Just Out.—25 Cents—Five Copies for $1.

A Liberal living in Michigan said once that he would give $25 a year to have the Crimes of Preachers recorded, as the frequent lapses of virtue of the ministers showed how little value Christianity possesses to make men moral.

We have just issued the Fourth Edition of the book doing this. The additions for this new edition of the

"Crimes of Preachers"

shows nearly 400 cases of ministerial conduct. While those in previous editions show that within a few years about of one kind or another of criminal conduct. Most of the crimes are against women, for the fair sex are at once the weakness and the strength of the church—"the church" meaning of course the clergy.

Notwithstanding the many additional pages, we have kept the price the same, 25 cents. Send for a copy, and confound the churchmen. Show them just what sort of scamps are the clergy who have closed the World's Fair on Sunday, because it is so holy a day that to look upon machinery or paintings in this period is "immoral."

We believe that not only can good be done but money made by any Liberal who will canvass for our book "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated." In fact we know one man who worked at it but a few hours weekly and sold nearly fifty copies in a month. The price is low; everybody knows the Old Testament stories, and nearly everybody would like a book applying nineteenth-century wit and knowledge to them. People like to laugh. Reverence for the Old Testament tales has largely disappeared and jokes at the expense of Jonah and Joseph and Esau and Samson and David, and the other worthies of unsavory reputation, are keenly appreciated. It seems to us that the book will sell at sight. It does here in the store. Liberals out of employment will find this a good way to make an honest dollar.

FOR HER DAILY BREAD.

A Nineteenth Century Novel.

Preface by R. G. INGERSOLL.

For Her Daily Bread is the story of two young girls and a younger brother who were left parentless, with a little money, fair education, and much courage, to make their way through the world by going to Chicago. The author is also the heroine. The narrative is, in the main, a history of a working-girl's life and experience in the city of Chicago among bluff business-men, kind-hearted folks, and disreputable hypocrits. It is just such a story of human life as we should expect Colonel Ingersoll to be interested in; and whatever he admires and appreciates is sure to be worth the attention of the rest of the world. Gems of Thought.

THE prodigality of the rich is the providence of the poor.—Ingersoll.

THE man who says God is his father would hav hard work to show that he was not an orphan.—Boston Investigator.

I CHOOSE the nobler part of Emerson, when, after various disenchantments, he exclaims, "I covet truth." The gladness of true heroism visits the heart of him who is really competent to say this.—John Tyndall.

I BELIEVE politics will not go right, society will not go right, religion will not go right, nothing human will ever go right, except in so far as woman goes right; and for woman to go right she must hav her rights.—Charles Kingsley.

A DIVIDED party is sometimes the only hope of an oppressed people. A closely organized party is apt to grow entirely too strong for the people. They cannot hold their own against thoroughly organized armies of greed. The pretorian guards were for years a thoroughly organized party.—Galveston News.

I HAV good reason to know how few real men there are in the world. Wearing trousers is not the only requirement of a man. Trifles like character, backbone, integrity, self-control, doing the right thing at the right time, are a few of the essentials of manhood. Were I asked what was the matter with most men, I should reply lack of virility and moral courage. This is the reason why there are so few good leaders. The dead level of mediocrity wallows in platitudes and traditions, waiting for some human cyclone to force them out of their slough of inanity.—Kate Field.

THE E is always hope when people are forced to listen to both sides; it is when they attend only to one that errors harden into prejudices, and truth itself ceases to hav the effect of truth, by being exaggerated into falsehood. And since there are few mental attributes more rare than that judicial faculty which can sit in intelligent judgment between two sides of a question, of which only one is represented by an advocate before it, truth has no chance but in proportion as every side of it, every opinion which embodies any fraction of the truth, not only finds advocates, but is so advocated as to be listened to.—Mill.

As the world grew older, art was used to celebrate the greatness and achievements of kings and rulers as well as gods, and their tombs were ornamented with such decorations as these early ages could create; but yet all literature and art was only for the gods and the rulers of the world. Then, even more than now, wealth and power brought intellect to do their will, and all its force was spent to sing the praises of the rulers of the earth and air. The basis of all this art of pen and brush was the reality of the world; but this was so magnified and distorted for the base use of kings and priests, that realism in the true sense could not exist.—C. S. Darrow.

I KNOW what can be said for war—"school of heroism," "surplus population," and so forth. One widow's tears, nay, the agony of but one wounded horse, outweigh a shoal of such flimsy stuff. The simple truth is that war is so utterly horrible and abominable, it cannot be truthfully described without making humanity shudder. In modern warfare courage no longer has place, and instead of eliminating the unfit, it takes the flower of the race, the fittest to survive. That sovereigns and statesmen should hav the power to embroil millions of unoffending people in deadly combat is, like the doctrin of God's sending his creatures to eternal hell, at once an absurdity and an atrocity. —J. M. Wheeler.

THERE is no real difference between the tyranny of a class (e. g. hereditary nobility) and that of a popular majority. A political party is a class. Indeed, so far as personal liberty is concerned, it is less likely to suffer from a privileged order than from an electiv majority; for the latter rules by patriotic sanction. It is easier to deal with an aristocracy of birth, too timid to be aggressiv, a thousand times easier to grapple with an individual tyrant, than with a tyrant majority, entitled to use all the means of the minority, as well as its own, to carry out the will of a part as that of the whole. With the decay of hereditary authority, the majority is now steadily acquiring the ancient powers of a privileged class. John Stuart Mill was a true friend of the people, even friend enough to tell them the truth. He recognized their infirmity, their readiness to coerce individuals, and predicted an increase of governmental invasions of liberty in England as the people acquired more possession of the government.—Moncure D. Conway.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF MENTAL HEALING.

A Practical Exposition of Natural Restorative Power.

BY LEANDER EDMUND WHIPPLE.

A Book to explain the correct idea of Mental Healing, and what may be reasonably expected to result from an understanding of its principles.

Price, $2.50. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE HOLY CROSS SERIES.

The Popes and Their Doings. Biographical sketches of the most noted of these vicars of Christ and vicegerents of God, showing what they have done, and what kind of men they were. It contains very plain statements, in very unvarnished language, and the unmasking is complete, proving them to have been cruel, intriguing, and licentious men. Considering the rapid growth of Catholicism in this country, this book cannot be too widely disseminated. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Awful Disclosures of Maria Monk, as exhibited in a narrative of her sufferings during her residence of five years as a novice, and two years as a black nun, in the Hotel Dieu Nunnery, at Montreal. Perhaps not any anti-Catholic book published has created more excitement, and had such a circulation as this work. To counteract its effects the Catholics circulated a story that Maria Monk was "no better than she should be," but investigation disclosed that her "child of shame" was none other than the child of her priest-seducer. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth 75 cents.

Auricular Confession and Popish Nunneries. By Wm. Hogan, for twenty-five years a confessing priest. A revelation of the licentious practices of the priests and nuns in these religious brothels. There is no question that Ex-priest Hogan knew the truth of the tales of vice, seduction, and infanticide he gives in this volume, and equally there is no question that if the people generally knew of them, Catholicism would not be given the vast amounts of money now allowed it by our various city governments. Price, paper, 50 cents, cloth 75 cents.

The Priest in Absolution. A Review of the system of auricular confession, including copious extracts from the "Confessional Unmasked," from the "Master Key to Popery," etc. The work is a protest against and an appeal to every American citizen to examine carefully and thoughtfully a religious system so invasive of privacy, so powerful for evil in licentious hands, so fraught with danger to female modesty, to the ingenuous openness of youth, and to the freedom of thought, speech, and action. Price, paper, 25 cents.

Priestly Celibacy Exposed. A lecture by the Rev. Geo. Townsend Fox, of Durham, England. Revised American edition, showing the result in parishes of the Roman decree that priests shall not mary. Price, paper, 15 cents.

Sister Lucy and Her Awful Disclosures Respecting New Hall Convent, Boreham, Essex, England. Showing that convents are inimical to chastity, virtue, and freedom. Price, paper, 10 cents.

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA IDENTIFIED AS THE CHRISTIAN JESUS.

An important and remarkable revelation concerning the life and times of Apollonius of Tyana, the great sage and philosopher of the first century. It is here claimed that his life and teachings were appropriated and utilized by the formulators of the Christian religion in the interest of so-called Christianity. The plagiarism is made plain in this brief history of Apollonius, especailly in view of the historical references and comments thereon. It is quite evident that to conceal the plagiarism, the name of Apollonius was suppressed.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll's ARGUMENT
IN THE
Reynolds Blasphemy Trial,
At Morristown, N. J.

This is the greatest argument ever made in a case of this kind, and will be a model for the Bar so long as the Christians use force to repress free speech. Its legal acumen is unsurpassed, its eloquence never equaled. Wherever Christian persecution is going on this argument should be freely circulated, read to the Christians, and expounded on every occasion.

Darwin and After Darwin.
An Exposition of the Darwinian Theory.
By GEORGE J. ROMANES.

A systematic Exposition of what may be termed the Darwinism of Darwin, and intended to be of service to the general reader rather than to professed naturalists.
Mr. Romanes is well known as one of the most interesting of English writers upon evolution, besides ranking with Professor Huxley in scientific knowledge and ability. And this is a part of his conclusion regarding the great subject of Design, to which the church so often refers:
"Thus whether we look to the facts of adaptation or to those of beauty, everywhere throughout organic nature we meet with abundant evidence of natural causation, while nowhere do we meet with any independent evidence of supernatural design. . . . Adaptation and beauty are alike receiving their explanation at the hands of a purely mechanical philosophy. . . All nature has thus been transformed before the view of the present generation in a manner and to an extent that has never before been possible; and inasmuch as the change which has taken place has taken place in the direction of naturalism, and this to the extent of rendering the mechanical interpretation of nature universal, it is no wonder if the religious mind has suddenly awakened to a new and a terrible force in the words of its traditional enemy—Where is now thy God?"

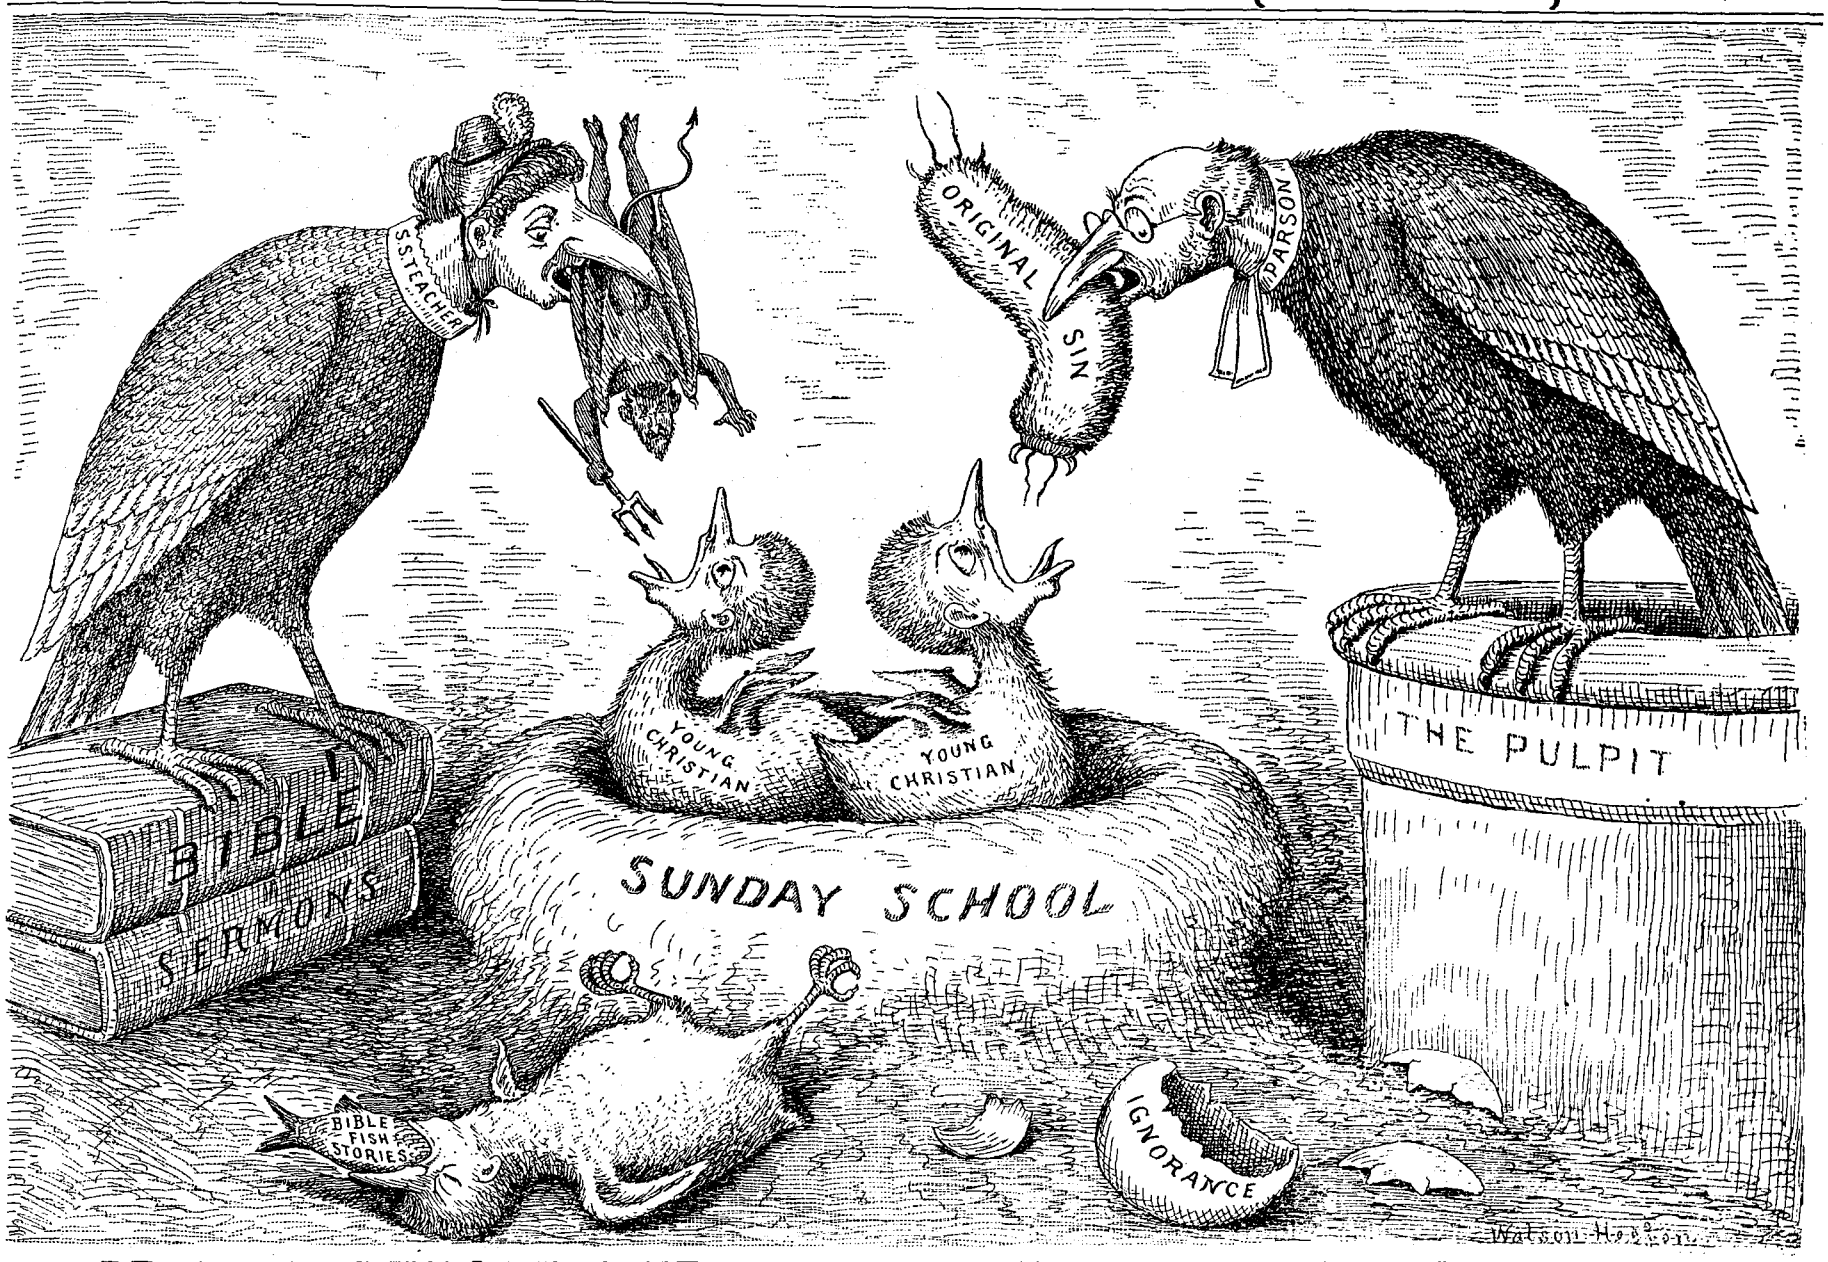
A SEVERE blizzard prevailed in Oklahoma and other parts of the middle west, and also in the northwest, last week. New York received a fall of five inches of snow, and had some moderately cold weather, although the mercury kept away above zero.



THE Democratic caucus voted to make the income tax bill a part of the Wilson tariff measure. The cooler-headed friends of these bills think that this action puts both in extreme peril, in the Senate surely, if not in the House. The final vote is to be taken on Thursday of this week, after we go to press.

THE court of appeals of New York affirms the decision of Justice Williams of the supreme court, declaring unconstitutional the law allowing women to vote for school commissioners. All the judges join in the decision. The case grew out of the cancellation of the name of Matilda Joslyn Gage from the registry list of the third election district of Manlius, Onondaga county. The judges say: "A constitutional convention may take away the barrier which excludes the claimed right of the appellant, but until that is done we must enforce the law as it is written."

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A Journal of Freethought and Reform.

Vol. 21. No. 6. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY.} New York, Saturday, February 10, 1894. {28 LAFAYETTE PL.} $3.00 Per Year.

READY TO SWALLOW ANYTHING—CHRISTIAN BIRDS FEEDING THEIR YOUNG.

TO NEW READERS OF THE TRUTH SEEKER.

We send this issue of The Truth Seeker to a great many Liberals who are not subscribers, with an earnest invitation to them to become such, and thereby help along the Liberal cause.

We would also respectfully call their attention to the many points of excellence of the Paper.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is the Largest Freethought Journal in the World.

The Cartoons of Heston appear each week, and each picture is worth the cost of the paper a year to one who appreciates plain and telling arguments against ecclesiasticism.

THE TRUTH SEEKER constantly prints the most varied and entertaining Selection of Original Papers of any Liberal Journal Its Contributors are all the noted Liberals of the country. All that Col. R. G. Ingersoll gives to the Public can be found in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and that Poet of Freethought, Samuel P. Putnam, writes more for its columns than for any other. The Liberal speakers send us accounts of their journeys, and the best writers of Freethought freely devote their services to the cause of Liberalism through the colums of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Charles Watts, perhaps the greatest Debater of our time, certainly the foremost Secular orator of England, will send us monthly letters from England with all the news of our movement there and such reflections and pertinent observations as will surely make every English Secularist living in this country and Canada want to read THE TRUTH SEEKER. George E. Macdonald, one of the rarest combinations of humorist, satirist, philosopher, logician, has been engaged to write regularly for our columns. As the "Man With the Badge Pin," he is known to nearly all the Liberals of the country and we are willing to make him known to more.

THE TRUTH SEEKER gives all the news of Freethought, and is always on Guard Against the Encroachments of Ecclesiastics upon the People's Liberties.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is devoted to the defense of Mental Liberty, of American Institutions, and the Preservation of the United States Constitution, so far as regards religious tests and the maintenance of human rights. It advocates the abolition of all laws based on religion or religious observances. It demands the taxation of church property. It is uncompromisingly opposed to anything tending toward a union of church and state, either in name or in fact.

The Sunday Question is now to the front all over the country. On that THE TRUTH SEEKER will voice the demands of the Liberal minded men and women of the country, and nowhere else will the rights of the people as against Puritanism be found so sturdily defended.

To sum it up, THE TRUTH SEEKER is the biggest, best, and bravest Freethought journal in the world, and if you are a Liberal or Freethinker, you want it and ought to take it. We appeal also to fair-minded Christians to hear our side and then decide, Bigots and fanatics, we suppose, wouldn't take it on any terms.

The Most Magnificent Work Ever Published by the Freethought Press.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The object of this work is to present the Course of Freethought throughout the Civilized World for the last Four Centuries, from the time of Columbus and Bruno to the time of Ingersoll.

It will be a radical Historic Record of the Greatest Developments of the Human Race.

It will reveal Freethought as an Intellectual, Moral, Literary, Social, Industrial, and Political Movement.

It will show what Freethought is in itself and how manifold are its influences, and with what hope and promise we can hail its future triumph.

"Four Hundred Years of Freethought" will Embrace the most Illustrious Pages of Human History,

adorned with the brightest Genius, radiant with the most splendid Poetry, rich with the greatest Inventions and Discoveries and ennobled with Freedom's most shining advance.

Nothing Can be More Interesting,

more inspiring to the Pioneer Workers of to-day—to those who are still in the van for Human Rights and Progress. The struggle is not ended and what is already won must be carefully guarded. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; and from the Past we must ever learn Great Lessons for the Future.

NO LIBERAL CAN AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THIS BOOK.

It will contain the Greatest Thoughts and the Greatest Deeds of the Greatest Men

In One Harmonious and Magnificent Whole,

a vivid picture of man's sublimest evolution, with the added glory of

from the chains and slavery of a barbaric creed and church.

THE FIRST PART of the book will deal with Freethought as a Universal Power, as a Spirit, a Method, a prevailing but unorganized Influence in every Department of Human Growth.

THE SECOND PART will deal with Freethought as an Organized Movement, especially in America and Europe; and this history is of equal importance with the first, and should be justly understood and the Pioneers of our work recognized.

The first part will embrace the following Grand Departments:

Philosophy.	Science.	Education and Ethics.	Literature.		Government and Politics.		Woman's Emancipation.
Bruno.	Copernicus.		Boccaccio.	Lessing.	Voltaire.	Gambetta.	Madame Roland.
Spinoza.	Galileo.	Bacon.	Rabelais.	Schiller.	Rousseau.	Castelar.	Mary Wollstoncraft.
Descartes.	Kepler.	Comenius.	Cervantes.	Goethe.	French Salon.	Bradlaugh.	Harriet Martineau.
Locke.	Da Vinci.	Pestalozzi.	Marlowe.	George Sand.	French Revolution.	Garrison.	Frances Wright.
Hume.	Newton.	Froebel.	Shakspere.	George Eliot.		Phillips.	Lucretia Mott.
Hobbs.	Humboldt.	Combe.	Gibbon.	Victor Hugo.	Thomas Paine.	Parker.	Ernestine L. Rose.
Kant.	Lyell.	Spencer.	Burns.	Emerson.	Jefferson.	Sumner.	Lydia Maria Child.
Hamilton.	Darwin.	Owen.	Shelley.	Heine.	Mazzinni.	Lincoln.	Margaret Fuller.
Comte.	Tyndall.	Holyoake.	Byron.	Thoreau.	Bentham.	Bakounine.	Elizabeth Cady Stanton.
Büchner.	Huxley.	Haeckel.	Pushkin.	Whitman.	Mill.	Warren.	Susan B. Anthony.
Feuerbach.		Girard	Tchernychewsky.	Ingersoll.	Garabaldi.	Petrofsky.	Matilda Joslyn Gage.
		Lick.			Heinzen.		Helen H. Gardener.
							Annie Besant.

THE PORTRAITS OF THESE ILLUSTRIOUS REFORMERS

in every domain of Human Thought and Progress will adorn the pages of this volume.

The Second Part of this volume will be devoted especially to organized Freethought and the Liberal Press in modern times. The Truth Seeker, Investigator, Ironclad Age, Secular Thought, Freethinkers' Magazine, Independent Pulpit, Lucifer, the Freethinker, Agnostic Journal, etc.

It will give a history of the

GREAT INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

at Chicago, the Freethought Federation of America, the American Secular Union, the various state and local organizations, the Canadian Secular Union, the British Secular Union, and other Liberal associations throughout the world.

It will contain the portraits of those who, up to the present time, have been identified with Freethought work—editors, lecturers, officers of societies, and those who, as representative men, have won distinction in other fields of effort. There will be the portraits of

Horace Seaver,	George E. Macdonald,	Capt. R. C. Adams,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Sr.,	Susan H. Wixon,
J. P. Mendum,	E. M. Macdonald,	John R. Charlesworth,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.,	Mrs. Charles Watts,
D. M. Bennett,	L. K. Washburn,	Samuel P. Putnam,	Prof. J. H. Cook,	Mrs. Robert C. Adams,
Parker Pillsbury,	Ernest Mendum,	John E. Remsburg,	E. H. Heywood,	Mrs. M. A. Freeman,
Elizur Wright,	Charles Watts,	Franklin Steiner,	Otto Wettstein,	Katie Kehm Smith,
T. C. Leland,	G. W. Foote,	J. D. Shaw,	Stephen Pearl Andrews,	Lucy N. Colman,
T. B. Wakeman,	Saladin,	E. A. Stevens,	James Parton,	Lillian Leland,
Judge C. B. Waite,	J. R. Monroe,	H. L. Green,	Abner Kneeland,	Amy Post.

and other men and women who have contributed to the advancement of Freethought and whose names should be remembered throughout the Liberal ranks. There will also be about

ONE HUNDRED BIOGRAPHIES,

and in these will be given a picture of Freethought progress which will be most interesting and valuable, for it is in individuals that we find the best interpretations of the age.

The Price of This Superb Book is $5.00,

and not for the same amount of money can there be found such an array of facts, such a survey of history, and such a galaxy of Freethought.

Mr. Putnam is now devoting his whole time to this work and it will be published at the earliest possible moment.

The name of every Subscriber who sends five dollars before the work is on the press will be enrolled in this book. DON'T FAIL TO SUBSCRIBE AT ONCE.

This book will contain

Over Six Hundred Pages of Printed Matter and Over One Hundred Portraits.

It will be elegantly bound. It will be a book for the home and the fireside. It will be a book to give to your friends when they ask, What is Freethought—what has it done and what is it doing in the world?

This is the most universal presentation of Freethought ever given to the public, and no Freethinker can afford to be without it. It is a library in itself.

HOW TO GET

FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT

FREE

SPECIAL OFFER.

We have made arrangements with Mr. Putnam whereby we are enabled to make our friends a most generous offer.

We need more subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and every Freethinker needs "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." Not all are able to pay $5 for it, but everyone can do a little work to obtain a copy — congenial work, that will do great good all around. This is the offer:

Send us Four New Yearly Subscribers at regular rates ($12 in all), and we will send the Getter-up of the Club a copy of "FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT," FREE OF CHARGES.

And further, to aid our friends in getting this book for themselves, we will offer

To the New Subscribers as a Premium,

post free, a copy in boards of

Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated

By WATSON HESTON,

THE GREATEST BOOK OF ITS KIND EVER CONCEIVED.

Or, if preferred, a copy cloth-bound of

W. S. BELL'S

Handbook of Freethought.

With these Splendid Works as premiums there ought to be no difficulty in getting hundreds of clubs of subscribers.

Remember, to the Getter-up of The Club, FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT, free.

To each New Subscriber in the club, a premium of a Dollar Book—either "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought," in Cloth—all free by post or express.

This really brings the price of the paper down to $2 to each new subscriber, as they get THE TRUTH SEEKER one year and a dollar book for $3.

A Club of Four New Subscribers and $12 ($3 only from each) does this.

We want to extend our circulation, and we want to help our friends to help us.

It ought not to be difficult to get four New Subscribers in any town in the country, especially with these Splendid Premiums to assist.

Those who get up these Clubs will receive their copies of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" as soon as the book is issued.

Those who send a Club and Four New Subscribers and $12 before the book is printed, will have their names enrolled in its shining pages.

SOME HANDSOME PREMIUMS.

To induce new subscriptions and prompt renewals on the part of our friends we make the following handsome premium offers:

For $6.50 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and S. P. Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" ($5). By taking advantage of this or our Free offer of the book (see opposit page) there is no reason why every Freethinker in the country should not possess this splendid work.

For $5 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and "Paine's Great Works Complete" ($3). This edition of Paine's works contains a picture of Paine, of the statue proposed to be erected in Chicago, and of his monument in New Rochelle.

For $5 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers" ($3). By D. M. Bennett.

For $4.50 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and James B. Alexander's Dynamic Theory ($2.75). This is a splendid offer, for every one wants this book. It has over a thousand large pages and more than four hundred illustrations. It is a digest of Science, and every one who studies it cannot help but be well-informed in all scientific matters.

For $4.50 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and "The Freethinker's Pictorial Text-Book" in cloth ($2.50).

For $4 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and "The Freethinker's Pictorial Text-Book" in boards ($2).

For $4 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and a copy of "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," in cloth covers ($1.50).

For $3.50 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," in board covers ($1).

This is a splendid opportunity to obtain books which every Liberal desires to hav, at an exceedingly low price. Old and new subscribers can avail themselvs of it, and we shall be glad if our present readers will call the attention of their friends to the values offered.

This Calls for Watching and Work.

A dispatch from Washington, D. C., dated Jan. 29th, states that Congressman Morse, of Massachusetts, one of the men who, in Congress, was most influential in securing the adoption of the Sunday closing provision in the World's Fair appropriation bill, has given notice that he will soon urge his God-in-the-Constitution resolution, now in the hands of the House judiciary committee. This resolution calls for an amendment to the Constitution. In an interview Mr. Morse said that it was so framed as to be acceptable to all divisions of the church—Jewish, Catholic, and Protestant. He thinks that if adopted by Congress, there will be no trouble in securing the ratification of the amendment by the legislatures of three-fourths of the states. Such ratification he characterizes as a "formality," and adds that it "would be quickly complied with, as the Christian element in the various states has a controling influence." Evidently he thinks that the Christian churches are ripe for a union of church and state. We are told by him that "the present movement was inaugurated by influential gentlemen, principally of Baltimore." Furthermore, he thinks that the Jews will not object to the clause relating to King Jesus, "as the divinity of Christ is referred to in daily public school exercises and in the opening prayers of the Senate and House." And no doubt he also holds that Freethinkers should not object, and for the same reason. In other words, as we hav submitted to the violation of the Constitution in the interest of the church, we certainly cannot be so unreasonable as to object to its amendment in the same interest.

Another note of warning comes from the Capital. As previously announced, Rev. H. H. George, representing the National Reform Association, is now in Washington. In the last number of the Christian Statesman that has come to hand Mr. George, enumerating various national "reforms" which should be at once pushed in Congress, names the "Christian amendment to the Constitution" as first in the order of importance. There can be little doubt that he was at that time cognizant of the Morse resolution and that his frantic calls for money had especial reference to the propaganda in behalf of the amendment. Earlier in the legislativ season it had seemed probable that the theocrats would first concentrate their energies on the proposed national Sunday laws, or, at least, a law against Sunday mails. But from present indications they intend to press the amendment first, knowing that if they can get that they hav everything else they want, for of course the greater includes the less.

The Freethinkers must act at once. In the present condition of affairs it will never do to be unrepresented at Washington. It is the poorest sort of economy which leaves all the gates open there, all the defenses down. We should hav a permanent bureau in that city. But if this is not yet possible some cool-headed, well-informed, courageous, aggressiv Freethinker should remain on guard during the sessions of Congress. And two or three would be very much better than one. We are of all people the most foolish if we disregard the repeated warnings we hav received and neglect to take every possible precaution in the face of such imminent peril. We all know what the church has done when she has been invested with political power, and what she has done she will do. This is not the hour for talk to Freethinkers, but it is the hour for talk by Freethinkers to the lawmakers in Washington. Are we going to do now what should be done or are we going to wait, as we did in the case of the World's Fair, until after the mischief is accomplished? And do not forget that if we do sleep on in fancied security until the enemy has spiked our last gun of defense—the Constitution—we shall hav no Chicago Local Directory to nullify the enemy's victory. With God once snugly ensconced in the Constitution, we are absolutely at the mercy of a theological organization that has never known mercy and never will while it grasps the scepter.

Freethinkers! How much do you want the church kept out of the Constitution and laws? And shall we not hav some one at once to represent us in Washington?

Another Protestant Treasonable Society.

There is in this country a Protestant organization calling itself the "Junior Order of United American Mechanics." It appears to hav a degree or auxiliary known as the "D. of A.," which means, we believe, the "Daughters of America." It appears that its fifth object is to secure the reading of the Bible in the public schools. A friend has sent us a copy of one of the official organs of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics. In it we find a communication from a very innocent teacher in the common schools. Here are some choice excerpts from her letter:

"Please allow me to say a few words regarding one of the important objects of our order; indeed, to my mind the most important, for on that one depends all the rest. If the 'reading of the holy Bible' is not upheld in our public schools, if the mind only is to be developed and the heart left to take care of itself, one-half of our labor is lost. · · · Is the Bible being read in the public schools? If not, why not? I hav been making inquiries, and find that not more than one-fourth the teachers here in Canton read the Bible in school. I will confess that it is only since I became a member of the Daughters of America that I read the Bible to my school. Most of the teachers open the session with the Lord's prayer. One I know of has each pupil commit a verse and repeat it the next morning, and some hav nothing at all."

From which we learn that, in the opinion of this Daughter of America, the demand for the reading of the Bible in the schools is the most important plank in the platform of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics. Quite likely this is true. At all events it is one which we can enthusiastically antagonize. We do pity "the heart that is left to take care of itself," uncheered by the narrativs of the slaughter of the Amalekites and Midianites, the story of Lot and his daughters, and the ravings of the writer of Revelations. The Junior Order of United American Mechanics has already done some mischief, for it has been the means of getting at least one teacher to disobey the United States Constitution by reading the Bible in her school. Most of the teachers in the Canton schools open with the Lord's prayer and one-fourth read from the Bible. Where are the Freethinkers of Canton?

"Some make the excuse that we hav pupils in our schools whose parents do not believe, some in the Old, some in the New Testament. That may be true; all the more reason that the pupil should know about both. Others will say that Catholics employed in our schools as teachers will not read the Bible. That can easily be remedied. They certainly will not if we do not. But when I was a pupil in school I had a teacher who was a Catholic, and she read the Bible to us every morning."

That is rich! Parents, it seems, hav no right to a voice in the religious training of their children. Did this teacher never hear of religious liberty? Does she not know that she, a teacher employed by the state, has no business to force her religious opinions upon the children of patrons who differ from her? The utterances of this "instructor" force the conviction upon us that no person is qualified for the position of teacher in the public schools who has not passed a rigid examination in civil government. Teachers should be thoroughly familiar with the Constitution, understanding and accepting the principle of total separation of church and state. It makes no difference about their personal beliefs, but those beliefs must not be intruded in the common schools. The Bible-in-the-school question would not be nearly so difficult a problem as it is were it not for these chits of girls who begin to teach before they hav learned to think, and who are completely under the influence of the Sunday-school and church. Almost invariably in the case of a fight over the reading of the Bible in school it comes out that the teacher has insisted upon this unlawful performance against the protests of some of the patrons of the school. Every such teacher should be admonished once, and reasoned with, and then, if the offense is repeated, be peremptorily dismissed. They should be made to keenly realize that the constitutional guarantee which secures to them perfect liberty of worship is equally protectiv of the right to worship in a different way or not to worship of those whose beliefs differ from theirs. They must be brought to sense, what should be the self-evident fact, that parents are the natural guardians of their children, and that, consequently, school teachers hav neither the right nor lawful authority to instill into the minds of children religious notions not acceptable to the parents.

The last paragraph we hav quoted mentions the fact that the Catholic teacher read the Bible—presumably the Protestant version—to her pupils. This is not surprising. Those people who insist upon religious instruction in school will usually take a half-loaf when they cannot get the whole one. Both Catholic and Protestant hate unsectarian instruction, and if they cannot separately get what they want they will combine their forces to seize what they can.

Wanted—New Subscribers.

We solicit the kind attention of our friends to the need which exists of increasing the subscription list of THE TRUTH SEEKER. There are several reasons for this, which our readers will readily see. First, It will do a world of good, by making more Liberals and by interesting those already liberal in the work of Freethought. The church is making great encroachments upon our liberties, and the people need to know about it, in order to defeat its tyranny. And those who read THE TRUTH SEEKER are a hundred times more interested and activ than those who do not. Second, It is a duty we owe to our fellow-men to giv them the light of reason we hav obtained. Liberalism makes for true civilization, and freedom from fear of an angry God makes men happier and better. Every Liberal should do all he can to lift up his neighbors from the darkness of superstition to the glorious plain of mental liberty. And, as Mr. Wakeman says, referring to the resolution regarding the Liberal papers passed at the late International Congress: "They are the very life of the cause of intellectual and practical emancipation of the people. As such they are to be built up and sustained by constant care, payment, encouragement, and solicitation for subscribers for them." Third, An increase in the list will relieve the readers from the occasional "duns" we are compelled to send out in order to get money with which to pay bills. If we can obtain two or three thousand new subscribers, the increased revenue will make the business work of the paper easier, and we can continue to improve the paper without fear of financial embarrassments.

To reward those who will do a little for us in this matter we hav arranged to take a large number of Mr. Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," and to every one who sends us four new yearly subscribers at the regular rates of $3 ($12 in all), we shall send a copy of that magnificent work free. Those who send the club before the book is on the press will be enrolled among the original subscribers and patrons in the book.

And to make it easy to get these four new subscribers we will offer them as a premium either of two spendid works—The "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought" in cloth binding. Our readers know the value of these books, and that about every Liberal in the country would like a copy of one or the other. Either one of these, as may be chosen, will be given to the new subscribers obtained in these clubs of four, and a copy of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" to the one who gets up the club and sends the money and names.

We cannot afford to make this premium to single subscribers, but to enable old subscribers and single new subscribers to obtain these and other desirable works at a great reduction, we hav made a list of premiums in connection with subscriptions to the paper, to be found in the first column of the first editorial page of THE TRUTH SEEKER. We are willing to do our part toward making the obtaining of good Liberal works easy and cheap, and hope our readers will take advantage of the terms offered.

Once more we ask that a favorable eye be turned in our direction, and a helpful hand extended. As the resolutions of the International Congress expressed it, Boom the Liberal papers and you boom the Liberal cause.

"Deposit your treasure in the bank of heaven. It will be there when you need it."—Pious Paragrapher.

Maybe, but will the depositor be there?

"The sweetest words in the English language are Mother, Home, and Heaven."—A Christian.

It is moved that the resolution be amended by substituting Babe for "Heaven" in the last line.

San Francisco Public Opinion says that a man who will vote against his brother for the highest office in the gift of the people cannot be an honest man. This is according to the gospel of arrant humbug.

When Christian editors and preachers universally denounce a popular writer as "immoral" or "filthy" it's dollars to cents that they mean "heretical." Examin and see for yourselvs if this is not the fact.

"If God does not mean what he says, will some one please tell us what he does mean?"—Religious Humorist.

Yes, in this case, for instance:

"For I hav seen God face to face, and my life is preserved" (Gen. xxxii, 30).

"No man hath seen God at any time" (John i, 18).

"Let Jesus be a full partner in all your plans, and success is yours."—Christian Paper.

Couldn't think of doing it. He would giv away the seed wheat of the firm to the first tramp who should come along and steal a chicken. Remember the advice he gave about coats and cloaks? Don't you suppose he would practice what he preached?

Prince Krapotkin, in a recent lecture on "Savages and Barbarians," said that it was an erroneous supposition that savages without religion were without morality. He said that even missionaries testified that they loved their children, were kind to the weak and aged, while they kept their marriage laws better than Europeans.

Rev. Dr. Mills, writing in the Nineteenth Century, says that it "pleased the divine power to reveal some of the most important articles of our Catholic creed to Zoroaster, and thence to the Jews and ourselvs.' Ah! so the Catholic religion is largely a second-hand revelation after all, that is, not a revelation? Thank you.

Edward Dunbar, once a noted evangelist and author of the hymn, "There's a Light in the Window for Thee, Brother," died last month in the Coffeyville, Kan., jail, where he had applied for lodgings as a tramp, says a press dispatch. Evidently his parents were bad people, for the Bible declares that "the seed of the righteous shall be delivered."

"'Wouldn't it be fun,' says Joe Howard, 'to hear Moses talk about Colonel Ingersoll!' It would, indeed. Meanwhile Father Lambert has talked for Moses, and there has been a lot of fun."—Catholic Union and Times.

And then B. W. Lacy and Charles Watts talked about Father Lambert, and there was a "heap" more hilarity, but it was not on the priest's side of the fence.

"Sin dug the first grave, and it will dig the last one," says a religious paper. Don't you know that that story about the "sin" of Eve bringing death into the world was a "fake" of an old-time reporter who picked the particulars off a grapevine receiver? Death is a natural event. Conception, birth, growth, maturity, decay, death. That is the regular order. Stop talking nonsense.

That aggressiv Liberal, E. P. Peacock, 143 and 145 South Clinton street, Chicago, is preparing, printing at his own expense, and distributing some splendid leaflets. The work is more than creditable typographically, and the subject matter is excellent. Would that thousands could and would do likewise in city, town, and village. This well-directed local work is of vital importance. Help all you can.

Geo. E. Macdonald's "Thumbscrew and Rack" is ready for delivery. We hav made preparations to fill a multitude of orders for this graphic picture of the loving work of Holy Mother Church. The pamphlet is copiously illustrated and retails for ten cents. Twelve copies for $1. To whoever wants one hundred copies to giv away we will make special rates. Dealers will find this a splendid seller.

The Christian Inquirer objects to the phrase, "a reign of law." It says that what is meant is "reign according to law." Presumably the Inquirer thinks that God is a constitutional monarch whose business it is to administer the organic law of the universe. He is no longer anterior to and above the law, it would appear, even in the estimation of this Christian editor. That is so much gained. Nevertheless we prefer "a reign of law."

In Susquehanna, Pa., Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Larkin celebrated their golden wedding. Among the grandchildren present was little five-year-old Mary Edwards, her grandfather's favorit. While kissing and caressing each other one of her golden hairs got into his throat, causing severe coughing, which ruptured a blood vessel and he died instantly. His wife swooned and is not expected to recover from the shock. Had the merciful and loving God failed to number that fatal hair?

"The word of God is to man what the rails are to the locomotiv," remarks a Christian. That is, something for man to travel on, we suppose you mean. But in a few years the locomotiv, etc., wear out the rails and new ones hav to be put down. Just so your old T rail word of God is worn out and we are putting down the new heavy steel rails of science, and we shall replace them from time to time as necessity requires. Thank you for the illustration, or whatever you call it.

Eve Blantyre Simpson, daughter of Sir James Young Simpson, has been making public some of the experiences of her father in introducing chloroform in 1847. The theologians were greatly scandalized. As God had deliberately condemned women to suffer in parturition, it was considered impious to do anything to nullify that benign decree. One minister declared that chloroform was "a decoy of Satan, apparently offering itself to bless woman, but in the end it will harden secretly, and rob God of the deepest cries which arise in the time of trouble for help." Poor, despoiled God! What a pity it would be if he should be deprived of some notes of his daily serenade of agony!

Comptroller Fitch, of this city, in a letter to Judge Daly thus slyly pokes fun at an official fetich:

"When I took possession of my desk in the comptroller's office I found in use there the Bible which accompanies this letter. The conviction has grown upon me day by day that nothing can be more improper than the possession by the financial officer of the city of stolen property; that to hold possession of a stolen Bible was particularly sinful, and that to administer oaths upon it was the hight of hypocrisy. Partly on account of these conscientious scruples, and partly because I hav been presented with a new Bible of much superior appearance, I beg to return to the possession of the Court of Common Pleas the book which some predecessor of mine probably carried away in his pocket from that court." · · ·

Is it not about time New York banished this idol worship from her court-rooms and offices?

The sore need of cash compels us to ask our friends to renew their subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER at the earliest convenient moment. The "hard times" hav hit us, but we must crawl through them somehow, and we turn with confidence to our readers. The amounts in individual cases are small and easy to pay, but the aggregate is large and we must hav it to meet expenses. We hav made such a combination of books and paper that everyone can get a get a good deal more than his money's worth, and attention is called to these offers. Purchasing books will help us also. But please renew your subscription now. We need it.

Jules Simon asserts that "God and nature hav given us a trinity of good influences—three patrons of youth: The priest, the teacher, and the mother. The priest speaks in the name of God, the teacher in the name of reason, and the mother in the name of nature."

The priest's credentials hav not been verified; he says he represents God; that is all we know about it. If he does, God is desperately short of material for ambassadors, for the priest fights as long as he can against every new thought of the teacher's. Besides, he does all within his power to keep the teacher from speaking in the name of reason the message of reason, and to shut the eyes of the mother to the most important truths of nature. The priest is a marplot; he is behind every movement in favor of ignorance.

"A flapjack to every worshiper cooked while you pray—that is what we are coming to," said an evangelical minister of Boston, as reported by the Herald of that city. The minister was inveighing against the church kitchen, which is likely to soon become a greater power than the pulpit. The Ruggles Street Baptist church of Boston givs monthly sociables, at which each person chips in ten cents for dinner expenses; each Saturday classes of girls are in this church taught to cook; there are over thirteen hundred in the Sunday school alone. "The South Congregationalist in Back Bay, one of the swellest in the city, has the most elegantly appointed kitchen" in the Hub. Verily, Jesus was mistaken; his kingdom is of this world, and his throne is set up in the conventicle kitchen.

At Lyons Plains, Conn., a prominent member of Emanuel church secured four converts by hard work, and prepared them for confirmation, but when he got them into the church on the day set apart for the ceremony he arose and declared that because of their worldliness and wickedness they were not fit to be accepted. The astonished young men left the building, but waited outside, and when their erstwhile instructor and was-to-hav-been sponsor came out they took the liberty to giv him a good whipping, and insisted that he should promis to never again meddle with church matters. And now his pastor declares that he must leave the church instanter and threatens to resign in the event of his failure to obey. Was it Jesus who said something about forgiving seventy and seven times?

"'Wanted—New subscribers.—THE TRUTH SEEKER.'

"This is a long-felt want on the part of this Infidel little sheet. May it continue! Unbelief is the withering winter of the soul. It darkens the sky of hope, robs life of its highest consolations and shrouds the tomb with impenetrable gloom. It is a crime to humanity to spread such a blight."—Catholic Union and Times.

A "crime" against humanity to advocate Freethought? No doubt you think so, and if your church had the power it possessed when the world knew less than it does now it would make intellectual opposition to creedism a legal offense, punishable with torture and death. We remember what your church once did and we do not forget that it is your boast that THE CHURCH NEVER CHANGES! Spare us your jeremiads about the coldness and gloom and misery of unbelief. We know the whole story. We hav no use for the "consolations" of a religion which givs humanity an inquisition here and promises nine-tenths of the race an eternal hell hereafter.

Three Church of England clergymen hav recently joined the Roman Catholic church. Among other recent converts to Rome are F. Anstey, of Punch, Marion Crawford, Miss Braddon, T. Fisher Urwin, Dr. Berdoe, and Dr. Maitland King. So we learn from the Freethinker. With Rome on one side and Freethought on the other Protestantism in England is in danger of becoming bankrupt, but she will hav no trouble in finding two receivers. Since writing these lines we hav read a summary of an article written for the Religious Review of Reviews by the Rev. Compton Reade, rector of Renchester, England, in which he treats at length of "The Agnostic Wave." He has expressed our thought in very similar language. Speaking of the Anglican church and of the Dissenters, he says: "A house divided against itself must fall; and, as Disraeli prophesied, the church's residuary legatee will be Rome; her chief bénéficiaire, Agnosticism."

Dr. Fulton's paper, the Philadelphia Church Standard, has been discussing, editorially and by correspondents, the question, "Why don't men go to church?" One correspondent says that he thinks that if there were heterodox or Liberal churches men would crowd into them. To this Rev. Edwin C. Bolles replies that there are six liberal churches (besides Professor Adler's Society of Ethical Culture) situated between Twentieth street and Harlem in New York. Mr. Bolles has looked several times into some of these latitudinarian churches, and each time found only a handful of men, while in the same district are numerous churches "in which the old-fashioned gospel is preached Sunday after Sunday to crowds of men who outnumber the women." This is encouraging. We should indeed hav hoped that men who had outgrown the desire for the "old-fashioned gospel" would be restless under the droppings of the 'alf-an'-'alf pulpits, in which is preached a religion that is amiable but illogical, a religion which is called by the name of Christianity, but the resemblance of which to genuin Christianity ends right there.

The Voice thinks that Jesus did not make the kind of wine that is used to-day. Neither do we; he did not make any, at least, not miraculously. But that the wine of the Old and New Testament times was of the ordinary, intoxicating brand, there can be no doubt. The context proves it conclusivly. Take the alleged miracle at the marriage feast. "When the ruler of the feast" had tasted the water-wine he called the bridegroom, and said:

"Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine; and when men hav well drunk, then that which is worse, but thou hast kept the good wine until now."

If "wine" means only the unfermented juice of the grape, why this talk about men being "well drunk" before the poorer wine was given them? But if "wine" means an intoxicating drink, then it is easily understood why the poor wine was usually reserved for the later part of the feast, when the drinkers would be too muddled to distinguish between poor wine and good. For proof that the wine of those times was intoxicating, see Gen. ix, 21–25; Gen. xix, 31–36; Lev. x, 9–11; Judges ix, 13; 1 Sam. i, 13, 14; 1 Sam. xxv, 36, 37; Psa. lxxviii, 65; Isa. xlix, 26; Acts ii, 13, and hundreds of other places where Bible writers hav associated wine with drunkenness. Be honest, Mr. Funk.

The Independent, commenting upon the present movement for the reunion of the Northern and Southern divisions of the Presbyterian church, after touching upon the negro bone of contention, says:

"The smell of higher criticism has hardly touched the garments of the Southern church; and its members wish no union with the Northern church until it also is clean of this matter. In the Northern church, on the other hand, there is an extreme conservativ party who are anxious for union with the South to increase their own strength, while there is likewise a liberal party, for a corresponding reason, opposed to it. We hav, then, the curious phenomenon of the men who call themselvs conservativ favoring a broader union, and the men who call themselvs liberal opposing it. As things stand, there is not the slightest likelihood of the liberals being driven out of the Northern church. The only chance of expelling them is by union with the Southern."

We are then to understand that the Presbyterian church of the North will no longer attempt to drive out of her ranks the ministers of advanced ideas. Then it becomes only a question of time when the entire body will leave behind the ancient landmarks. But will the church hav the courage and honesty to repudiate the Presbyterian name, after it has abandoned the Presbyterian creed? We see nothing "curious" in conservativs favoring a "broader union" and radicals opposing it. Such a "phenomenon" is common. Generally, radicals are bright enough to see that "broader union" will bury them under a mass of conservatism where they will be powerless. Such union and uniformity are always dangerous. They almost invariably smother dissent and impede progress. They are the deadliest dangers that threaten us to-day.

This is an incident of one of the series of revival meetings in Brooklyn, as reported in the New York Times:

"'Now,' said Mr. Dixon, his voice unsteady, the tears welling from his eyes, while many children sobbed and the eyes of older people were moist, 'let all who love Jesus and who were converted before they were fifteen years of age arise.' By far the greater portion of the congregation arose. Many of them were young girls and children, but there were many men and women on whose heads the sorrow of many winters had fallen. 'Now, those who were converted between the ages of fifteen and twenty-five,' said Dr. Dixon, and many men arose. 'Now, those who received Christ after they were fifty years of age.' To this invitation not more than a dozen people responded."

Probably not a person whose reasoning faculties are developed above that of the average man has been converted in these Brooklyn meetings. The children are raked in and, as the foregoing shows, the bulk of church membership is made up of those who were vaccinated with the theological virus before they had reached manhood and womanhood, before they were able to reason except as inexperienced children. Their emotions were played upon; fear, unintelligent sympathy, and susceptibility to the influence of the mysterious and the marvelous, dragged and pushed them into the church net. The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor is composed of these children and youth; and they are the "power behind the throne" in securing Sunday laws and other invasiv statutes. They will sign any petition which their pastors and superintendents put into their hands. These "June fillys" and their mates are our rulers in the realm of letters. They emasculate our literature, impoverish our art, and make us the laughing-stock of the educated world. Everything is ordered with reference to their immature minds. Only in religion are they deemed competent to choose for themselvs, and there presumably because religion is child's play, anyway.

The Truth Seeker Company has just printed a new descriptiv catalog of books published and sold at 28 Lafayette Place, New York. It will be sent free on application.

Communications.

The Puck Planet.

How it happened that the dominie and I got to talking has no relevancy to the subject; the fact is that we were talking, and about the various needs of our municipality.

He and I thoroughly agreed that a supply of pure water was greatly to be desired; we were a unit on the subject of the introduction of electric light, and quite unanimous that a system of sewerage was essential to the health of the township.

"Another thing," said he, "we ought to hav a public library."

I assented, of course.

"A library," he continued, "that should be a credit to the place."

"Certainly."

"From which all forms of so-called literature calculated to corrupt the mind of youths should be absolutely excluded."

"Of course."

Then, beguiled perhaps by my cordial acquiescence in these most admirable propositions, the excellent clergyman came down from principle, and began to tell seriatim just what sort of works he referred to —Huxley, Darwin, Herbert Spencer, and Ingersoll —above all, Ingersoll.

I had gathered from my friend's judicious remarks as to our physical needs that he would be equally judicious as to our mental ones. I now perceived, much to my chagrin, for I hate to be foiled in a judgment of character, that I had gathered erroneously.

And I perceived also by a prescience I hav how useless argument would be in such a case.

"Perhaps it might be well," said I, suggestivly, "if the library could be wholly theological."

That proposition staggered even him. But he did not stay staggered long; from his point of view it was most alluring.

"That, of all things," said he, "would be what I should most delight in—if it could be effected."

"If we could all pull together," said I, "I think it might be. We could make a collection."

"Of standard works?"

"Yes, of all the literature on the subject."

"What a grand idea!"

"It is; all the Bible commentaries."

"Yes."

"All the works of the fathers of the church."

"Yes, yes."

"Evidences of Christianity."

"Yes, indeed."

"Volumes of sermons."

"Of course."

"Works on predestination and free will."

"Certainly."

"And on baptism."

"Yes."

"And communion."

"Yes, all these; in short, all that vast body of learning, critical, doctrinal, and homiletical, which has come down to us from the early days of the church militant."

"And when we hav made our collection," said I, "the next thing will be to erect a big building."

"It ought to be a fine building," said my friend, unctuously; "a fit repository for such priceless treasures."

"Fine or not," I continued, "it would certainly hav to be big."

"True, quite true; the material is abundant."

"It is."

"And the building ought to be proportionately large."

"It should."

"It ought to be fireproof—stone or brick."

"Oh, no; a wooden structure would be much the most suitable."

"It certainly would be cheaper."

"Yes, it would be; and after we get our collection we must avoid as much further expense as possible. Then when the building is completed we must engage a man."

"Oh, of course, for a librarian, you mean?"

"No, not exactly, either a man or a boy; perhaps a stout boy would do—a boy stout enough to carry a lot of shavings."

"Shavings!"

"Yes, and enough kindling to start with, and perhaps a can of kerosene, and enough wit to pile 'em up to the windward of the building, and the first time a brisk breeze was blowing to strike a match and burn up the whole thing—there! that's my idea of the best use to put your theological library."

It took some little time for this idea to percolate through the interstices of the clergyman's faculties till it fetched up, where all ideas ought, in his reason.

Then it would hav surprised you to observe how grieved and shocked he looked; yes, and how puzzled, too. And when he sighed, and asked me to tell him the exact nature of my doubts, and I answered that I hadn't any doubts, he was more grieved and more puzzled than ever. I don't suppose he had ever met a Christian of exactly my sort before. It was like an amateur entomologist with an entirely fresh specimen; he couldn't classify me. A Christian with no doubts was a new bug to him. If it had been a question concerning Noah and his flood, or Elijah the Tishbite and his ravens, or barrels of meal, or bears, or Jonah and his whale, he might have arranged matters somehow. As it was he was staggered.

There was a good deal more said, and I did my best to explain. Alas! the harm was all done. After what I had said explanations were quite futil.

My wife says that last Sabbath he preached on a "personal devil," and it wouldn't at all surprise me to learn that he meant me. I know when we meet casually he bows very frigidly.

This seems very funny for a "professed" Christian. Don't it to you? As I look at the matter, the worse man I was the more he ought to hav stuck to me, to drag me from the evil to come.

If there is such a thing in the universe as a comic world—a Puck planet—I am convinced this earth is it. I can understand how one can hav an opinion, and stick to it stanchly; but, to profess cocksuredness about what isn't cocksure, passeth all my understanding.

There's Dr. Briggs, for instance. Of course I respect him as I do any man who is in live earnest, and yet some of his ideas seem very curious to me. He is a genuin truth seeker, and yet professes to believe in "faith," and "revelation," and "inspiration;" but, when you come to analyze his "views," it is faith with a percentage off, revelation with errors here and there, and inspiration with room for human guesses to piece out a divine scant pattern.

I don't know, of course, how this may strike you, but it seems very comical to me.

Some Random Jottings.

The "torture chamber" was splendid. When we are asked, "How has Christianity achieved its great power?" we can point to these instruments as one means; its distinctivly pagan doctrins another, and the ignorance of mankind still another. The fact that Christianity is great in numbers and wealth can be easily explained. Had it not been granted special privileges it would never hav been what it is. John Stuart Mill well says that "no reasonable person can doubt that Christianity might hav been extirpated in the Roman empire" ("On Liberty," p. 55). Tax its churches, giv it no more money from the state, abolish its monopolized Sabbath, and recognize it no more than you do Buddhism, and we will see how much longer it will prosper.

Though Protestants cannot plead guiltless to the crime of persecution by means of these instruments of torture, nothing can be plainer than that the power which established the Spanish Inquisition is ever working its way into our republic and ever forming the most infamous plots. A case in point occurred lately in Davenport, Ia. Ex-priest Slattery went there to deliver a course of anti-Romanist lectures. The city has an ordinance compelling all traveling lecturers to pay the city a license when an admission fee is charged. Davenport is the residence of Bishop Cosgrove, of the diocese of southern Iowa. The mayor of the town, a man named Volmer, "if it be lawful to call him a man," seems to be a mere jumping-jack in the hands of the Catholic hierarchy. He refused to grant Mr. Slattery a license to lecture, giving as an excuse that his lectures would hav a bad moral effect! The newspapers say that this same Volmer licenses houses of prostitution and permits saloons to run in violation of state laws, yet lectures exposing the villainy of Roman Catholicism would be injurious to morality! A more flagrant infringement of free speech, coupled with the most brazen hypocrisy, is hard to be found. His act of petty tyranny, I am glad to say, was condemned by all fair-minded journals in the state; and it is not probable that the people will permit such a thing again.

The Romish serpent is now trying to entwine itself around Des Moines, the capital of the state. A few weeks ago there was established in that city an institution for the furtherance of superstition called the "Mercy hospital." Their first step was to apply to the city council for a donation, even if the constitution of Iowa does forbid appropriation of public funds for sectarian purposes. The American Protectiv Associations, hearing of the intended robbery, warned every member of the city council to vote for the measure if he wanted his political head cut off at the next election. As a result, the bill received but two votes and they were cast by two Catholic aldermen. At one time the majority of the council were Catholics, and there were two Catholic judges on the bench in Des Moines. Were this so now it would require a hard-fought battle to defend the laws of the state against the tools of Mr. Pecci.

The American Protectiv Association contains some things that I cannot indorse, though it is doing a great work to preserve our institutions against Romish influence. I am told that members must take an oath on the Bible. This I would never do. There is also good reason to believe that in many places it works in the interest of the Protestant churches. I hav been told by members of the organization that preachers hav tried to use the order to place Protestantism in the position that Rome aspires to. Where this is the case, no Freethinker can consistently connect himself with it, whatever it may do to impede the progress of Catholicism. We will not assist to down one church that another may be raised up in its place.

The Des Moines ministers hav been preaching a crusade against gambling. None of them, to my knowledge, took as their text such passages as "Unto every one which hath shall be given, and from him that hath not, even that he hath shall be taken away from him." (Luke xix, 28; Matt. xiii, 12.) The Rev. Dr. Sooy, of the Methodist church is reported to hav said to the Rev. H. O. Breeden that on account of the great vice of gambling, and particularly the "nickel-in-the-slot" machines for winning cigars, his church collections were falling off. Evidently a large portion of the Des Moines gamblers are Methodists, judging from the reverend's assertion.

News and Notes.

Eaton, Ohio, is the first place I strike on this lecture trip. It is fifty-eight miles from Cincinnati, near the Indiana line. Quite a good campaign was inaugurated here. I gave three lectures in the opera house, and the audiences increased every night. There is a fine Liberal element in the community, although it has never been developed in the direction of radical Freethought. There are over half a dozen churches to about two thousand inhabitants. Two revivals were going on when I arrived. One was advertised with a large white banner stretched alongside the court-house. A young girl about fifteen years old conducts the Methodist services. They say that she is quite successful. I shouldn't wonder. She dresses neatly, looks pretty, talks nicely, and presents a very pleasant way for sinners to come to Jesus. The other revival is conducted by a man. He talks like an auctioneer, as if he were knocking down harps of gold. He gets in some good sense occasionally, however, and then again he is somewhat off. He has talks only to women, and then talks only to men. He gave the ladies suggestions as to how to manage husbands. One of the chief methods he said, was in three words, namely, "feed the brutes." He didn't believe in playing cards, especially progressiv eucher. It was not only a sin but a crime, and if he had his way he would send every woman who played progressiv eucher to the penitentiary for thirty days.

I do not know whether I lost any attendants by the attractions of these revivals, but the audiences I had were very attentiv, although I did not hav crowded houses. Many heard for the first time the declaration of Freethought principles; and were quite surprised to find so much in them with which they could agree.

This portion of the country has been quite a camping-grounc for the Universalists, and they hav done much to circulate Liberal ideas. On Sunday morning, January 28th, I attended the Universalist church, and quite enjoyed a sermon delivered by the Rev. C. C. Connor. He is not much hedged in by the old traditions. He is radical and a very interesting and well-equipped speaker. He is evidently a student of the whole universe; and says something new every Sunday from a well-stored mind. His audiences are increasing. He has been at Eaton for only a few months. I had the pleasure of making his acquaintance at the bountiful and hospitable table of H. M. Young, who is one of the Liberal friends of this place.

I had a very enjoyable time the whole of my sojourn; and things prospered so well that it is my purpose, in accordance with the wishes of friends, to visit Eaton again and push the work.

Messrs. F. R. Christman and H. C. Blackford took hold of the matter of the lectures with generous enthusiasm, and opened the way; and I feel under great obligations to them for the cordial welcome which they made for me.

Mr. J. Fleisch came all the way from West Florence, about ten miles off, to attend every lecture; and Mr. Frank Seany, of Boston, Ind., traveled about fifteen miles; and I was pleased to meet with these earnest supporters of our cause, who, with Remsburg in other places, hav floated our Freethought flag.

Among other friends at Eaton are D. E. Stubbs, E. B. Harkrader, Levi Gould, C. B. Cohefair, Mr. and Mrs. John Zeller, Chas. Brooke, M. L. Hold, A. B. Mayor, Judge Gilmore, Martin Early, Chas. P. Thum, David May, and Alf Denny. I must mention Jonas Foster, who is not exactly a Liberal, but is tending that way. He was formerly a Baptist minister, but did not harmonize. I recommended for his reading "Religion a Curse," etc.

Rev. John Blackford, cousin of H. C. Blackford, has been Universalist clergyman here. He is quite Liberal, but it seems that Universalism runs in the family, for about four of that name are prominent in this Liberal Christian pulpit. Mr. Blackford remarked that in getting out of Calvinism into Rationalism we hav to go through his "potato patch." To which Mr. Fleisch replies: "Yes, but we don't stay in that potato patch." We are just as much obliged, however, for the potato patch. May it flourish.

I was quite charmed with Eaton. It is in the midst of a beautiful farming country. It is quiet; no manufactures here, but it has a solid business aspect, and is as good a place for culture, progress, and Freethought as one can strike in many a day.

Sunday afternoon, with good-bye to these live Liberal allies, I sped down to Cincinnati, and found everything in ship-shape order; the banners of THE TRUTH SEEKER flying; a full house and plenty of cheer. The Ohio Liberal Society goes right onward and upward. It has a larger hall than last year for its meetings, and it was crowded, notwithstanding the somewhat drizzly weather. I lectured on "The Glory of Infidelity," and after the lecture there was, as usual, a rattling discussion, and theology and politics of all sorts were pretty thoroughly ventilated, the audience taking it in with zest; but the main drift was in favor of simon-pure Infidelity. Christians giv us the name; we take it and will make it glorious with new truths for the world.

I am glad to see this Liberal society still foremost in the field. Geo. E. Light is now president and Andrew Hogg secretary, and they hav a good body-guard for the advance. I am always encouraged by the many ardent comrades whom I find here. It makes the Secular Pilgrim feel that "this old world is growing brighter." Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Foster, editors of the Cincinnatian, work for industrial freedom along the lines of Freethought. They hav tried the church and found it lacking.

Thus, with the anniversary of Thomas Paine, liberty advances, and hope shines, and golden tomorrows lure us on; for such great spirits hav not toiled in vain. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

What Is Money?

During the past few months there hav been published in THE TRUTH SEEKER several articles upon money—the most important question now before the people—in which, it seems to me, most of the writers were more intent upon airing their particular ideas, liberally impregnated with the Christian spirit of "believe or be damned," than actuated by a desire to instruct and explain.

Our ideas upon the question of money and religion, I insist, are obtained from the same source. A belief in a religion depends almost wholly upon the teaching, practice, influence, and training of the parents, whose instructions during our childhood tend to mold our pliant minds into the same channel of thought and ideas as their own; and in later years, out of respect for them and their teachings, and no doubt a certain veneration for long established usage and time-honored customs, nine times out of ten we are apt to close our ears to any and all suggested changes in what has become so firmly implanted in our being, and for so long been respected, revered, and implicitly bowed down to, that it is almost impossible for us to accept any innovations upon the heritage transmitted from our parents to us, as it has been from parent to child, generation after generation, from the earliest records of time down to the present.

Hav not the advocates of a gold standard in like manner imbibed from the practice and instructions of their parents the idea that money must of necessity contain intrinsic value in itself? Hav not their early teachings so influenced, warped, and biased their minds as to make it almost impossible for them to see or be willing to accept any other than the old venerated and time-honored custom of "hard money," and hard money only, through whose cruel and discriminating operation the laborer of to-day gets barely enough to clothe and feed himself and family, the farmer loses on every bushel of wheat he sells, the planter's cotton goes at a price below the cost of production, and every other branch of industry is in the most pitiable condition, besides the thousands that are starving throughout a country overflowing with food, and other thousands and tens of thousand willing hands seeking vainly for work, while at the same time these hard money advocates seem unable or unwilling to realize the fact that through this cruel, unfair, discriminating system, bankers and others dealing in and handling the money of the nation are meanwhile, through lately devised methods of corruption and fraud, growing rapidly richer, adding yearly to their millions, while the common people are led by them into the snares and pitfalls planned and laid with such infinit care, whereby they are, year after year, robbed of every opportunity to obtain for themselvs an honest division of the fruits of their toil? Such are the conditions resulting almost entirely from an intentional lack of a sufficient circulating medium for the exchange of the products of labor, brought about through the instrumentality and connivance of the money power of the world, regardless of the rights, the wants, or the necessities of the many.

I wonder if these single standard advocates of gold alone, the money of ultimate redemption, hav ever thought to investigate and ascertain what per cent of the value of the indebtedness or obligations existing between the debtor and creditor would be saved to them through the intrinsic value contained in our gold coin should the United States government become hopelessly bankrupt. Would it be over two per cent? I assert that the gold in circulation does not equal five per cent of the total. If so, why in the name of all that is reasonable is not the whole circulation based directly upon the credit of the government? Why be dependent upon five per cent of our money, with its unceasing fluctuations, to regulate the other ninety-five? With so stable a government as ours I can see no necessity for piling ninety-five bricks upon five and those five be the money basis of the country, controlled and manipulated by the money interests; to expand or contract at their pleasure and to their individual profit, while to be a safe and solid structure each brick of the whole one hundred should rest squarely upon the solid foundation of our government's credit, the same as her bonds do and as did the first issue of greenbacks—sixty millions—which led gold in all its flights of advance during the rebellion, and stood one-half of one per cent higher than gold at its highest record, and which issue was the only true greenback ever sent out by the government. All others were but poor, maimed, deformed, and decrepit bastards, denied and repudiated by their own parentage, and why not therefore be discredited, cuffed, kicked, and abused by others as might be expected until they had to beg from hand to hand for the meager recognition they received?

Without a stable government it would no doubt be necessary to exchange one article of value for another, just as the gold advocates insist we shall be compelled by law to barter a piece of gold of a legislated value for another article estimated of an equal value. But the unfairness and inconsistency of their demands is, that where they hav one such piece of gold they hav from twenty to fifty representativs of it, based upon this one, each representativ being the equivalent of the original, and will purchase just as much of the necessaries of life and go just as far in payment of debts, and yet should the government "go to smash" only the original would be of any value whatever. Doesn't it seem like a queer way of doing business in such an enlightened country as we hav or claim to hav?

Money is simply a convenience to go between an article sold and another bought or to be bought, and when issued by a stable government like ours has no more reason for being composed of gold or silver than has a bridge extending from shore to shore of a stream. We are supposed to hav outlived the barbarous ages of barter and evoluted into one of civilization and enlightenment. But hav we? Is not the exchange of a piece of gold for another article of value just as clearly barter now as it was when practiced by the tribes that wandered over the plains of Shinar in the days of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob?

In the matter of money we stand to-day just where our ancestors stood over three thousand years ago. Let us get out of these old ruts. Replace this senseless bartering business with something more in harmony with our advanced and advancing civilization; a money with the stamp of the great United States of upon it, issued direct to the people in volume sufficient for their needs, whose duty or function consists simply in representing the value of an article sold and carrying it over to another, conveying from sale to purchase the value of the article sold.

When stripped of the misrepresentations thrown about it by designing men, and the veil of obscurity enshrouding the minds of the people be dispelled, the "dark unfathomable" subject of money "too deep for the ordinary mind to grasp," resolves itself into a simple token, emblem, or device, bearing the stamp or fiat of the government, imprinted upon gold, silver, paper, or other material issued for the convenience of her people to represent the value of the products of their labor or other values, bridging from value to value, from product to product, through all the money transactions of the nation, extending from the purchase of an empire by the government down to a stick of candy by the merest child within this wide domain, making it in fact as it is in name a land of equality, freedom, and independence for all.

Where's them fellers that's a howlin' that our dollars haint no good?
Pint out one that wouldn't take 'em, wouldn't steal 'em if he could!
If our dollar's made o' leather, if it's made of brass or tin,
An' it satisfies the mortgage, hain't it what we want ter win?

If it bears the Yankee buzzard, an' the mighty U. S. A.,
It's a legal coin o' Freedom, an' shed hev the right o' way.
If our dollars buys us ev'rything the Yankees hev to sell,
Let the dudes an' cockneys git out, an' in furrin countries dwell.

If the English and the Proosians an' the Roosians want our corn,
They will send ther gold ter buy it jest as sure as you are born.
Let us build a wall o' Chiney fer our honest home-made cash;
An we'll bust ther game o' freeze-out, knock ther parties all to smash.

We kin liv without a sea-trip, ther's enough raised on the farm,
An' a leetle Yankee diet, boys, won't do a mite o' harm.
When the other kickin' nations see what home-made dollars dew,
Bless yer heart, they'll come a runnin' an' they'll want ter win 'em too.

All this dratted, pesky panic is a sneakin', holler sham, Raised by them who fer ther country never worked or keer'd a damn.
If Uncle Sam coins money, hain't it by our own decree?
S-u-r-e! an' them's the clinkers thet I laik—they're good enough for me. Geo. M. Vickers, Boston Post.

Denver, Col., Jan. 1, 1894. L.

Intrinsic Value.

Just a little corner, Mr. Editor, to show the fallacy of intrinsic value.

The government takes ten cents' worth of copper and coins one hundred cents out of it, worth $1 in money. It takes twenty cents' worth of nickel, and makes twenty five-cent pieces out of it—cash value $1. It takes fifty-three cents' worth of silver, and converts it into ten dimes, which pass for $1. The dimes are seven per cent. light.

Now, let us put these statements into another form, so that they will be understood and appreciated by all:

Intrinsic value...copper,	10 cts.	Money value.....	$1
" " ...nickel,	20 cts.	" "	$1
" " ...silver,	53 cts.	" "	$1
Total intrinsic value.....	83 cts.	Total money value....	$3

Difference between intrinsic value and money value, $2.17. Now, the hard-moneyites claim that all money which has not intrinsic value must be redeemed. But where on earth or in heaven or that other place can they go to get this difference ($2.17) between the bullion value and the money value redeemed. Everyone must know that this difference has been blown into the bullion value by act of Congress. Yet no man has ever lost one cent by the arrangement. That it is a very awkward kind of money all must admit, but it has caused a loss to no one.

Now, if we can use a very awkward metallic money which has more than two-thirds of the value legislated into it, may we not use a more convenient material for money with the entire value legislated into it? There can be no doubt that Congress has the constitutional right to coin money. And as the Constitution does not prescribe the kind of material to be used on which to impress the money stamp of the government, must not the choice of material rest with Congress?

Why should the governmant ignore an economic principle by using a costly material (gold and silver) for money, when a cheaper material (paper) will answer a far better purpose?

Some claim that paper money would not be good unless there is gold and silver money to redeem it. But no one ever thought of getting the difference ($2.17) between the bullion value and the money value redeemed, as shown above.

When a man pays a debt with a paper dollar, is it not redeemed? When he buys what he wants with it or pays his taxes with it, is it not redeemed? What more can he do with a gold dollar? Moreover, the gold dollar will cost him twice as much and serve no better purpose. This money would be issued on the faith and credit of the nation, the same basis upon which the bonds rest, and they are at a premium of twenty-five per cent. There is talk of issuing bonds at low interest—three per cent—to pay soldiers' pensions. Why not issue full legal tender paper money without interest? I will guarantee the soldiers will take it. If interest-bearing bonds are issued, they will drift into the hands of a few rich men just as sure as water will find the ocean.

Why not pay the president and Congressmen and all the officers under the government with this kind of money? Pay it out for building forts and war vessels, and for all army and navy supplies. It is claimed that this money could not be used to pay for our foreign purchases and to settle our balances abroad. I am inclined to think that if the course which I hav mapped out should be pursued, our mines would furnish gold and silver enough to do all our business abroad, and at the same time insure "tranquillity at home."

Then, instead of issuing money at one per cent to three or four thousand bankers, for the use of which the people are made to pay ten to fifteen per cent, issue it direct to the people at say two per cent, secured by long-time mortgages on real estate at half value.

Could money rest on a safer foundation, or could the people be more faithfully or economically served? Who but a money loaner or a mortgage holder, or those who wish to reduce the wealth producers of the country to a system of wage slavery, could object to such a money system?

Observations.

The New York Sun, in animadverting upon the action of the House of Representativs in passing the Wilson tariff bill, inquires:

What happens to a political party in the United States which makes definit pledges and thus secures offices, and then evades, ignores, or repudiates its promises?

Presumably the promises here referred to are those contained in the platform of the dominant party; but has the Sun at any time believed that the mass of politicians make promises with the intention of keeping them? If their oath to support the Constitution is so disregarded by them as to admit of their voting to close the world's Fair on Sunday, or of passing a Comstock law, what binding force can a set of resolutions adopted at a political convention be expected to hav on their actions? The answer of the railroad conductor to the passenger who desired to ride outside is still to the point: "Platforms are to get in on, not to stand on." As for last year's promises, everybody but the Sun has forgotten them. They are out of style at present; but the great political emporium will open up the next presidential season with a fresh and still more attractiv variety. The Sun should bear in mind that no party is in the House of Representativs. The occupants of that expensiv public edifice are gentlemen who used the parties as means to procure themselvs a soft snap. We should always, when possible, hav an accurate statement of the facts before proceeding to animadvert.

The philanthropic George William Childs, proprietor of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, is dead, and the people mourn their loss in sashcloth and axes. He made a good deal of money by speculating in other men's brains; and after having surrounded himself with all that wealth could command, he shook his superflux where it would jingle loudest in the ears of the world. In this way he advertised himself widely, and all his charities could be defended as investments. When Colonel Ingersoll visited Philadelphia a few years ago to deliver an address, Mr. Childs took the trouble to order that no mention of the fact or report of the lecture should appear in the Ledger. That order and the illustrated window in Westminster Abbey, when contrasted with his reputed liberality of coin, indicate that an otherwise successful creator erred in not locating Mr. Childs's brain nearer his pocket.

In old pagan times persons who were on the eve of embarking in any enterprise had a habit of consulting some oracle—the stars or the entrails of a fowl—in order to find out what luck they might expect. The system is not yet extinct, and there are people who, when in trouble or about to do anything unusual, think that by opening the Bible at random they will strike some thought applicable to their case. I heard the other day of a believer who had been cured of that superstition. He was going to sail for a foreign port, and just before starting consulted his oracle, the Bible. Shutting his eyes he opened the book. Then he opened his eyes and they fell upon these words of Isaiah: "Hell from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming."

Lately a whole grist of Catholics, including bishops and monsignors, gathered in an uptown church to celebrate the feast of St. Agnes. The monsignor was from Rome, and brought along with him a relic of the saint, no more nor less than a piece of her backbone. This relic was placed on view at the altar, and the male worshipers were asked to come forward and kiss it, which, having wiped their mouths, they proceeded to do. The bone, according to church history, upon which subject I confess to being a trifle short, dates from the year 303, when Agnes suffered martyrdom. She was a virgin, and such Catholic histories as I hav at hand fail to mention the circumstances of her death, or to allude to her in any way, and the inference is that having no other recommendation she was not prominent in the community. It is a strange fact that no one besides the priests knows anything about these virgin martyrs, and it is equally strange that priests should know enough about them to testify to their impregnable chastity. One incident in this sort of history that I recall deserves a place in the Bible. Somewhere in the Roman republic were seven Christian virgins who fell into the hands of the authorities and were condemned to die. In those days it was considered bad form to put virgins to death, and the young men were notified that these seven awaited them, presumably as wives. The youth of the city rushed forward, only to discover that the youngest of the girls was turned seventy; and as a consequence the females were assigned to the executioner. This man had the temerity to make a bold proposition to one of them, but was laid out by the Angel of Chastity, who appeared on the scene just in time to giv the villain what he needed. Possibly St. Agnes was one of this job lot, for after their death their bodies were miraculously preserved and their bones became relics. The pagans exposed these ladies without clothes to the gaze of the multitude, but the Catholics take them stripped to the bone and parade their remains to be slobbered over and make a Romish holy day.

A clipping from a newspaper has been handed me with the remark that it satisfactorily disposes of the silver and gold standard fallacy—satisfactorily, of course, to those who hav never entertained that "fallacy" long enough to get acquainted with it, and who, on that particular subject, agree with the writer's main proposition without regard to his argument. The author of the clipping calls himself "Rinctum."

In reading the history of the times before the abolition of negro slavery was accomplished, I hav observed that the people who favored such abolition were harassed with the query whether they would like to hav their daughters "marry a nigger." And in the year of grace 1894 there are persons still living who ask if the women who want to vote are prepared to do military duty. As for myself, I hav never been able to regard these queries as otherwise than irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial; but I should imagin that Rinctum would be pounded to a standstill by them; for it appears that the chestnutty and moldy inquiry why all other products—grapes, for example—should not be regarded as coin commodities along with silver has got home on his intellects and fazed him. Like the pro-slavery and anti-suffrage people, he believes in a single standard; and as by them all civil rights were vested in the white male, so by him all the qualities of money are vested in the yellow metal. I do not doubt that the opponents of the equality of black men and white men urged that owing to the more rapid production or reproduction of one or the other, a parity could not be maintained. Perhaps they argued that way, and probably after devoting so much of their talent to calamity-howling they had not time to read in the Declaration that men were regarded theoretically as equals by the former residents of this settlement. The gold men are similarly afflicted; under their inflamed eyes the Constitution turns yellow, and they fail to recognize the equality of gold and silver in that instrument.

Having disposed of the fallacy above discussed, Rinctum goes after the rag-money men thus:

We are often reminded by fiatists that "a yard-stick need not be made of gold nor hav any particular value." But it must hav length because it measures length. A pound weight may hav any size, shape, value, or color, but its essential quality is weight, because it must measure weight.

He proceeds to giv other examples of the same principle, and concludes that as a yard-stick must hav length in order to measure length, a gallon measure capacity to measure capacity, and a scale-weight weight to measure weight, therefore a standard of value must hav value in order to measure value. It will not take the fiatists long to discern that this is rather more than fallacy; they will observe that it is pure sophistry, and they will send Rinctum to sea in the same boat with those teleological chumps who hold that since all that exists must hav been created, and since that which is created must hav a creator, therefore there is a creator of the earth. It is a "short" argument, and is abandoned by its inventors when somebody suggests that if followed to its logical conclusion it provides Jehovah with a line of ancestors reaching back a greater length of time than Rinctum could measure if he had a time-stick composed of long eras. The fiatists will show Rinctum that value is not an inherent property of gold as gravitation is of a pound scale-weight—that as a matter of fact value is not a natural property at all, and should not be confounded with properties physical, chemical, or organoleptic. They will ask him how he knows that gold has value, or how much. What was the original measure of value, having value of its own, by which the value of gold was measured? And who measured that original value, and the value back of that, and so on? Verily, it is the creator argument over again. When the fiatists hav had all the fun they want with Rinctum, they will point out that if he would take a bull by the horns he must begin operations at the right end of the bull. He ought to know, they will say, that gold is chiefly valuable because it is money, and not money because it is more valuable than any other metal. The gold standard advocates are the adherents of Paley and his doctrin of design, while the silver men and the fiatists recognize the results of adaptation and the value of natural and artificial selection.

The quality of value differs totally from the properties of matter, which are inherent; for value is a creation of men and communities, while length, weight, and so forth plainly are not. Gold in the pocket of a man on the trail or up in a balloon has no value whatever, but his yardstick still retains its property of length, and his can its capacity; and the weight seems rather to increase in gravity the farther he lugs it. Value, then, is a matter of circumstance, while the properties mentioned are inexpugnable and independent of surroundings. Having set a value on its possessions the community sets a value on a piece of metal as a unit of measurement, as one is the unit of numbers, and stamps it officially "one dollar." It is the stamp that makes it a dollar, and the fiatists will maintain against all the Rinctums in the world that a similar stamp on a piece of paper or silver would hav the same result.

TO VARIOUS PERSONS.

C. H. PACKARD, Editor of the Eye, Snohomish, Wash.—A man called on me to-day to obtain information about the great northwest. He was looking for a lodge in some vast wilderness; wanted to get a job as agent at a railroad tank station out in the woods, thirty or forty miles from human habitation and the madding crowd's ignoble strife. Said he desired the job to be permanent, so he could lose himself for life. His plan is to botanize during the pleasant weather and read when it rains. I told him that in Washington state he would in that way get more reading than botanical specimens, and that while trying to unearth a root of the endogenous Symplocarpus fœtidus, as you Snohomish people call the skunk cabbage, a true specimen of the cougar or catamount might light on his back; but that did not dishearten him. He sticks to his determination, and only asks one little spot to plant the word forgetmenot. Can you help him? How would Everett suit him? Or would you advise him to change his plan, start a paper in Snohomish, and sit in the office until somebody comes in to subscribe?

WINKY-WINKY, My Dear Control—Yes, I saw the communication in the Pacific Coast Spiritualist, stating that W. F. Jamieson, who is now a Materialist, was formerly a medium of such power that he could summon spirits to lift him from the floor to the top of a table, chair and all, which manifestation the correspondent claims to hav beheld. What hav I to say to the question, "Was Jamieson a fraud then or is he one now?" I am not saying anything until I find out whether or not the correspondent has told the truth.

"L.," Denver, Col.—I hav read your article on money, and pardoned you, because I am paid for that sort of work, and sentences with two hundred and twenty-five words do not tire me, though they are trying to the wind of the copy-holder. It is not of them I complain; but why did you mutilate

Vickers's poem, "Uncle Josh on Silver," by erasing the word silver wherever it occurred? Mr. Vickers would be justified in getting angry if he saw his poem limping along minus the feet you amputated. Besides, you ought to leave the silver-men their literature, even if you must fatally stab their arguments.

INQUIRER.—Mr. John A. Lant is at Tarrytown, where he publishes the American Moslem, the organ of Emil L. Nabokoff's system of Mohammedanism. I do not know that Mr. Lant regards this as carrying out Lewis Masquerier's ideas of Land Reform, and am not aware that the property willed him by Mr. Masquerier is invested in this business. Mr. Masquerier was not a Moslem.

W. H. BURR, Washington, D. C.—Since you say that the only military service you ever performed was blowing a fife for an ununiformed militia company during your minority, I will consent to withdraw the title of colonel. I used to disturb the atmosphere with a fife myself, but was never called colonel. Out West we are much more fastidious about titles. I was captain of a uniformed camp there, and Major Smythe, who edited and set up the Whoop in Haller, came near shooting the editor of a loathsome contemporary for ignorantly saying I was the only journalist in the county with a military prefix. The camp I was captain of passed resolutions recognizing my gallant conduct in firing away my ramrod last Decoration Day.

Freethought Progress.

Viktor E. Lennstrand has recovered from his illness, and anew assumed the activ leadership of the Swedish Freethinkers. His lecture, "The Three Hundred Years' Jubilee at Upsala," has been translated into Norwegian and copies hav been sown broadcast over Christiana.

Dr. Titus Vöelkel was released from prison Nov. 17, 1893. His address is at present, Berlin, N. Chorinerstrasse 16, II. ∴ Freethought is reviving in Stuttgart, Germany. A new society has been formed to take the place of that formed by Albert Dulh, but which ceased by the death of its founder. ∴ Der Freidenker, Milwaukee, has issued a large, neatly printed calendar for the 1894. The center of the calendar is devoted to a New Years' poem, "Harrt aus! Gebt nacht!" by L. N. Zündt, and as an advertisement the calendar does credit to our enterprising friend, C. Hermann Boppe, editor. ∴ When the German soldiers are "nice little boys," who attend to their business as automatic machines, greased with sufficient piety, they are given the chance of procuring Bibles, hymn-books, and New Testaments at reduced rates. The pious Reichsbote feels terribly bad because last year the sale of these books even at "salvation" price fell 30,833 copies below the year 1892. It is too bad.

In perusing Las Dominicales one gets an idea of the great popularity of the late Ramon Chiés. Three months hav passed since his death, and yet the great paper of which he was editor continues to devote a page every week to letters and resolutions lamenting his death. Surely Ramon Chiés has not lived in vain. ∴ The Spanish Freethinker, ex-President Zorilla, has issued a manifesto calling upon the Spanish Republicans to be ready for a revolution. Certainly the present conditions in Spain are unbearable, owing to the attitude of the church and her servant, the monarchy. The recent Anarchist outrages hav given these two friends an excuse to proclaim martial law in Spain, to establish a strict censorship of the press (the church organs alone can publish what nonsense they like), and imprison prominent Republican Freethinkers, claiming that they are Anarchists. ∴ We are the recipient of El Progreso, New York. The New Year's number of this excellent Spanish Freethought journal, edited by Senor Ramon Verea, proves that the journal is up to the times. Among the interesting contents we note a translation of Chapter XIII of "Woman: Her Glory, Her Shame, and Her God," by Saladin; beginning of "The Novels of the Holy Ghost." an essay in "highest" (Freethought) criticism. We can but commend El Progreso to the attention of our Spanish-American friends.

Catholic France under Napoleon III. had in 1865 53,000 public schools with 2,601,169 pupils. The irreligious republic of France had in 1891 79,000 public schools with 5,500,000 pupils. In 1865 the state gave to those schools 10,000,000 francs; in 1891, 100,000,000 francs. Who is the friend of education? ∴ According to statistics of the church, there are 38,000,000 Roman Catholics in France, but of these fully 30,000,000 fail to partake of the sacrament at Easter, and hence, according to the regulations of the church, are to be regarded as excommunicated. Yet who does not hear France called a Catholic country? ∴ In 1881 the Freethinkers of France were represented by 135 members in the House of Deputies; in 1885 the number had increased to 150, while in the last house there were 180 Freethinkers, and in the present house 220 to 240. How many Freethinkers are there in our House of Representativs? ∴ The Freethinkers of the eleventh arondissement, Paris, were treated to a debate between M. Scharre, ex-president of the French Freethought Federation, and the priest Garnier. A debate of this kind is a decided novelty in France, where the priests are even more shy of a representativ Freethinker than they are here in the United States. The debate, of course, was a decided victory for our cause, and the remarks of M. Scharre were vigorously apolauded by the large assemblage who filled the Hall of Commerce. ∴ At the National Congress held by the French Freethinkers, Oct. 29, 1893, in Paris, 128 societies were represented. M. Ferdinand Bonnange, mayor of Palaiseau, presented to the Congress some very interesting statistics pertaining to the Roman Catholic church in France, showing that it is not alone in the United States that the church gobbles up whatever she can lay her hands on. There exist at present in France 35,000 religious establishments with 225,000 inmates, and if the increase of their real estate continues at the present ratio the Roman Catholic church will, in the year 1900, own one-fifth of the real estate of France. The Congress, besides insisting upon the rigid separation of church and state, the equality of the sexes, and the enforcement of the school laws, gave President Carnot an overhauling because he had in his official capacitv attended a baptismal ceremony. ∴ The French Freethought Federation is to hav a building of its own in Paris, a site for the building having been given by the Republican Alliance of Seine-et-Oise. ∴ That lively French-Canadian journal, the Canada Revue, is doing splendid work among the French-Canadians. Its short, pointed articles are excellent, and we will in a future number of THE TRUTH SEEKER translate a few of the articles, which are interesting for more than one reason, among them "Une Province Morte" (A Dead Province, Quebec), which hast appeared in the Mail. ∴ The French Senate, by a vote of 132 to 84, agreed to giv votes to women engaged in business at elections for tribunals of commerce.

Leslie Stephen has been engaged to write the monograph on John Stuart Mill for the "Dictionary of National Biography." ∴ Religious liberty has just been officially recognized in England by an Admiralty order, which decrees that "All Roman Catholics, Wesleyans, Presbyterians, and others, having objections to the church service, are at libertv to absent themselvs from the same." "And others" would seem to be sufficiently broad to include Freethinkers. Anywav, it is a step in advance. ∴ The branches of the National Secular Society of England are sending in very encouraging reports at the beginning of the year. ∴ G. W. Foote, president of the National Secular Society, receives no remuneration for his services, and even does not charge the society for the stationery and postage used in conducting its large correspondence. ∴ Our readers will recollect that we mentioned the fact some weeks since that Mr. Foote was nearly mobbed by the riotous Christians of Ryhope when he lectured there. But the visit was not in vain. The local newsdealer refused to handle the Freethinker any longer, but a friend of the paper took hold of the work of distribution, and now the sale has increased from three to fourteen copies per week. It is to be noted that the methods of circulation of Freethought papers in England and the United States differ widely. Here all but an insignificant number of copies go through the mails to yearly subscribers, while in England they are handled by the newsdealers almost exclusivly, we should judge. Here the yearly subscription rate is prominently displayed in the paper; there, the price of the single copv. ∴ Lord Coleridge, chief justice of England, who was so fair in the trial of G. W. Foote for "blasphemy," has formally withdrawn from the "Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge," because this society has ranged itself "in the number of those favoring the practice of vivisection and advocating its horrors." It should be said that this is not the first Christian society which has sought to promote "Christian knowlege" by advocating or engaging in the work of torture. It is a healthy sign, and one indicating the development of Freethought, that prominent Christians withdraw from such societies. ∴ The cause of higher education for women in Germany has taken another step forward. At the gymnasium at Weimar, Greek, Latin, and mathematics will be taught. ∴ Among those added by 1893 to Freethought's roll of distinguished dead should be named John Addington Symonds, John Tyndall, Ramon Chiés, Victor Schoelcher, Hippolyte Taine, and Benjamin Jowett. ∴ The Christian Statesman sadlv records the fact that Phipp's Conservatory in Schenley Park, in "Sabbath-loving Pittsburg," was thrown open to the public on January 7th, and four thousand visitors "desecrated" the holy day. ∴ The Congregationalist avers that the custom of giving quiet dinner parties on Sunday evening is on the increase in the cities. ∴ A bill for the taxation of church property has been introduced in the Ohio legislature.

New Publications.

The many admirers of Mr. Otto Wettstein's writings, which are of the unsophisticated materialistic variety, will be glad to learn that his Congress address on the "Giant Delusion" is now obtainable as a pamphlet for 10 cents.

The address delivered by Miss Susan H. Wixon at the International Freethought Congress is now printed in pamphlet form, the title being "Woman: Four Centuries of Progress." None of the speeches at the Congress hav received as much praise as this one, and none was more worthy of the eulogiums bestowed. Single copies 10 cents.

A new edition of A. Jacobson's "Bible Inquirer" has just been issued from the press of the Truth Seeker Company, which has secured both the plates and the copyright of the work. As a concordance or index to the absurdities of holy writ, the "Bible Inquirer" is not equaled by any other book of its size. It has enjoyed a large sale, which it still maintains. The price is 25 cents.

One of the numbers of "The Truth Seeker Library" issued this month is entitled "Thumbscrew and Rack." It embodies the "Historic Means of Grace" published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of January 6th, with additional matter, and several new illustrations, including the famous "chastity belt," drawn expressly for this work. As a handsome pamphlet, with cover, "Thumbscrew and Rack" will be sold at ten cents per copy. Being the only work of the kind in existence, it should hav a large circulation. Geo. E. Macdonald wrote it.

"Self-Contradictions of the Bible," the ninth edition of which is hereby announced, will hereafter bear the imprint of the Truth Seeker Company, to whom all orders for said work must now be addressed. We hav purchased the plates from the author and original publisher, Col. W. H. Burr, and added "Self-Contradictions" to the Truth Seeker Library. The work is not an argumentativ or persuasiv one—it is simply convincing, as it gives a hundred and fifty instances where the Bible contradicts itself, and he who runs may read. Price 15 cents.

Lectures and Meetings.

J. E. REMSBURG will lecture in Elmira, N. Y., Saturday evening, Feb. 24th. Elmira last heard a Freethought lecture some twelve years ago.

THE Pittsburg Secular Society meets in Curry University Hall, Sixth street, near Penn avenue, every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

W. F. JAMIESON desires to make lecture engagements in Nevada, Utah, and Colorado, along the lines of railroad East. Address W. F. Jamieson, Elsinore, Cal.

THE First Secular Church of Portland, Ore., meets in Central Labor Council Hall, 170½ Second street near Yamhill, every Sunday at 7.30 P. M. Katie Kehm Smith, lecturer. Sunday-school in same place at 12:30 P.M.

A Paine Celebration.

The members of the Brooklyn Philosophical Association honored themselvs last Sunday by eulogizing Thomas Paine. Mr. Rowley spoke on his religious work, and Mr. T. B. Wakeman on his political career. The former showed that the traditional and contemptible falsehoods, which the Christian church made up, when they could not answer his "Age of Reason," were without foundation. Because he worshiped only one God, and not three; because he did not place any faith in miracles and prophecies; because he was true to his manhood, his orthodox opponents could only vilify him. Because he was a plain and honest man; because he could not bear falsehood, and put up with the fads, superstitions, and tyrannies of his time, he was ostracized and persecuted. Because he was a friend of humanity, he was hated by the despots. Mr. Wakeman told how stormy had been Paine's political career; how, through the treachery of those who persuaded him they were his friends and would carry through his plans, the brightest hopes of his ambition failed. He was, Mr. Wakeman said, "a first souled man." The audience was pleasantly entertained with singing and instrumental music, and the services of the critics were dispensed with.

Miss Craddock speaks next Sunday.

Letters of Friends.

Money Nearly As Hard to Get As Religion.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., Jan. 20, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3, to be applied on my subscription. Money is as hard to get as religion, and I havn't got a bit of that; but I will send you as above. Your paper is the best on earth.

Yours respectfully, P. C. CRAMER.

The Best He Has Ever Read.

SCRANTON, PA., Jan. 19, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER and for "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated." I would like to order more, and may in the future, but at present I cannot afford to do so. I hav read the paper for the past year, and I think it the best I hav ever read.

Wishing you great success in your grand work of Freethought and reform, I am sincerely yours, C. L. TOBEY.

Believes in Local Advertising of Eye Openers.

LESLIE, MICH., Jan. 22, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Please find $3 for THE TRUTH SEEKER. Now, I want to say to each reader of the paper: Make yourself its agent and insert in your local paper a notice that you are agent also for "Self-Contradictions of the Bible," and say that there are one hundred and forty-four plain contradictions in the Bible. That was what opened my eyes. Also state you are agent for "Mistakes of Moses." That is another good eye opener.

Yours for truth, SARAH A. HAYNES.

The Preachers Are Busy in Iowa.

CLARION, IA., Jan 12, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: It's simply awful to think how hard the sky-pilots are working during the winter months in all the towns of Iowa. At Williams, Webster City, Eagle Grove, Clarion, and other towns they are chasing after the young men. They hav got the old folks, sure. Now they are after younger gudgeons. In most towns the sky-pilots hav posters and dodgers put up on the street corners, stores, shops, post-offices, and all other public places. Eagle Grove is plastered over with these bills and dodgers. However, I am told that, notwithstanding the efforts of these preachers, their temples of superstition are not half filled by the dupes, and hence the sky-pilots are getting desperate.

Yours truly, JOHN AYLWARD.

A Freethinker All His Life, But Hadn't Been Introduced.

DESDEMONIA, TEX., Jan. 12, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: You will find inclosed $4.25, for which please send me the grand old TRUTH SEEKER another year, "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," and "Crimes of Preachers." I cannot afford to do without your paper. I hav been a natural Liberal or Freethinker all my life, but never knew it till I commenced to read THE TRUTH SEEKER, a little over a year ago. It expresses my views and belief better than I can myself.

I wish we had a good lecturer here, if only three or four times a year. There are many Liberals here, if they knew how to be. J. D. Shaw, of Waco, lectured at Dublin last spring, but did not get out here, as we are eleven miles from the railroad.

I will send for more books as soon as I can spare the cash. I exchange my paper with a friend for the Independent Pulpit; also giv it away when I think best.

N. E. PAYNE.

Not Prompt in Paying Store Bills.

BUCKLEY, WASH., Jan. 20, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I cannot help myself; I must let THE TRUTH SEEKER family know that we in this town of Buckley are well protected by revivals and prayer-meetings this new year. Last night they prayed for us poor deluded business men, and I say that if there is any class of men that needs praying for in these times it is surely the class engaged in trade; and, as I am one of them, I am interested and will watch closely and report to your paper when the time for results comes.

We hav a Methodist church here, and you know from your own experience that the people who believe in its creed are very good folks, at least for the world to come, though as a rule they are very slow to pay bills, and especially store bills, in this world.

Inclosed find a few names to whom you can forward copies of the paper, and when the People's party gets into power I will send you a greenback. Under this Demo-Republican rule I cannot promis to pay, as they refuse to make money. O. P.

Purgatory Discovered Much Later than the Other Theological Continents.

STEUBENVILLE, O., Jan. 16, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: You will find inclosed $3, which please place to my credit on subscription.

I had about one hundred back numbers of THE TRUTH SEEKER which I distributed over town in cigar stores. I paid a boy for doing it, and I would like to know if it has done any good.

I hav lots of fun with my Christian friends about their religion. I always get them, for I hav nature for my foundation, while they hav only a myth. I find the best way to get Catholics is to ask them if they know that Purgatory was discovered only six hundred years ago. They say, "Why, no; I thought it always was."

I will do all I can for the paper, and hope the year 1894 will be a successful one for you. ZINN SCHARLOTT.

Yes, It Is a Splendid Book.

COLUMBUS, O., Jan. 20, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I hav just finished the perusal of your edition of Winwood Reade's "Martyrdom of Man" and pronounce it the most eloquent epitome of universal history within my range. Its author could hav no more honorable suffix to his name. I hope that our high schools and colleges will become sufficiently enlightened by the next generation to adopt it as a text-book. It stands on a par with Draper's "Conflict" and Carlyle's "French Revolution." Among five hundred volumes I hav no greater prize. A second perusal is almost irresistible, but life is short and there are other temptations as well as duties. If you could publish three or four of the first paragraphs of Chapter II., on "Religion," I believe that many would be sufficiently spoiled to want to read it all. It is equal to forty Freethought lectures. J. J. BURDGE.

The Preachers Still Malign Paine and Voltaire.

PLUMB, KAN., Jan. 23, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER and "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated."

I went to church a few weeks ago to hear a preacher talk on Theism, and in his theorizing he compared God to a rock, a mist, and other dissimilar substances; and finally jumped from the subject onto Thomas Paine and Voltaire and gave them quite a shaking up. The sun did not become darkened, neither did the moon turn into blood, and when the people went home they found their houses still standing on their foundations. The next day opened in all her beauty, with the sun in the east. So will Mr. Samuel Putnam's new book, "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," shine in glory, splendor, and truth upon the American people. Let preachers cackle as they may about Voltaire and Paine.

I hav been circulating some Freethought books ordered from your office; also THE TRUTH SEEKER when I get done reading it, and I can see it is having quite an influence among the people in this part of the country.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is the best paper in the world. EZEKIEL MCCOY.

Six Hundred Afraid of Satan.

CLEARMONT, MO., Jan. 18, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: For the inclosed draft please send THE TRUTH SEEKER, as per accompanying list. I should be glad to send you a much larger number, but the financial stringency of the country prevents many Liberals from subscribing who would like to support your valuable paper. Then there is a class of skeptics who are wholly indifferent about the success of Liberalism, and will not spend a copper to advance the cause. As for myself, I hav been a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER for almost ten years, and find it indispensable; so you can count on me as a life subscriber, unless misfortune prevents my raising the necessary funds for the fearless Editor.

Religion is on the rampage, and Satan, in seeking to devour, has in the city of Maryville frightened over six hundred into the fold.

I should like to secure the new book, "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," but the list I inclose are not new subscribers; so I shall trust to your judgment, and if you think I am deserving of the book send it to my address (I assure you it shall do much good), and if not, apply the extra amount to my subscription.

Yours for truth, JAS. F. LANE.

Are There That Many in All Missouri? Why Don't They Report?

MARYVILLE, MO., Jan. 15, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: "We" hav just experienced a revival, conducted by Major Cole. They claim a goodly number of converted, paupers being thick in this city this fall and winter. There are still between five and eight thousand Freethinkers in this county (Nodaway). Thanks to common sense.

Some time ago I heard the members of the Young Men's Christian Association of Maryville debating whether they would allow Catholics to enter heaven. Finally it was decided by a close ballot that, under favorable conditions, they might "pass muster." Now, as everyone may see, this was a very close shave for the Catholics, for which they should echo the prayer of the young man who said, "God bless the Young Men's Christian Association."

Last year a Catholic friend was working for a Protestant family on a farm, and every Friday they would put meat in every dish on the table, if possible; then watch him pick the meat from the food and laugh. The family were very strong Christians. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven"—I prefer hell. I am your brother in light, EVERARD FROST.

Three Dollars Earned, and It Goes for The Truth Seeker.

THORNTON, R. I., Jan. 23, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $3 for another year of THE TRUTH SEEKER. These are the times that try men's souls. For the past six months only three days' work hav I been able to find, and those three days I finish to-day at $1 per day. Do not know when I shall receive another, but must hav THE TRUTH SEEKER, as times are so hard at present. I try my best to get a subscriber. Sometimes there will be three or four at one time waiting for the paper. "Let me see it when you get through with it." Said I: "Send $1, and receive it for four months, if you do not want to subscribe for a year." "Oh, no, I cannot spare the money." Liberals of that stamp are not of much account.

Moody and Sankey are in Providence, doing up fools in bundles, for they hav made fools enough to supply the whole world. Colonel Ingersoll has lectured, too, in Music Hall, on "Myths and Miracles." I don't know how many people heard the grandest man that ever lived, but every inch of the floor was occupied. Of all the men that ever spoke in Providence he is the champion. Music Hall echoed and reëchoed times almost without number with the applause of the tremendous crowd. What comfort and joy it is to sit and listen to that man!

Yours truly. WM. A. BENNETT.

The Younger Brother Is in the Right Place.

LAKE SHORE, UTAH, Jan. 20, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: The grand old TRUTH SEEKER comes to me regularly, and I deeply regret that I cannot do better than I am doing for its support. The financial embarrassment in this territory is terrible. We absolutely cannot get cash for any kind of produce. In days gone by I hav mailed hundreds of copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER, after I had read them, to all parts of this territory; but I am not able to do so now. There are several of my neighbors that admire the paper, but they are not able at this moment to subscribe.

Eugene, I admire your labor in the cause of humanity, and it also gave me great pleasure when the report came that your brother, George, was back in the sanctum of the paper and to stay. He is in his right place there, and may conditions be such that he will be able to stay there, is my wish. I also admire the mighty work of S. P. Putnam; he stands in the front rank with Ingersoll. I hav not seen him for years, but I follow him wherever he goes. It givs me great pain to think that I cannot, at this time, subscribe for "Four Hundred Years of Freethought;" but I must hav it if possible in the future. If Putnam is in the office when this reaches you, please giv him my respects; he will recollect me in the old Utah campaign. We had good times then.

Eugene, I will do all I can for you and deeply regret that I cannot do better just now, but you will hear from me again in the immediate future. Please find inclosed money order for $1.50.

California.

ELSINORE, CAL., Jan. 25, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: There is so much to say about this country that I will take short letters to say it in.

Los Angeles has the name of being a godly city of seventy-five thousand "souls." Hundreds of these thousands, though, are the most aggressiv and progressiv Liberals it has been my pleasure to meet in many years. Here I made the acquaintance of C. Severance, Geo. T. Bruce, Dr. J. E. Clark, and met Colonel Voss and family, whom I knew fifteen years ago in Girard, Kan., when I debated with Elder Cunningham.

I attended, in company with Geo. T. Bruce, the session of debaters in the Church of the New Era, whose pastor is Rev. Mr. Bowman, as broad-minded a man as I ever knew inside a "church." There is nothing "Christian" about it. This explains. I heard him in the evening giv a discourse on "Freethought." A more able address I never listened to. I did not agree with all his statements; that does not matter. Free thought does not mean that we should all think alike—we can't anyway, if we sit up late nights to try; a lesson that all Freethinkers hav not yet fully learned.

I gave my first address here on Thursday evening, Jan. 4th, to about 350 persons. Rev. Dr. Ravlin and Rev. Bowman sat on my platform, and in short, spicy speeches heartily indorsed my heretical sentiments. These brethren left the church because they just naturally "growed." They are both eloquent speakers. Oh, that the bulk of the clergy would follow their example, and quit preaching nonsense! True, the gospel of manhood does not pay as much in coin current. A man who turns his back on superstition has a hard road before him. None but those who hav traveled it really know what this means.

Dr. Ravlin has lately been giving lectures in Burbank's Theater to large audiences, and with great acceptance, Sunday evenings. Rev. Mr. Bowman delights his hundreds also Sunday evenings, in Illinois hall.

It is my intention, at the close of my California engagements, to travel through Nevada, Utah, and Colorado, and I cordially invite the Liberals there, who wish to avail themselvs of the "means of grace," to write me immediately at Elsinore, Cal.

Who is Worse—the Murderer or the God Who Deliberately Made the Murderer?

EAGLE POINT, OR., Jan. 1, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: As it is New Year's day I think I cannot do better than to write and let you and the many readers of your valuable paper know that away out here in Jackson county livs an Infidel, as the Christian calls him, and the Christian feels so bad when he sees an Infidel, for he thinks, What if the Infidel is right? Why, then, the man that downed our preacher in an argument on religion won't be punished; he made the preacher feel very bad, and why? Because he could not answer the Infidel. But the good Christian has some consolation; he thinks that if one does bring up arguments that he cannot answer God will answer it for him in the sweet by and by. Oh, how glad I am that Freethought is gaining ground so fast; it makes one feel like singing to meet so many men in our ranks to day; we are gaining very fast all over the land, and the old walls of superstition are fast crumbling.

Heston has a good picture in the issue of December 16th; it shows how the old structure is going.

The Christians out here are not hard to handle. You ask one if he believes that God made everything and he will say, "Oh, yes." Then ask if everything does not occupy space. "Yes." "Well, if that is so, where was God before he made space?" Just then he will turn pale and leave you; God will answer that question for you; just wait.

To think that a God, knowing all things, would cause a baby to be born into the world, knowing at the same time that it would be a murderer—that it would kill some of its fellow-men! I ask, Who is the worst, the man who murdered or the God who knew that he would, but made him, and then looked on and did not put forth a hand to stop the bloody deed? The God theory is fast leaving the minds of the thinking class of men.

Yours for truth and justice,

J. HENRY FRENCH.

Will Try to Get Christians to Subscribe.

HARWICH, MASS., Jan. 25, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Again I renew and hope to be able to renew to the end of my life. If it cost $10 instead of $3 I should continue taking it. In fact, I could not do without THE TRUTH SEEKER. It speaks with no bated breath; drives straight to the mark. It radiates like the scintillations of the sun to all parts of the country, planting the seeds of reform that, let us hope, will spring up an hundredfold. But just now I am mad, mad as a setting hen. I cannot get one subscriber among the many Freethinkers in this "banner town" of Freethought. And now I am going to try to get the Christians to subscribe. Yes, I turn to the gentiles. What an incentiv the thought of the necessity of disseminating Freethought principles should be to giv Liberal literature a broadcast distribution to every nook and corner of the civilized world! There are thinkers here and there, who would catch on, were the chances thrown in their way by a word written or spoken. How I wish I had the time and means to canvass for THE TRUTH SEEKER and other Freethought literature! But to "keep the wolf from the door" takes about all my time. I should hav a Freethought library, but shall hav to wait. My last year's crop of cranberries failed me, both in quantity and price, but I am hopeful for the next, this year's. I am exerting all the influence I can in this vicinity in the interest of Freethought by words and deeds, but I find no Christian that is willing to be fair in argument. They profess to be meek, but are arrogant, belligerent, and assume the right to occupy seven-eighths of the time; and while they profess to be meek and charitable, they get into a rage when driven into a corner. The other day I accidentally got into an argument with a devout Christian, and when I saw that he meant to make me a listener all the time, I just called a halt and asked if he would giv me half the time and hav a fair argument, upon which he began to retreat to the door, saying he did not want to argue. There is more brazen arrogance to the square inch in Christians when talking about religion than in any other living creatures on earth.

About Some of Talmage's Nonsense.

STRASBURG, ILL., Jan. 8, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Rev. Dr. Talmage in his Christmas sermon (text in Rev. xxii, 16: "I am the bright and morning star") says: "But do not forget that Christ himself was a star. In the first place Christ heralded the coming of the creation. There was a time when there was no order, no sound, or beauty. No wing stirred." Here we are led to suppose there were no angels, or else they were wingless. Mr. Talmage does not suppose anything connected with this before-creation. Knowledge it is with him. In speaking of Voltaire he said: "Voltaire supposed he saw Jesus in his dying room." How does Mr. Talmage know? How does anybody know what Voltaire supposed? He says: "As far as God could look up, down, or far out, he could see nothing; no light sped." He says: "Hight and depth and length and breadth of nothingness; no light sped." Here we suppose again that it must hav been as dark as Mr. Talmage found the Mammoth Cave when the light went out. Did Christ then exist? He puts the question and of course answers, "Oh, yes." Later on he said, "He was the light of the world," but at that early time his candle must hav been under the bushel—"no light sped," says Talmage. "By him were all things made that are; things in heaven and things in earth and things under the earth. Yes, he antedated the creation; he shone before the first morning [though no light sped]; his voice was heard [heard it himself]; he saw the first foundation laid; he saw the first light kindled [though no light sped]. Christ heralds the dawn of heaven upon every Christian's dying pillow. I suppose you hav noticed that the characteristics of people in their healthful days are very apt to be their characteristics in their dying days; for instance: Napoleon's dying words, 'Head of the army.' Lord Byron's, 'I must sleep now.' Lord Nelson's, 'Kiss me hearty.' Voltaire's, 'Crush the wretch.'" Mr. Talmage further says: "I see now why it was so easy to change water into wine; why it was easy to cure the maniac; to hush the tempest; to swing fish in Simon's net; to giv sight to the blind; to raise Lazarus." Talmage does not explain why Jesus so despairingly cried out, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Perhaps it was the characteristic of his healthful days. Mr. Talmage further says: "Some suppose that Christ was a stranger to Bethlehem. Oh, no; he created the shepherds, the flocks, the hills, etc. Before the world was Christ was." He does not suppose anything about that; of that he is sure; but rather wants it understood that Voltaire supposed it was Jesus that was in his dying room. "I hav noticed," says he further, "that the dying words of Christians always mean peace. Generally the pain is all gone and there is a great quietude through the room." We agree with the reverend and believe that after the pain was all gone there was a great quietude, with Paine, Voltaire, and Jesus Christ, as far as themselvs were concerned.

H. BERNHARD.

The People of Judea and Their Neighbors and Conquerors.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y., Jan. 20, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I hav just finished reading an article in the Century Magazine for January, 1894, on "The Assyrian Monuments and the Bible," by Morris Jastrow, Jr. This is a royal specimen of presumption, a sample of the methods employed by modern religious people to make sacred and profane history agree.

Mr. Jastrow repeats the story of George Smith's finding among the fragments of the Assyrian writings in the British museum a writing corresponding to some extent with the Biblical account of the flood, and of his finding other fragments giving here and there a line which they conceive to correspond to the Mosaic account of the world's creation. That they do not agree upon details is of no consequence, so it appears. The Bible when compared with anything showing a difference in detail is always given the preference by the Christians. An unsophisticated reader of Mr. Jastrow's article might infer that to find in Assyria, or, in fact, anywhere among the countries of that section of the planet, an account of a big flood was but the feeble attempt of heathen minds to depict the real flood of Noah and his ark. Or to find any description of this world's construction shows but another heathen attempt at sacred history writing, and the digressions and discrepancies from the Mosaic account are but the heathen way of putting it. This kind of stuff will do for Sunday-school books.

Mr. Jastrow savors a good deal of Rawlinson and his "Five Great Monarchies;" and he, as well as many others following this line of research and by comparison trying to prove the scriptures to be an authentic history of everything they describe, and all that is different a lie, is a great stumbling-block to beginners in ancient history. This one article of Jastrow's will doubtless be read by thousands who know little else upon the subject. Many may infer that it is but necessary to continue digging up the plains of Mesopotamia to eventually obtain evidence enough to crush out all who dare raise a voice in opposition o so-called sacred history. Whereas, impartial inspection of this business of proving the scriptures by these relics of the ancients will show to any fair-minded person that a good deal of straining at a gnat and bolting a camel whole is being done by the professors. Where is the professor who, after he has discovered what he claims is a similarity in the history of a heathen tribe to his cherished Biblical account, is going to point out which is the copy and which the original? How will Mr. Jastrow prove that the Jewish account of the flood and its extra quantity of water is the original and official tale and that the account on the Assyrian bricks deciphered by George Smith is only an attempt at relating the same occurrence? He will, of course, not try to prove it. Yet one would infer from his writing that he knows the same to be a fact. How much good does the Century Company do the world, the minds of inquiring young people, or any casual reader on such topics by publishing such stuff? None! Worse than none! The facts of archeological researches are made to serve as means to further the ends of superstition and priestcraft. Mr. Jastrow picks up the Biblical account of the destruction of Sennacherib's army before the gates of Jerusalem (2 Kings xviii, xix), and insults the memory of this great monarch of Assyria by insinuating that he suppressed that part of the history of his campaigns. He insinuates also that Sennacherib's son and descendants and all others of Assyria lied about the destruction, while only the historians of Judea could tell the tale straight. How can any sane man begin to believe this tale of Sennacherib's destruction who will take the trouble to read on a few lines or verses into the next chapter (xx), where is found the account of Hezekiah's boil that was about to bring on his death, and of his recovery and grant of fifteen years more of life from the Lord? Then read on to where the Lord made a sign of his mightiness by turning the sun back 10° in its course, and all for the edification of Hezekiah. What kind of scientific men are these who set up against the whole nation of Assyria and their word and honor the assertions of a handful of fanatics whose very words, one following upon another, reveal falsehood after falsehood? The sun turned back 10° to please Hezekiah! How many of our Christian colleges when teaching astronomy make mention of Hezekiah's notion and the Lord's juggling?

But if anything is to be inferred from a striking similarity between Assyrian and Jewish writings, what would be the most reasonable inference? Would it not be reasonable when looking over the question to remember that Assyria or rather the long line of Chaldea, Babylon, Assyria, and Babylon again, was a line or race running through thousands of years, a race that moved and swayed the destinies of the world of that day, alternating with Egypt a supremacy that for centuries and centuries and for thousands of years was molding the shape of history?

History cannot reach back far enough to begin at the beginning of either Egyptian or Chaldean history, yet every student of ancient history knows that the portion of the country known as Palestine lay along the much-beaten track of armies going and coming between Egypt and Mesopotamia. How many, many millions of men hav alternately made a stamping-ground of this portion of the world! Every army that passed from Asia to Egypt or vice versa must of necessity hav brushed against the people of Judea. One need not stretch his imagination in the least to conceive that the people of this section were continually under subjection to some warring tribe or state; now paying tribute to Egypt, and now to some other nation; perhaps being carried off in whole tribes and made the slaves of this or that great nation. In fact, it was the custom of Assyria for a long time to punish insubordination and similar offenses by deliberately driving off whole tribes into some distant province of the realm, thus severing the ties of home and family associations, destroying the individuality and manhood of their subjects, and making the enslavement of them an easy thing.

The inhabitants of Judea, no more perhaps than any other people, felt the iron hand of this monarchy. Is it not reasonable to suppose that a people who were now the slaves of this power and now of that, and again of another, which dragged them from home and forced them into slavery in some distant land, would gradually lose all individuality, if they ever had any that was more distinct than most savage tribes possess? Would they not hav acquired many of the ideas of the people who enslaved them? Would not the religious forms and ideas of Egypt hav had their effect upon slaves and vassals, yea, the very dogs of Egypt? Would not the Assyrians, after driving them away from home into perhaps the neighborhood of Nineveh, to slave at temple building, or some other work, hav instilled into them ideas of Assyrian religion, Assyrian arts and customs? After centuries of this kind of a life, of being first this one's slave and then another's, is it strange that we find the Bible, which is a product of the later days of these people, bristling with maledictions against all mankind, filled with the superstitions of Egypt, of Chaldea and Assyria, a conglomeration of recollections and yarns, spook stories, and undoubtedly an occasional honest line or two of real historic worth relativ to some of their captors or masters?

When I read such articles as Mr. Jastrow's I hope the day is not far off when honest men will hav shed the light of reason and honest research upon these zealous comparers of profane and sacred histories to such an extent that these Christian comparers will cease to insult the histories of the past by their arrogance and presumption; but, rather, will turn their energies toward truth seeking, remembering that all men in the past did as all men do now: imitated to some extent the thoughts and actions of those about them. As they delve into ancient history let them keep in mind the probable condition of these people whom the Christian era has delighted to honor as the chosen people of God. Let them remember how very natural it would hav been for them to pick up a large number of foreign ideas. In fact, how could a race of people, occupying the geographical position which they did, help being submerged beneath the loads of neighboring obtrusivness? What could they hav known about agriculture, except that which warring factions allowed them to acquire in moments of peace, or else compelled them to learn under the lash? What about art, save what a master whipped into them in the brickyard or in temple construction? What about war, but that which they learned in the bitter school of experience with captors and oppressors? What education had they as a race upon the known subjects of their day except such as was picked up like crumbs from their masters' tables?

What nation or people honor these people of Judea as being the foremost in art, literature, science, home government, or as a successful, prosperous nation? None! None! Yet the Christian world has seen fit to dub them the chosen people of God. And why? Was it because they constructed from the religions of their captors, who for centuries had beaten them about from pillar to post, a religion without a single new feature; a religion which only needs to be compared with that of their neighbors to see that they are all more or less an imitation of one another? Each was the chosen people of God; each had its Moses, each its Isaiah and hundreds of other prophets who guaranteed direct communication with God.

Alas! only too often do we find such widely-circulated and really elegant magazines of literature and timely topics as the Century actually patting on the back an assertion that the source of all that there is in the Bible is a lie in all particulars in which it differs from the Bible. Ye gods! Drop the curtain now. But ring it up whenever an honest man is found who will look at these differences that are found between the records of the Jews, or any race, for that matter, and the records of their neighbors with candor and fairness.

JOHN M. CUSHMAN.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

My Optimistic Friend.

'Twas bitterly cold—so every one said—
And away from the streets ped-strians fled;
O'er the earth the snow a mantle had cast,
And the river below was frozen fast.
The old ice king, with his mystical wand,
A journey was making throughout the land:
While grey Boreas went howling along,
Now and then whistling an old Arctic song.

No chill was indoors, and an amber light
Shone out from the grate on the curtained night.
In pessimistic mood, I closed my eyes
And thought it almost folly to be wise;
For however sincerely one tries to serve,
With all his heart, and energy, and nerve,
He finds his efforts for the general good
Are often very much misunderstood.

I paused to readjust my thinking cap,
When, all at once, I heard a gentle tap,
And lo! in gorgeous, graceful style appeared,
As though in affluence he had been reared,
A very sprightly creature, undismayed
By this most unceremonious raid.
With startling buzz, he then at once began
A lively sally on the sense of man,
Who sees an ill when ill is never meant,
But only highest good and good intent.

Presently, I pulled my thoughts together
And said: "How came you out in such weather?
And, may I ask, how you, my friend, subsist—
I would your highest confidence enlist—
Come, tell me now, upon what meat you feed,
And what may be your theologic creed?"

He circled airily around the room,
As though he'd never thought of death or doom,
And, buzzing still, began: "I ne'er go out
In cold weather—I know what I'm about.
And how do I subsist? Well, by my wits
Mostly; and then, whate'er my fancy hits
I generally take; if not, the next best
That shows from the north, south, the east, or west.

"I take it, and am thankful. I never Murmur. While old time goes on forever,
Who cares though you or I may laugh or cry?
And why should either of us breathe a sigh?
Our moaning and our grieving changeth not
Another's sad mistake or sorry lot.
As to creeds, let ministers and laymen
About such things contend with tongue and pen;
I take the whole great breezy universe—
Am independent—free from praise or curse.

"I liv, and I let liv, from day to day;
Sometimes I work, but oftener I play.
I'm made as wonderfully, sir, as you;
I hear quicker and hav more eyes to view
What's going on. My clothes are ready-made;
They fit me well, and are just about the shade
I like. Then, too, with gauzy pinions light,
I cleave the air, amid the sunshine bright;
Walk upside down, and cheery music make;
Run races with the cook, and eat her cake.

"I dine with kings and princes—make most free
With priest and prelate on the bended knee.
And, by and by, I shall lie down and die;
And so will you, no matter how you try
A thousand ways this destiny to change,
To dodge the undertaker's certain range.
And, when we're gone, the people, nothing loth,
Will still move on and, quick, forget us both.

"What may befall me in some other sphere
I know not, sir, nor hav I any fear.
As to a future heaven, or a—well,
I'm Agnostic—I'm sure I cannot tell.
Yet, of such things, I know as much as you
Or any man who thinks he has the cue.

"I like this world; if there is another,
I'll like that one, too, my friend and brother.
But while I'm here I'll make the most of this,
And try no good and gracious thing to miss."

'I'll kill the fly!" my serving-man then said.
"He buzzes so, he really hurts my head."
"No, Joseph, no; you will not kill the fly;
He has the right to life, as you or I.
The room is large enough, and let him sing,
And soar aloft on fleet and airy wing.
Bring him some sugar in a dainty dish,
And let him eat and liv; it is my wish."

And so he stays with me, and hovers near,
Buzzing the thought that only I may hear.
The little creature, happy all day long,
Plays hide-and-seek, and sings his gleeful song;
And then at eve he rests upon my book,
Is wide awake, watches my every look,
And, in his fashion, by little speeches,
Many wholesome lessons me he teaches.

We take the good, nor ask the reason why,
My merry, optimistic friend and I.

Something New.

A LIBERAL CORRESPONDENCE CLUB.

CLEVELAND, O., Jan. 28, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Miss Lucy W. Phelps, of West Sutton, Mass., and myself are trying to organize a Liberal Correspondence Club among the young people of our cause. Will you kindly publish this as soon as possible, as we wish to hav the club in working order by the middle of February or first of March. If any of your readers will enter the club, they will please send their names to Miss Phelps or myself.

Yours for the cause,
HARRY B. FAIRFIELD.

[The Editor of the Corner hopes all of requisit age will join this interesting and instructiv club.]

NAME.

This society shall be called the Liberal Correspondence Club.

OBJECT.

The object of this club is to promote the study of the lives and writings of Liberal heroes and of the best writing of the other side.

OFFICERS.

The officers of this club shall be president and secretary, chosen by the members of the club, whose terms of office shall be three (3) months.

DUTIES OF OFFICERS.

The president shall hav power to name the correspondents, and with the advice of the secretary appoint the subjects.

The president shall receive all correspondence, which must be forwarded to him within two (2) weeks after receipt of same, and he shall send one letter in each series of letters to the secretary for publication.

THE SECRETARY.

The secretary shall notify each member of the club with whom to correspond and upon what subject.

The secretary shall publish in the Liberal papers any correspondence the president may send.

MEMBERSHIP.

Any person of either sex, between the ages of sixteen and twenty-three, may upon application become a member of this club.

It is hoped to hav the club in working order by the first of March, and any wishing to become members will please send name and address to Miss Lucy W. Phelps, West Sutton, Mass., or H. B. Fairfield, 1082 Arcade, Cleveland. O.

Correspondence.

LONG LAKE, MINN., Jan. 5, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my second letter to the Corner. I was fourteen years of age on December 24th.

I am going to school next Monday; we had two weeks' vacation. I study spelling, arithmetic, grammar, geography, physiology, and penmanship. I hav six studies in all. Our teacher's name is Robert L. Glasby, and I think he is a very nice teacher. There are about thirty or more scholars in the room I am in.

I read the Children's Corner every week. My father has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for six or seven years, and thinks he will always take it.

I got a silk handkerchief for my Christmas present. I was invited to my aunt's Christmas tree, and had all the nuts and candy I could eat. I had a nice time, and hope these lines will always find you the same.

There are two churches within a mile and a half of our house, and I never went to either of them; I don't care about going there. One of them is a Catholic church The girls try to make me go to church and make their class larger, but I guess they won't find me there.

We liv on a big farm and near a nice lake. But my letter is getting quite long, so I will close.

I wish you a merry Christmas and a happy New Year. CARRIE WOLSFELD.

BURLINGTON, IA., Jan. 7, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my second letter to the Children's Corner. Papa has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for a long while, and likes it very well. I read the letters, etc., in the Corner every week, and like it very much. I will be twelve years old the 15th of August. I hav one sister and four brothers. DAISY MOSENA.

[Next time will Daisy tell us about Burlington, population, number of schools, and interesting points about the place?—ED. C. C.]

BEEBE, ARK., Jan. 1, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: May I say a few words in the Corner?

I feel like expressing my views in the dear Corner. I am an average girl of thirteen years. Our family consists of mamma, papa, two brothers, and myself, all of whom are radical Freethinkers, although we liv in the midst of Christ's vinyard, with a "Joss house" within a hundred yards of our summer resort, and the saints all drink at our mineral springs.

The holidays hav been rather dull with me, because the "sky pilots" came on the day before Christmas, and began pounding the pulpits of three churches near here. They said they came to keep the young people from going to parties and dances, and they hav about accomplished their end.

Sometimes "Christ's disciples" call me "a little Infidel," but I glory in it.

Yours for Freethought and reform,
EDITH WYATT.

[Edith is more than an average girl. May we hear from her often.—ED. C. C.]

CLOVERDALE, VA., Dec. 25, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON AND READERS OF THE CORNER: The last time I wrote a letter to the Corner I trod on some people's corns and bunions, and they wrote me angry letters about it. This time to save the expense of a half-penny card I will begin my letter by saying no offense is meant, but if anything in this letter should come home to a man, let him not send it to his next-door neighbor, but get a coop for his own chickens. People forget that I hav other fish to fry, and they don't recollect that it is hard to get blood out of a turnip. Nobody expects cows to catch crows, or hens to wear hats. Don't put a round peg in a square hole, nor wind your watch with a corkscrew, nor send a tender-hearted man to whip wife-beaters. Well, I hope I will receive no more angry letters. The following is a description of the country where I liv. There are mountains all around me. It is a beautiful and healthful climate in the valley of Virginia. The land is very productiv, our neighbors being very pious.

I am the only Atheist in this community. Well, Christmas is here, and I am having a nice time. I went to a revival at Bonsacks last Sunday, and I wish you could hav heard those golden-lipped, silver-tongued preachers. They went on worse than the negroes do. One of the preachers told me if I would read three verses in the Psalm I would cry like a baby. I told him to get his Bible and I would read them. I could read the whole Bible through from beginning to end and not shed one tear. I was in Fincas the last court day, and the clerk told me the marriage record was rather dull; he said that one widow came to him and told him she meant "bizness," and would he let her hav a license at half price? She would pay the preacher in potatoes. What do you think of that? Well as my letter is getting rather long and tiresome, I will bring it to a close. Will, be glad to correspond with any of the readers of the Corner. Wish you all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. From a little Atheist. CHARLES WM. POWERS.

ATCHISON, KAN., Dec. 3, 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Hark! I hear a doleful sound, and as this is Sunday it must be the braying of a preacher; but let him bray all day, I'll finish this letter if I hav to stop my ears with a wad of cotton. Probably if he knew I was writing a letter to an Infidel paper on Sunday his brays would change to sobs But if all these vagabonds will get in their pulpits and sob and bray until their hearts cease to beat, I think the Infidel would be willing to defray all funeral expenses, for it would cause every Infidel in the land to rejoice if these sky-pilots would all depart down the narrow path to the great beyond. Oh, that I might hav my request, and that God would grant me the thing that I long for! These are the supposed words of Job, but they are mine in reality. If God had granted Job his request the rascal would never hav fulfilled it, because I believe he was too much like the blow-hard preacher of to-day who declares he is going to do something good but never does it; but I think if my request was granted either in person or letter from God (and that request would be to let me stop that braying), I would try and fulfill it whether I succeeded or not. If the braying of these donkeys would cease to be heard, the number of convicts would begin to decrease. I think that some day the braying and sobbing of these two-legged donkeys will no longer disturb his four-legged ancestors from their peaceful doze. It seems to me as though the preacher surely originated from the donkey, as his voice and looks greatly resemble this harmless creature. Still they show no improvement on their long-eared ancestors.

Well, church must be out, as I no longer hear that disturbing noise, and as the preacher has quit disturbing me I shall quit disturbing him.

Although quite cold, this is in many respects a beautiful day. The first snow of the season is here and givs greeting to the schoolboy and his sled. To look down upon the old Missouri, with her water struggling against the huge chunks of ice; to look at the grand snow-capped hills beyond, with their naked trees shivering with cold, and the brilliant sun with its rays of gold trying to free the ground of this glittering mass, makes a scene far grander than the Christians' pictured heaven or the devil's unknown hell. For fine scenery, Kansas is unsurpassed. Probably the most delightful time to look upon the scenes of the sunflower state is the latter part of May. Her flowers are all in bloom to scent the air with their volumes of odor, the green fields of wheat are fighting with the breeze, her millions of acres of corn herald to the world that she is inferior to no state in the union, her immense forests are full of the charming melody of the birds, the jack rabbit jumps from his cosy bed and invites the hound to giv him chase, hundreds of lovely streams traverse her broad domain; all this greets the eye of the person who seeks pleasure in this far-off western state.

In my next I will try to describe the town in which I liv. Your anti-Christian friend, CHARLES B. REMSBURG.

Hard Knocks at Christianity.

By R. WHEELER.

This book is just what its title implies—thumping whacks at superstition. It deals with the effect of Christianity on the world, showing what Christians have done to advance their religion and impede the progress of man. It shows that Jesus was a false prophet, that the gospels are not authentic, and that Christianity is a borrowed system of religion. That the Bible is not in accord with Science, that the atonement scheme is futile and foolish, and that religion is not a real benefit to man.

Price, 20 cents, six for $1.

"With Daughter's Babe Upon His Knee."

A new edition of that splendid prose poem, "Life," by "the prince of orators," Col. R. G. Ingersoll. It is larger and better than the old edition, and can be framed or placed upon the table as an ornament. In the center of the card appear the portraits of the Colonel and the baby, surrounded by the prose poem, which has been truthfully described as, "one of the masterpieces of the orator and poet, who now, as far as we know, stands alone in the living world." It will make a delightful present, and will be a souvenir not only of intellectual greatness, but of artistic workmanship. It is printed on heavy board, gilt boveled edge. The size is 12x16 inches, and the price only 75 cents, post-paid.

Pleasure and Progress.

AN ATTEMPT TO PROVE THAT

The Pursuit of Pleasure is the Sine Qua Non of Intellectual, Moral, and Social Development, and that The Promotion of Pleasure is the Duty of Philanthropy and Statesmanship.

By Albert M. Lorentz, LL.B.

CONTENTS:

BOOK I.—PLEASURE: Chap. I.—Sources of Pleasure. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures. Chap IV.—Social Pleasures. Chap. V.—Pleasures of the Savage, the Barbarian and the Civilized. Chap. VI.—Genesis of religions. Chap. VII.—Christianity.

BOOK II.—INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Purpose of life. Chap, II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures: Knowledge. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Reason. Chap.—V. Ideal Pleasures: Character. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Pedagogical Despotism.

BOOK III.—MORAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Morality. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures: Prudence. Chap. III.—Material Pleasures: Refinement. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Foresight, Chap. V.—Ideal Pleasures: Civilization. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Vice Caused by Restraint.

BOOK IV.—SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Progress. Chap. II.—Protection, Capitalism, and Socialism: Respectivly an Actual, an Imminent, and a Proposed Violation of Individual Sovereignty. Chap. III.—Condition of Agriculture. Chap. IV. Public Schools. the Mene, Mene. Tekel of Socialism. Chap. V.—Province of Government. Chap. VI.—Our Social Disorder.

Here are some of the verdicts on this remarkable production which have been rendered by men who are in every way qualified as judges of books:

This is a spirited, rattling sort of a book that skates right along over the deepest subject without mu h thought whether the ice is thin or not. It answers the greatest question—What is the use, object, motive, purpose, and summum bonum of life, and the real cause and motive of progress? —by one word, Pleasure!—Thaddeus B. Wakeman,

He sharply attacks, also, modern methods of education, and in this he is most abundantly borne out by the facts, and his arraignment is practically unanswerable. His book is altogether a curious and suggestive one.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The man who wrote this book knows how to write a book, and knows what he is writing about. There is not a padded sentence in the volume, not an attempt to fill up with words for lack of knowledge. The author deals hard blows at shams and falsehoods, and hard blows for realities and truth. We do not see how anyone can read this book and disagree with the leading propositions. The work is good; every chapter is worth reading. It is a work of common-sense Socialism. The chapter on public schools ought to be put into a tract and sent to every teacher in the land. Thousands of sentences are worthy of being framed as political maxims and hung up all over the nation. The book deserves a wide reading, not only for its literary style, which is clear and incisive, but for its bold, honest sayings.—L. K. Washburn.

Here we have philosophy up to date, the advance word of the progressive thinker; not a dry, abstruse discourse, but a common-sense essay in plain words upon the conduct of life, and all illustrated with such an abundance of anecdote and metaphor as add real entertainment to solid instruction. This is an important book, striking at superstition and unreasonable tradition, and upholding individual liberty in defiance of governmental law and social custom. After reading this book one feels that the author will never be able to write another, for he has put all his life and knowledge into this one. Every page bristles with points; there is no padding or filling in, no mere literary embellishment; but clean-cut apothegms abound, and every line is dictated by hard-headed common-sense.—Capt. Robt. C. Adams.

After you read this book you will be as enthusiastic in praise of it as are the eloquent editor of the Investigator and the gallant President of the Canadian Secular Union.

"Pleasure and Progress" has 398 pages. is splendidly printed from large, clear type, on excellent paper, and costs, bound in cloth, $1; paper covers, 50 cents.

A most extraordinary publication. We venture the assertion that nothing like it has ever before appeared in this country, and it is very doubtful if another one like it will ever again be published. We must give the Truth Seeker Company the credit of putting the book in the reach of all. At twice the price it would have been a cheap book. Artist Heston as a portrait painter and designer is a wonderful success. and we judge from our own feelings that nearly every Liberal in America will desire a copy of this most wonderful volume.—[Freethinkers' Magazine.

Mr. Heston deserves to be called the artist-hero of Liberalism He has dedicated his genius to freethought, and has done faithful and noble work for the cause of right and truth. But the pictures do not make up the whole of his volume. There are nearly two hundred pages of reading matter that serve first as explanations of the illustrations, and secondly as texts to prove the utter falsity of the church's professions and the hypocrisy of those who uphold them. Altogether the book is one of the best weapons against Christianity and the church that has ever been put in the hands of Freethinkers.—[Boston Investigator.

JOHN E. REMSBURG'S WORKS.

Abraham Lincoln: Was He A Christian?

For fifteen years Mr. Remsburg has been collecting material for his work. He presents an array of testimony that is irresistible and overwhelming, and which must put this question at rest forever. In addition to the testimony of twenty witnesses who claim that Lincoln was a Christian, and which is reviewed and refuted, he adduces the testimony of more than a hundred witnesses in proof of the claim that Lincoln was not a Christian. These witnesses include his wife and other relatives; his three law partners; his private secretaries; members of his cabinet; his principal biographers, and scores of his most intimate friends.

False Claims. Revised and Enlarged

As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic. Price, 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by

Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Slavery; Witchcraft; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbatic Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Argument; Origin of the Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies $1.

Image Breaker. Six Lectures:

Decline of Faith: Protestant Intolerance; Washington an Unbeliever; Jefferson an Unbeliever; Paine and Wesley; Christian Sabbath. Each 5 cents; bound, paper, 25 cents; per doz., 40 cents.

Thomas Paine. Tells the story of the Author-Hero's Life,

delineates the leading traits of his character and genius, and vindicates his name from the aspersions cast upon it. Choice extracts from "Common Sense," "American Crisis," "Rights of Man," and "Age of Reason," are given; also, tributes to Paine's character from more than one hundred noted persons of Europe and America, many of them written expressly for this work. Second edition, 160 pages, printed on fine tinted paper, neatly bound, and containing a handsome steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Apostle of Liberty.

An address delivered in Paine Hall, before the N. E. Freethinkers' Convention, January 29, 1884. Price, 10 cents.

Comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of Heathen Nations of Antiquity,

CONSIDERING ALSO THEIR ORIGIN AND MEANING.

[Heathen Illustration of the Temptation.]

The Bundehesh (a sacred book of the Persians,) states that Ahuramazda after creating the first man and woman, Mashya and Mashyana, bade them "to be humble of heart; to observe the law; to be pure in their thoughts, pure in their speech, pure in their actions." But an evil demon came to them in the form of a Serpent, sent by Ahriman, the prince of devils, and gave them fruit of a wonderful tree, which imparted immortality. Evil inclinations then entered their hearts, and all their moral excellence was destroyed. Consequently they fell, and forfeited the eternal happiness for which they were destined. They killed beasts, and clothed themselves in their skins.

BIBLE MYTHS shows this to be the origin of the Hebrew story.

Not for Parsons.

"THERE'S naught so much the spirit calms
As rum and true religion." —Byron.

"WHAT are your hopes for the future?" asked the solemn man. "I hav none just now," replied the youth. "To-morrow is my best girl's birthday, and I'm worrying about the present."—Life's Calendar.

TOMMY: Maw, doesn't anybody but good people go to heaven? Mrs. Figg: That is all, my son. Tommy: But maw, how does the good people enjoy themselvs if they ain't any bad people there for them to try and manage?—Enquirer.

NOT very long ago in London a preacher indulged in a little bit of sarcasm over a small collection, and he did it very neatly. "When I look at the congregation," said he, "I ask, Where are the poor? and when I look at the collection I ask, Where are the rich?"

A MANCHESTER carter was one day swearing at his horse, which had fallen in the street, when a virtuous gentleman came out from his house opposit to ask if he knew where he would go when he died. "It doesna' matter a d——," replied the carter; "I've friends i' both places."

I HEARD the other day a good and true story of a little girl; too good to keep, and so I will giv it away: An older sister was hearing her lesson in American history, the subject being the capture of Ticonderoga by Ethan Allen—who demanded the surrender "in the name of Jehovah and the Continental Congress." The sister asked: "What was the Continental Congress?" and the child gave a satisfactory answer. "Who was Jehovah?" "Well, I don't exactly know. I think it was either Columbus or George Washington."—St. Louis Republic.

THE refusal of the government to supply a convict with a set of artificial teeth reminds the Eastern Daily Press of the clerical authority for stating that the jailers in "another place" are more accommodating. For on a wicked and toothless old woman being reminded, as she lay a-dying, of the wailing and gnashing of teeth reserved for those who depart impenitent, she perkily rejoined, with a chuckle, "Let them gnash 'em as has 'em." "My good woman," said the parson, much shocked, "the teeth will be provided."—London Freethinker.

'Peahs tuh me you's owdashus p'ticler.
Sposin' dey's uv a new kine.
I'll des take a look at dem rocks. Hi yi! duz yer t'ink dat I'se blind?

I calls dat a plain watermilyun, yo' scamp, en I know whah it growed;
It kums fum de Jimmerson cawn-fiel' dah on de ter side er de road.
Yo' stole it, yo' rascal—yo' stole it! I watched yo' fum down in de lot;
En time I gits thoo with yo', niggah, yo' wont be ev'n a grease spot!

I'll fix yo'—Mirandy! Mirandy! go cut me a hic'ry, make 'ase!
En cut me de tufes' and keenes' yo' c'n find anywhar on de place.
I'll larn yo', Mr. Wi'yam Joe Vetters, ter steal an' ter lie, yo' young sinner;
Disgracin' yo' old Christian mammy, en makin' her leave cookin' dinner!

Now aint yo' ashamed er yo'se'f, sir? I is. I's ashamed you's my son!
En de holy acorjan angel, he's ashamed er what yo' has done;
En he's tuck it down yonder in coal black, blood-red letters—
"One watermilyun stolen by Wi'yam Josephus Vetters."

En wat you sposen Brer Bascom, yo' teacher at Sunday-school,
'Ud say ef he knowed how you's broke de good Lord's gol'n rule!
Boy, whah's de raisin' I giv you? Is yo' boun' fuh ter be a black vilyun?
I's s'prised dat a chile er yo' mammy 'ud steal any man's watermilyun.

En I's now gwineter cut it right open, en yo' shant hav nary bite,
Fur a boy who'll steal watermilyuns—en dat in de day's broad light—
Aint—Lawdy! it's green! Mirandy! Mirandy! come on wid dat switch!
Well, stealin' a g-r-e-e-n watermilyun! Who ever yeerd tell er de sich?

Cant tel w'en dey's ripe? W'y you thump 'em, en w'en dey goes "pank" dey is green;
But w'en dey goes "punk," now you mine me, dey's ripe—en dat's des w'at I mean.
En nex' time you hook watermilyuns—you heerd me, you ig'nant, you hunk,
Ef yo' dont want a lickin' all over, be sho dot dey allers go "punk!"—Harpers.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF MENTAL HEALING.

THE HOLY CROSS SERIES.

The Popes and Their Doings. Biographical sketches of the most noted of these vicars of Christ and vicegerents of God, showing what they have done, and what kind of men they were. It contains very plain statements, in very unvarnished language, and the unmasking is complete, proving them to have been cruel, intriguing, and licentious men. Considering the rapid growth of Catholicism in this country this book cannot be too widely disseminated. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Awful Disclosures of Maria Monk, as exhibited in a narrative of her sufferings during her residence of five years as a novice, and two years as a black nun, in the Hotel Dieu Nunnery, at Montreal. Perhaps not any anti-Catholic book published has created more excitement, and had such a circulation as this work. To counteract its effects the Catholics circulated a story that Maria Monk was "no better than she should be," but investigation disclosed that her "child of shame" was none other than the child of her priest-seducer. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth 75 cents.

Auricular Confession and Popish Nunneries. By Wm. Hogan, for twenty-five years a confessing priest. A revelation of the licentious practices of the priests and nuns in these religious brothels. There is no question that Ex-priest Hogan knew the truth of the tales of vice, seduction, and infanticide he gives in this volume, and equally there is no question that if the people generally knew of them, Catholicism would not be given the vast amounts of money now allowed it by our various city governments. Price, paper, 50 cents, cloth 75 cents.

The Priest in Absolution. A Review of the system of auricular confession, including copious extracts from the "Confessional Unmasked," from the "Master Key to Popery," etc. The work is a protest against and an appeal to every American citizen to examine carefully and thoughtfully a religious system so invasive of privacy, so powerful for evil in licentious hands, so fraught with danger to female modesty, to the ingenuous openness of youth, and to the freedom of thought, speech and action. Price, paper, 25 cents.

Priestly Celibacy Exposed A lecture by the Rev. Geo. Townsend Fox, of Durham, England. Revised American edition, showing the result in parishes of the Roman decree that priests shall not marry. Price, paper, 15 cents.

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA IDENTIFIED AS THE CHRISTIAN JESUS.

An important and remarkable revelation concerning the life and times of Apollonius of Tyana, the great sage and philosopher of the first century. It is here claimed that his life and teachings were appropriated and utilized by the formulators of the Christian religion in the interest of so-called Christianity. The plagiarism is made plain in this brief history of Apollonius, especially in view of the historical references and comments thereon. It is quite evident that to conceal the plagiarism, the name of Apollonius was suppressed.

THE DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND:

An attempt to show that all Organic Beings are both Constructed and Operated by the Dynamic Agencies of their respective Environments.

By JAMES B. ALEXANDER.

Over 400 illustrations, 87 chapters, 1,067 pages, and a 3-column index of 11 pages.

Price, express prepaid by us, only $2.75.

This work endeavors to embrace the field covered by thousands of books, such as those of the "Humboldt Library of Science," the "International Scientific Series," etc., by bringing together, in simple and direct form, with proper correspondence between them, all of the known factors contributing toward the origin and evolution of organic beings.

Do you wish to be well informed? THEN READ A CHAPTER OR VERSE DAILY FROM THIS BIBLE OF SCIENCE!

It is entertaining as well as enlightening, and will lead you to "worth-ship" (worship) nature —i. e., appreciate the worth of the Universal Mother.

You must own this book some day: why not NOW?

RELIGION A CURSE, RELIGION A DISEASE, RELIGION A LIE.

By Samuel P. Putnam.

Dedicated to the American Congress, of 1892, which for the sake of Religion, Stabbed Liberty to the Heart.

A work burning with indignation inspired by the Congressional act closing the World's Fair on Sunday—an act which practically united the government and the Christian church.

To which is added Mr. Putnam's address delivered before the Columbian Exposition Committee of the House of Representatives against Sunday closing.

Also the following Essays and Poems by Mr. Putnam, which have never before been put in book form: Orthodoxy; Freethought; Man, Not God (written for a Paine anniversary); The Statue of Liberty and Thomas Paine; a poem written for the opening exercises of the Silverton, Ore., Freethought Hall; Death and Life; The Golden Age; Shut the Door (a poem on the closing of the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia, in 1876).

The main essay in this work is one of the strongest arraignments ever made of the religion which cramps and fetters the minds of the people of this country. It should be distributed widely. It has been commended in the highest terms as it appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER and we hope every reader will buy a copy to lend his neighbor and arouse thought.

A NEW BOOK.--AND A MOST ORIGINAL ONE.

The Creation of God.

By DR. JACOB HARTMANN.

An explanation of the origin of the God Idea, and the mental processes that led to the formation of idols and the worship of them. From the time of Terah's apostasy, Abraham's reformation and his banishment for heresy and blasphemy against the Chaldean idols, to Christ's coming, the principal characters are analyzed and shown to be human, by thought and deed. It is made plain that the peculiar phraseology, cant sayings, subterfuges, miracles, wonder-workings, and supernatural padding are the proper offspring of the then existing barbarism, ignorance, and superstition, constituting the peculiar politics of the day.

PEN PICTURES OF THE WORLD'S FAIR.

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

It is, besides being a complete Guide-Book, the best description of the Fair yet given—poetic, beautiful, accurate. It describes the inauguration ceremonies, gives the director-general's address, the efforts to close the Fair Sundays and the triumph of the Sunday-openers; describes the various buildings and what they contain, and is, all in all, the very best picture of the Fair that can be painted with a pen.

ILLUSTRATED.

A MAP OF JACKSON PARK, enabling the visitor to make his way around, and the stay-at-home to see where he went.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE FAIR, enabling one to comprehend at a glance the magnitude of the Exposition, the greatest ever known to the present time.

Gems of Thought.

WE believe in telling the truth even to the young.—Unity.

THE opinions of some men are merely a lot of bad habits.—Galveston News.

IT is better to know more and believe less than to believe so much and know so little.—Boston Investigator.

HUMANITY to animals is a duty reposing on the same foundations as the claims of man to humanity.—Bentham.

WE repeat that the Bible cannot be the test of truth, but truth must be the test of the Bible.—Christian Register.

IT is only by the unremitting performance of individual duty that any public evil will be remedied or any public good accomplished.—A. W. Tourgee.

FOR myself, I do not believe in any revelation. As for a future life, every man must judge for himself between conflicting vague probabilities. I am not the least afraid to die.—Charles Darwin.

IF a Christian tells you of the persistency of superstition, point out to him the anti-Semitic feeling which has come down through the ages, and still characterizes enlightened people.—Jewish Exponent.

THE simple fact is that in the seventeenth century, as in the centuries which preceded as well as those that hav followed—in Massachusetts just as much as in Spain—discussion, the antagonisms of thought and idea, were no less necessary to mental activity and development than was atmospheric movement to air purity. —Charles Francis Adams.

WE are amazed that the opponents of the parochial school system say so little about the necessity of making our public schools more American and less Protestant. The child of the Catholic should in every way be treated as considerately as the child of a Protestant. The whole atmosphere of the school-room should be sacredly kept clear of sectarian influences. There should not be a word read nor a prayer uttered, as a religious exercise, for who can read the Bible or make a prayer without injecting his peculiar belief into the reading or the prayerful utterance?—Progressiv Age.

PROGRESS is a matter of race, and is most strikingly visible in Teutonic peoples and under Teutonic rule; yet it is not denied that in Teutonic peoples the decay of belief is most marked. Speaking of these peoples, Cardinal Newman declared, with exaggerated gloom, that, unless a new revelation came from above, Christianity would disappear before the end of the century. Ireland and Spain, the two most entirely Christian nations, do little or nothing for civilization—nothing for the collectiv intelligence, nothing for the collectiv conscience, nothing for the collectiv well-being. Ireland mutilates dumb animals; Spain meets cholera with the crucifix and religious processions.—Furneaux Jordan.

FORMERLY, that John Smith might cross a river, some other John Smith must be sacrificed by being built up in the bridge, otherwise that edifice would not stand. Just think of it. By the olden bridges over our streams we cross on human bones. It is believed that you may now cross a stream in safety without such sacrifice being made for you; but there are still a goodly number among us who believe that the bridge which leads over from time into eternity is not safe apart from the belief that a certain personage was sacrificed, and, as it were, built up in that bridge. We hav among us an educated class of professional men, who make their living by enjoining upon us to lay stress on the fact that this personage was built up in the bridge between Life and Death, and that it is perilous to set foot on it lacking that belief.—Saladin.

A COMELY face hath Nature, but no heart.
None! Are you sad? She smiles. Is your grief past
And gladness come? Her skies are overcast.
In your chameleon moods she hath no part.
Praise her—your warmest words will ne'er impart
A flush the more to her full loveliness;
Flout her, and she will offer you, no less,
Flowers, fruitage, all the affluence of her art.
Die, she will send her merriest birds to sing
Outside your window, and, upon your brow,
Shed showers of sunbeams, bright overflow;
Go down into your grave, no cloud will fling
Its shade in sorrow that your tale is told—
She is a comely mother, but stone cold.

—T. Westwood.

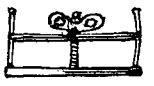
Col. R. G. Ingersoll's ARGUMENT



IN THE

Reynolds Blasphemy Trial,

At Morristown, N. J.

This is the greatest argument ever made in a case of this kind, and will be a model for the Bar so long as the Christians use force to repress free speech. Its legal acumen is unsurpassed, its eloquence never equaled. Wherever Christian persecution is going on this argument should be freely circulated, read to the Christians, and expounded on every occasion.

Darwin and After Darwin.

An Exposition of the Darwinian Theory.

By GEORGE J. ROMANES.

A systematic Exposition of what may be termed the Darwinism of Darwin, and intended to be of service to the general reader rather than to professed naturalists.

Mr. Romanes is well known as one of the most interesting of English writers upon evolution, besides ranking with Professor Huxley in scientific knowledge and ability. And this is a part of his conclusion regarding the great subject of Design, to which the church so often refers:

"Thus whether we look to the facts of adaptation or to those of beauty, everywhere throughout organic nature we meet with abundant evidence of natural causation, while nowhere do we meet with any independent evidence of supernatural design. . . . Adaptation and beauty are alike receiving their explanation at the hands of a purely mechanical philosophy. . . . All nature has thus been transformed before the view of the present generation in a manner and to an extent that has never before been possible; and inasmuch as the change which has taken place has taken place in the direction of naturalism, and this to the extent of rendering the mechanical interpretation of nature universal, it is no wonder if the religious mind has suddenly awakened to a new and a terrible force in the words of its traditional enemy—Where is now thy God?"

News of the Week.

FRANÇOIS COPPEE, French poet and dramatist, is dead.

THE Thompson-Houston Electric Company, of New York, has passed into the hands of a receiver.

THE district court at St. Paul has declared the Minnesota Anti-Ticket Scalpers' law unconstitutional.

GEORGE W. CHILDS, the philanthropic editor of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, died last week from an attack of paralysis.

AUGUST VAILLANT, the bomb-thrower of the French Chamber of Deputies, was guillotined on the morning of February 5th.

GOVERNOR FLOWER has approved the bill appropriating $1,000,000 for new parks in New York and work upon them will begin at once.

THERE has been considerable rioting in the Mansfield coal district of Pennsylvania during the last ten days. Some lives hav been lost.

ROSINA VOKES, the actress, died in England on January 27th. She was the youngest and considered the best of the famous Vokes family.

THE Supreme Court of Iowa reaffirms its decision that the prohibitory amendment to the state constitution was not legally adopted.

GOVERNOR TILLMAN, of South Carolina, has some of the state militia under arms to defend the constabulary in enforcing the dispensary law, and deaths hav occurred.

DR. MOOR, of New York, has discovered that permanganate of potash is a perfect antidote for the poison of morphine, if taken at once and in a quantity equal to the amount of morphine swallowed.

IN Rio Janeiro harbor Admiral Benham, of the United States navy, threatened to sink the insurgent warships if they continued to fire upon our merchantmen. Admiral Mello said he would yield to superior force.

JUDGE DUNDY, of the United States Court for the Nebraska district, has fixed the reduced scale of wages for the U. P. Railway employees, and enjoined them against striking. Of course, when men in government employ strike it is practically rebellion.

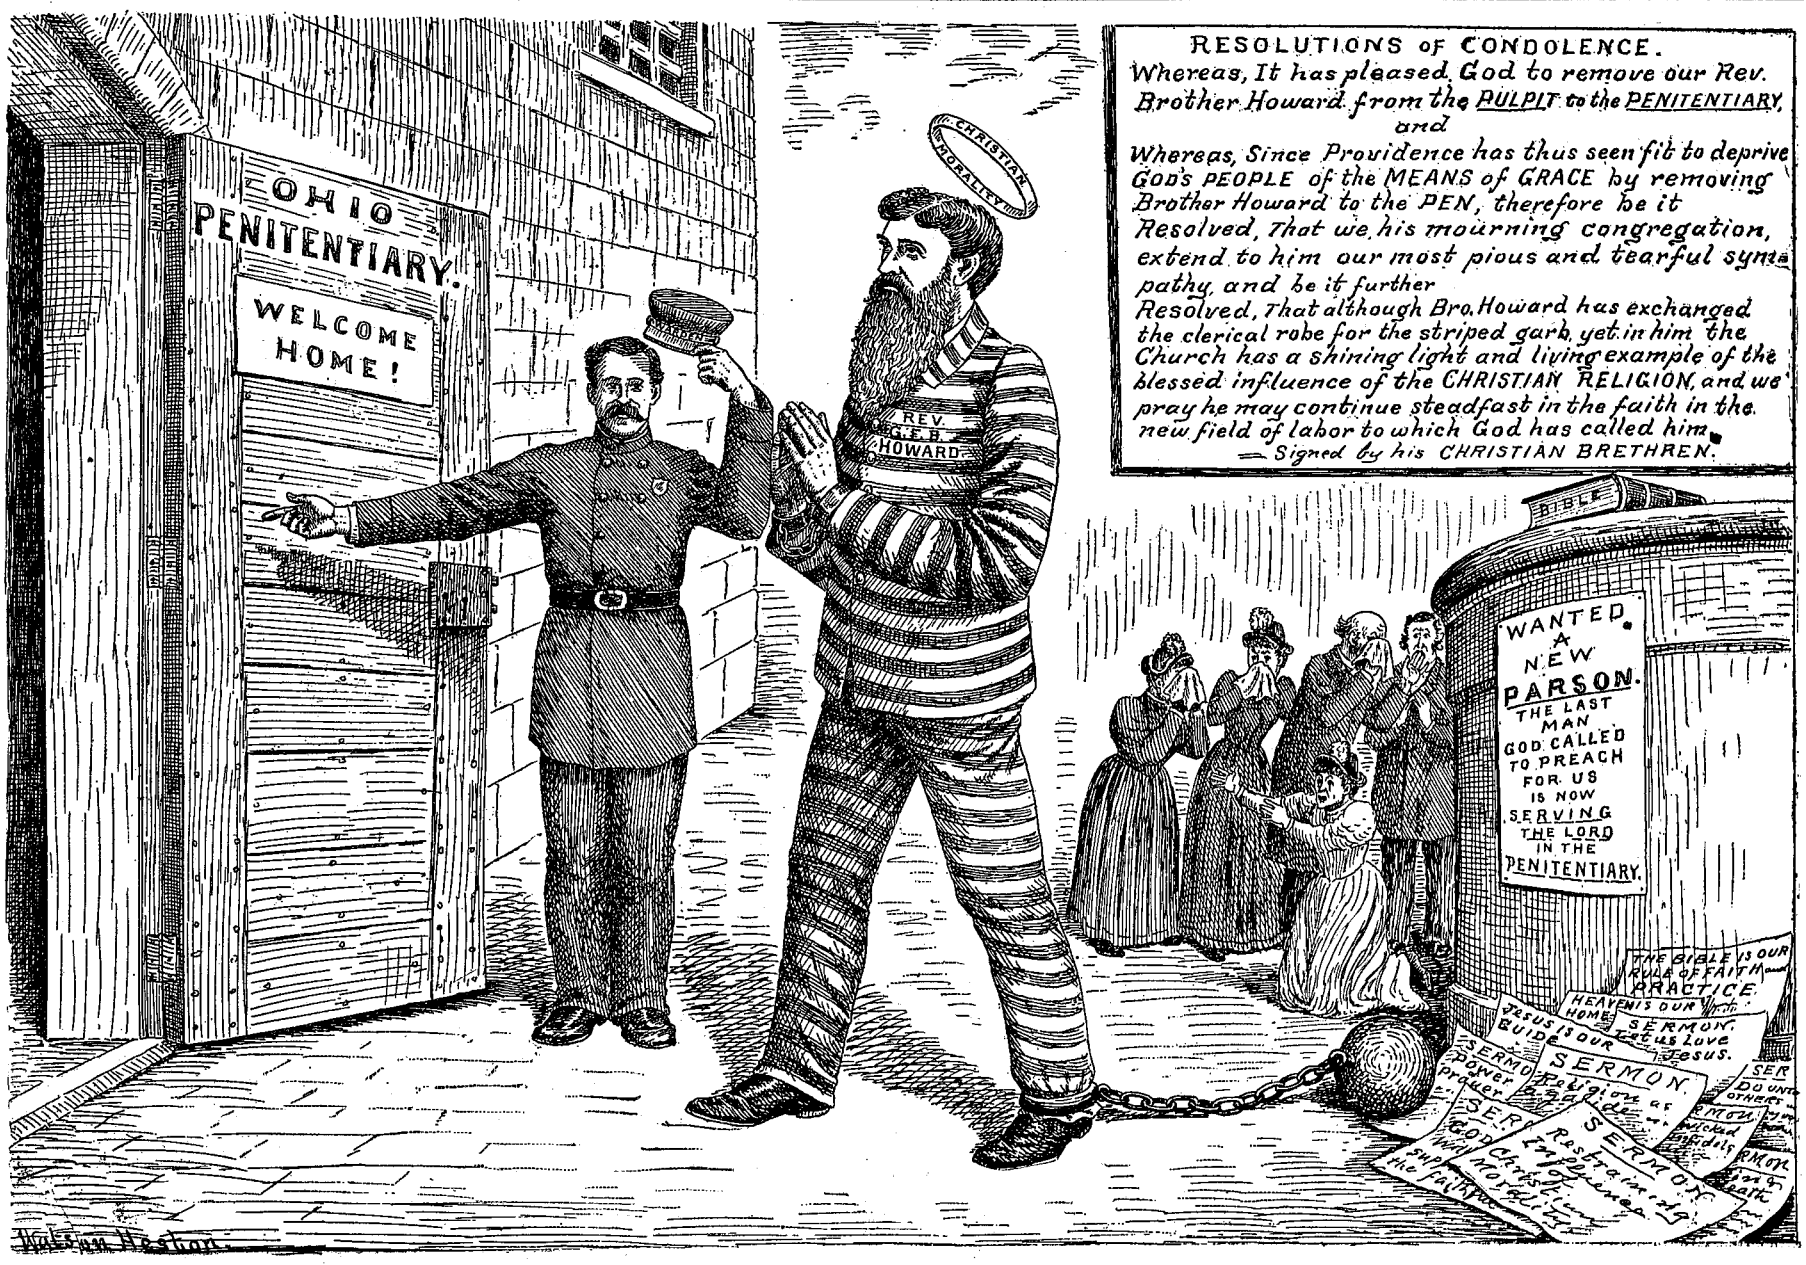
GEN. FRANÇOIS MANIGAT, who has been plotting to overthrow President Hippolyte, of Hayti, was arrested at Kingston, Jamaica, on January 29th, just as he was leaving that city to go aboard a vessel that had brought arms and ammunition for him from an American port.

THE Wilson Tariff bill, with the income tax rider, passed the House of Representativs on February 1st by a vote of 204 to 140. The affirmativ vote was cast by 195 Democrats and 9 Populists; the negativ by 122 Republicans, 17 Democrats, and 1 Populist (Newlands, Nev.).

THE hard times hav closed 1,000 saloons in Chicago. In some of the factories a North Side coffee house will leave at noon huge cauldrons of hot soup and coffee, which will be sold at two cents a pint. This procedure will, it is hoped, hav some effect against the alcoholic evil.

LAST week it was stated that in the 150 cells of the Tombs in this city were confined 550 prisoners, and only one narrow cot in each cell. The dilatoriness of the Court of General Sessions and the assistant district attorneys is the cause of the crowded condition of the prison.

MAYOR HOPKINS, of Chicago, says that Chicago is on the verge of bankruptcy. The comptroller's estimates must be cut down $3,000,000 if the municipality is to maintain its credit. The mayor declares that the assessors stand in with the capitalists; he also says that official salaries must be reduced.



ON January 29th twenty-four of the inmates of the Camden County (N. J.) Almshouse were turned out into the storm after working hard all day, because they presented a petition for more food. All they had been given were one spoonful of potatoes, one small cup of coffee, and one slice of bread. The grand jury is investigating.

THE English House of Lords has adopted two amendments to the Employers' Liability bill, one providing that workmen in trades who hav insurance funds to which their employers contribute be allowed to contract out of the provisions of the bill, and the other that if the insurance funds are not sufficient, and the employers are not willing to make up the deficiency, the workmen may hav their remedy by action at ordinary law.

With Daughter's Babe Upon His Knee.

A new edition of that splendid prose poem, "Life," by "the prince of orators," Col. R. G. Ingersoll. It is larger and better than the old edition, and can be framed or placed upon the table as an ornament. In the center of the card appear the portraits of the Colonel and the baby, surrounded by the prose poem, which has been truthfully described as, "one of the masterpieces of the orator and poet, who now, as far as we know, stands alone in the living world." It will make a delightful present, and will be a souvenir not only of intellectual greatness, but of artistic workmanship. It is printed on heavy board, gilt boveled edge. The size is 12x16 inches, and the price only 75 cents, post-paid.

The Most Magnificent Work Ever Published by the Freethought Press.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The object of this work is to present the Course of Freethought throughout the Civilized World for the last Four Centuries, from the time of Columbus and Bruno to the time of Ingersoll.

It will be a radical Historic Record of the Greatest Developments of the Human Race.

It will reveal Freethought as an Intellectual, Moral, Literary, Social, Industrial, and Political Movement.

It will show what Freethought is in itself and how manifold are its influences, and with what hope and promise we can hail its future triumph.

"Four Hundred Years of Freethought" will Embrace the most Illustrious Pages of Human History,

adorned with the brightest Genius, radiant with the most splendid Poetry, rich with the greatest Inventions and Discoveries and ennobled with Freedom's most shining advance.

Nothing Can be More Interesting,

more inspiring to the Pioneer Workers of to-day—to those who are still in the van for Human Rights and Progress. The struggle is not ended and what is already won must be carefully guarded. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; and from the Past we must ever learn Great Lessons for the Future.

NO LIBERAL CAN AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THIS BOOK.

It will contain the Greatest Thoughts and the Greatest Deeds of the Greatest Men

In One Harmonious and Magnificent Whole,

a vivid picture of man's sublimest evolution, with the added glory of

WOMAN'S EMANCIPATION

from the chains and slavery of a barbaric creed and church.

THE FIRST PART of the book will deal with Freethought as a Universal Power, as a Spirit, a Method, a prevailing but unorganized Influence in every Department of Human Growth.

THE SECOND PART will deal with Freethought as an Organized Movement, especially in America and Europe; and this history is of equal importance with the first, and should be justly understood and the Pioneers of our work recognized.

The first part will embrace the following Grand Departments:

Philosophy.	Science.	Education and Ethics.	Literature.		Government and Politics.		Woman's Emancipation.
Bruno.	Copernicus.	Bacon.	Boccaccio.	Lessing.	Voltaire.	Gambetta.	Madame Roland.
Spinoza.	Galileo.	Comenius.	Rabelais.	Schiller.	Rousseau.	Castelar.	Mary Wollstoncraft.
Descartes.	Kepler.	Pestalozzi.	Cervantes.	Goethe.	French Salon.	Bradlaugh.	Harriet Martineau.
Locke.	Da Vinci.	Froebel.	Marlowe.	George Sand.	French Revolution.	Garrison.	Frances Wright.
Hume.	Newton.	Combe.	Shakspere.	George Eliot.	Thomas Paine.	Phillips.	Lucretia Mott.
Hobbs.	Humboldt.	Spencer.	Gibbon.	Victor Hugo.	Jefferson.	Parker.	Ernestine L. Rose.

THE PORTRAITS OF THESE ILLUSTRIOUS REFORMERS

in every domain of Human Thought and Progress will adorn the pages of this volume.

The Second Part of this volume will be devoted especially to organized Freethought and the Liberal Press in modern times. The Truth Seeker, Investigator, Ironclad Age, Secular Thought, Freethinkers' Magazine, Independent Pulpit, Lucifer, the Freethinker, Agnostic Journal, etc.

It will give a history of the

GREAT INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

at Chicago, the Freethought Federation of America, the American Secular Union, the various state and local organizations, the Canadian Secular Union, the British Secular Union, and other Liberal associations throughout the world.

It will contain the portraits of those who, up to the present time, have been identified with Freethought work—editors, lecturers, officers of societies, and those who, as representative men, have won distinction in other fields of effort. There will be the portraits of

Horace Seaver,	George E. Macdonald,	Capt. R. C. Adams,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Sr.,	Susan H. Wixon,
J. P. Mendum,	E. M. Macdonald,	John R. Charlesworth,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.,	Mrs. Charles Watts,
D. M. Bennett,	L. K. Washburn,	Samuel P. Putnam,	Prof. J. H. Cook,	Mrs. Robert C. Adams,
Parker Pillsbury,	Ernest Mendum,	John E. Remsburg,	E. H. Heywood,	Mrs. M. A. Freeman,
Elizur Wright,	Charles Watts,	Franklin Steiner,	Otto Wettstein,	Katie Kehm Smith,
T. C. Leland,	G. W. Foote,	J. D. Shaw,	Stephen Pearl Andrews,	Lucy N. Colman,
T. B. Wakeman,	Saladin,	E. A. Stevens,	James Parton,	Lillian Leland,
Judge C. B. Waite.	J. R. Monroe,	H. L. Green,	Abner Kneeland,	Amy Post.

and other men and women who have contributed to the advancement of Freethought and whose names should be remembered throughout the Liberal ranks. There will also be about

ONE HUNDRED BIOGRAPHIES,

and in these will be given a picture of Freethought progress which will be most interesting and valuable, for it is in individuals that we find the best interpretations of the age.

The Price of This Superb Book is $5.00,

and not for the same amount of money can there be found such an array of facts, such a survey of history, and such a galaxy of Freethought.

Mr. Putnam is now devoting his whole time to this work and it will be published at the earliest possible moment.

The name of every Subscriber who sends five dollars before the work is on the press will be enrolled in this book. DON'T FAIL TO SUBSCRIBE AT ONCE.

This book will contain

Over Six Hundred Pages of Printed Matter and Over One Hundred Portraits.

It will be elegantly bound. It will be a book for the home and the fireside. It will be a book to give to your friends when they ask, What is Freethought—what has it done and what is it doing in the world?

This is the most universal presentation of Freethought ever given to the public, and no Freethinker can afford to be without it. It is a library in itself.

HOW TO GET

FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT

FREE

SPECIAL OFFER.

We have made arrangements with Mr. Putnam whereby we are enabled to make our friends a most generous offer.

We need more subscribers to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and every Freethinker needs "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." Not all are able to pay $5 for it, but everyone can do a little work to obtain a copy — congenial work, that will do great good all around. This is the offer:

Send us Four New Yearly Subscribers at regular rates ($12 in all), and we will send the Getter-up of the Club a copy of "FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT," FREE OF CHARGES.

And further, to aid our friends in getting this book for themselves, we will offer

To the New Subscribers as a Premium,

post free, a copy in boards of

Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated

By WATSON HESTON,

THE GREATEST BOOK OF ITS KIND EVER CONCEIVED.

Or, if preferred, a copy cloth-bound of

W. S. BELL'S

Handbook of Freethought.

With these Splendid Works as premiums there ought to be no difficulty in getting hundreds of clubs of subscribers.

Remember, to the Getter-up of The Club, FOUR HUNDRED YEARS OF FREETHOUGHT, free.

To each New Subscriber in the club, a premium of a Dollar Book—either "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought," in Cloth—all free by post or express.

This really brings the price of the paper down to $2 to each new subscriber, as they get THE TRUTH SEEKER one year and a dollar book for $3.

A Club of Four New Subscribers and $12 ($3 only from each) does this.

We want to extend our circulation, and we want to help our friends to help us.

It ought not to be difficult to get four New Subscribers in any town in the country, especially with these Splendid Premiums to assist.

Those who get up these Clubs will receive their copies of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" as soon as the book is issued.

Those who send a Club and Four New Subscribers and $12 before the book is printed, will have their names enrolled in its shining pages.

For $3.50 we will send THE TRUTH SEEKER one year ($3) and "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," in board covers ($1).

This is a splendid opportunity to obtain books which every Liberal desires to hav, at an exceedingly low price. Old and new subscribers can avail themselvs of it, and we shall be glad if our present readers will call the attention of their friends to the values offered.

The Sunday-Law Monster.

The Sunday-law octopus is reaching its tentacles around city after city, state after state. Its appetite is prodigious and insatiable. No matter how many or how precious the liberties sacrificed to it, its maw opens cruelly and cavernously for more. The American citizen must make up his mind to kill it or giv up the last vestige of freedom of action on the first day of the week.

In the East and West, North and South, its deadly power is felt. Now it invades the new Northwest. The Tacoma Sunday Ledger of January 14th tells of a decision recently rendered by Municipal Court Judge Reid of that city. "The decision sustains the validity of the law requiring the closing of all places of business on Sunday, and overrules the defendants' demurrer to the complaint. Henry Krech, the Fife hotel barber, will therefore hav to stand his trial upon the charge of shaving customers on Sunday."

Think of it! Do you not feel the impudence, the criminality, the immorality of such a law? Do you wonder that justifiable laws for the protection of person and property fall into contempt when the machinery of the state is used to enforce such infamous statutes as this Sunday ukase? Law should be for the prevention and punishment of crime, for the defense of the weak against the strong. But is there crime when Henry Krech shaves a man who wishes to be shaved? Of course there is not. None but a bigot, a fool, or a knave will maintain that there is. Has any wrong been done to any other person by the Sunday work of this Tacoma barber? No. Every argument in defense of these Sunday laws is the sheerest sophistry, the rankest Jesuitism. It is ethically as justifiable to shave or be shaved on Sunday as on Monday. Only a person steeped to the lips in the grossest superstition can say that the revolution of the earth once on its axis can affect one way or the other the moral character of such an act. Will the inquisitors who are behind these idiotic laws presume to say that the citizen has not the legal right to shave himself on Sunday? And if he has the right to shave himself cannot he delegate the exercise of that right to a barber? Certainly. Just as, having the right to cook his dinner, he can delegate the exercise of that right to his wife, to the cook in his kitchen, or the cook in the restaurant. Of course these facts are self-evident to every man and woman of sense, but, unfortunately, the fools and cowards are in the majority and hence the miserable Sunday laws that disgrace the statute books of almost every state in the Union and the ordinance records of hundreds of cities and towns. If this generation of voters had one-tenth of the spirit of independence which animated the men who founded this republic these iniquitous Sunday edicts would be instantly swept out of existence in a hot whirlwind of wrath, and no man who had raised his voice or cast his vote for them in the chambers of legislation would be again known in public life until he had done works meet for repentance in the sackcloth and ashes of humiliation for his treason to liberty.

The distortion and perversion of the Constitution of the United States and the bills of rights of the states by our modern judges is shameful. In order to sustain a legislativ infamy and so earn the gratitude and gold of their masters they will declare that black is white and white black; they will befog and mystify the plain letter and crucify openly the spirit of the organic law, and so decide as to nullify the whole intent of the framers of these fundamental instruments of defense of the weak. Men like this Judge Reid are a reproach to the bench and a stench in the nostrils of honest men. Are these too strong words? Is this intemperate denunciation? Let us see. The Sunday Ledger givs the substance of the first part of Judge Reid's pronunciamento as follows:

"Judge Reid's decision first recites alleged facts in relation to the case and then quotes the Sunday law. It then takes up the defendant's objection that the law is unconstitutional in that it is discriminating in allowing hotels, livery stables, and restaurants to keep open while forbidding other business establishments to do so, and is thereby class legislation. The decision holds that while the constitutional provision forbids legislation in favor of any particular class of citizens, it does not follow that the act in question affects any particular class, it being directed against certain kinds of business and not in any wise prohibiting all citizens from engaging in the exempted lines if they so desire. The first ground of objection to the validity of the act is therefore decided to be untenable."

We seriously ask every fair-minded man and woman, every friend of justice and civil equality, if the creature who makes the ermin the cover for such contemptible pettifogging at the expense of unoffending victims of legal crime does not richly deserve impeachment and removal? Not only should he be impeached, but he should be compelled to pay out of his own pocket every dollar his outrageous juggling with law steals from innocent men in the forms of fines, costs, and expenses of counsel. Anything short of this is a cruel travesty on justice. His special pleading about "classes of citizens" and "kinds of business" is the very refinement of mental turpitude. No honest lawyer with sufficient ability to be admitted to practice in a police court would giv his countenance to such shystering. Note the cool insolence of the statement that citizens can engage in the lines of business which, so far, are exempt from the operations of the Sunday laws! But suppose that these citizens prefer to engage in some business which is not exempt? Is not that their right under the Constitution? Why should they be robbed and then insulted by some unworthy judge because they pursue a legitimate avocation on Sunday? In the first place, it is none of his business, as a private citizen. In the second place, all such statutes are undoubtedly unconstitutional, contravening both the letter and spirit of that instrument, and he renders himself liable to impeachment and removal by his palpable perversion of the basic law. What unprejudiced person who has any regard for his reputation as a reasoner would argue that a statute which permits the hotel clerk, the newsman, the minister, and the church organist to engage in their usual pursuits on Sunday, but forbids the barber and the farmer to engage in theirs on that day, is not distinctly a class law? Such playing fast and loose with the English language is left for reckless politicians like Judge Reid, and his priestly backers.

"The defendant's second objection asserts that the Sunday law is designed to compel observance of the Christian religion, and therefore illegal; that to be compelled to close his place of business amounts to a molestation and disturbance of both his person and property, and that the religious liberty of the Hebrew would be thus violated by such compulsory observance. The court holds that if he were correct in his claim the law could not stand against his objection, but that he is in error in that the law does not intend to aid or repress any religious sect, but simply to provide a day of rest and to preserve the public health. In support of this the court quotes cases precedent, and disallows the defendant's contention."

"Cases precedent" could be cited to show that attendance upon religious services on Sunday should be made compulsory; also, that the citizen should wear a coat cut in a particular way; also, that a negro has no rights which a white man is bound to respect, and so on indefinitly. Precedents can be cited in support of any tyranny, and when a judge wishes to make the worse appear the better part he can easily find in musty tomes the recorded utterances of other learned interpreters of law who hav reasoned just as sinuously as he wishes to do. They will be at his service as "authorities."

It is a shallow pretense to assert that Sunday shaving is forbidden in the interest of the "public health." It is forbidden in the interest of the church. The "public health" is no more injuriously affected by Sunday shaving than it is by Wednesday shaving. "Public health," whatever that may be, has nothing to do with the question. The shaving of John Smith by Thomas Jones on Sunday or any other day doesn't touch the public. It is a purely private matter. It may indeed be more injurious to John Smith if he shaves himself than if he is shaved by Thomas Jones, particularly if his razor is out of order and he is unaccustomed to the work.

As to the "day of rest," that part of the Sunday question has been canvassed so thoroughly in these columns that it is not necessary to devote much space to it at this time. It is sufficient to say that all the law can rightfully do is to prevent involuntary servitude. If a barber wishes to work on Sunday it is assuredly his right so to do. That is something which he must decide for himself. So long as there are men who wish to be shaved or hav their hair trimmed on Sunday, so long there will be barbers who will be willing to perform those services for them. The law of supply and demand is as operativ here as elsewhere. Whenever statutes interfere with that law confusion ensues, and financial loss and mental and physical suffering inevitably follow, as they do all other crimes.

"In regard to the claim of the defendant that shaving is not a trade, but a necessity, the court decides that such a question could best be settled by a jury trial. He, therefore, overrules the demurrer and givs leave to plead."

Shaving is a necessity to him who thinks it is. No one is qualified to decide for him. And it is a necessity to him on Sunday, if such is his conviction. That is, the judgment of no other person is superior to his own. How absurd, then, to say that a jury trial can determin whether the avocation of the barber is a trade or a necessity! It is his trade, and to engage in it on Sunday may or may not be a necessity to him; that does not matter. Neither is it of consequence whether Sunday shaving is a necessity, absolutely, to his patrons. Almost all persons can suffer many privations and yet retain life, and even be moderately happy, but this capacity for endurance is not a warrant for forcing these deprivations upon them. If A steals ten bushels of wheat from B's granary, his plea that the loss of those ten bushels will not cause B to starve to death or to go without comfortable clothing will not be a competent defense. Quite likely Barber Henry Krech, of Tacoma, will, in some way, manage to survive the adverse decision rendered by Judge Reid, but that survival will not wipe out the fact of the judicial theft of one-seventh of his time, nor will it make less odious the subterfuges to which that mocker of equity has resorted in order to curry favor with the priesthood of unrighteousness.

The Christian Amendment—The Fight Is On in Earnest.

On January 25th Senator Frye, of Maine, introduced in the Senate of the United States, "by request of the officers of the National Reform Association," a proposed amendment to the Constitution, which was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The same day Representativ Morse, of Massachusetts, introduced the same joint resolution in the House, and it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House. Here is the preamble as it will appear if amended:

"PREAMBLE.

"We, the people of the United States, devoutly acknowledging the supreme authority and just government of Almighty God in all the affairs of men and nations; grateful to him for our civil and religious liberty, and encouraged by the assurances of his Word to invoke his guidance, as a Christian nation, according to his appointed way, through Jesus Christ, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselvs and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution of the United States of America."

Senator Frye, its sponsor in the upper chamber, said to the Washington agents of the National Reform Association: "I can see no objection whatever to the bill." Representativ Morse, its steerer in the House, said emphatically; "Gentlemen, I am very glad to introduce this bill, and I will stand by it." So reports R. C. Wylie, one of the corresponding secretaries of the Association. And the Christian Statesman adds editorially: "Representativ Morse is in earnest in his advocacy of the bill. Other members of both Houses hav expressed themselvs as heartily in favor of it."

On February 1st the sub-committee of the House Committee on the Judiciary gave a hearing on the resolution. Revs. T. P. Stephenson and H. H. George appeared before it. The vote on the Wilson tariff bill prevented a full attendance of committeemen. The Christian Statesman reports:

"Several members of the committee, however, were present, including Representativ Stone, of Western Pennsylvania. Representativ Morse, of Massachusetts, who introduced the bill into the House, was also present. A free interchange of sentiment was had for a time, and then a brief and able presentation of the argument in favor of the bill was made formally by Dr. McAllister. The members present expressed themselvs as deeply interested in the matter, and were evidently profoundly impressed with the argument presented to them in favor of such an amendment to the Constitution. The subject was new to some of them."

What is to be thought of the general intelligence of Congressmen who hav never before heard of this God-in-the-Constitution movement? Is it not time that the Freethinkers sent some teachers among them at Washington? What Freethinkers—the enemies of the amendment—should do can be pointedly indicated by quoting a portion of Secretary Wylie's statement of what should be done by political Christians—the friends of the amendment. We must meet the National Reformers in whatever direction they move, and resist them at every gateway through which they attempt to steal into the citadel of our rights and liberties. Secretary Wylie says:

"1. At least two agents must be kept at Washington to watch the progress of events, to arrange for hearing, and to form the connecting link between the people and the Congress.

"2. When the time comes for hearing arguments by the judiciary committee we must send to Washington the best talent in the land to present the strongest pleas possible for the submission of the proposed amendment.

"3. When the bill is reported to the two houses we must flood Congress with petitions urging the passage of the bill. Letters and telegrams by the ten thousand should also be sent to individual Congressmen and Senators urging them to vote for the measure.

"4. When it is submitted to the conventions in the states for ratification Christian citizens without regard to sect or party should labor to secure the election of good men, who are sure to vote for ratification, as members of the ratifying conventions.

"5. Meetings must be held in every city, town, village, hamlet, and country district, to quicken and concentrate the Christian sentiment of our country in favor of this amendment. Petitions must be circulated and signers obtained by the hundred thousand. Every one who can devote a little time, if only a few days or hours, should circulate the petitions for signatures.

"6. Literature treating of this measure must be scattered all over the land, East, West, North, and South, so that the whole people may be awakened and enlightened on this the most important measure ever brought before this nation.

"7. To accomplish all this funds are absolutely necessary. Without money our hands are tied. It is needed to maintain our agents at Washington; to send other agents there to present arguments before the judiciary committees; to prepare and send out literature; to pay postage on letters, etc. Nothing can be done without money."

Freethinkers! It is your work to effectually antagonize, to surely cancel all these forms of theocratic endeavor. Here are the names of the members of the judiciary committees of the Senate and House:

"Senate.—Pugh, Coke, George, Vilas, Hill, Lindsay, Hoar, Wilson, Teller, Platt, and Mitchell of Oregon.

"House of Representativs.—Culberson, Oates, Stockdale, Goodnight, Boatner, Layton, Wolverton, Lane, Bailey, Terry, Ray, Powers, Broderick, William A. Stone, Updegraff, De Armond, and Childs."

Write to these men at once. Do not delay. Write to the member or members from your own state if your state is represented on either committee, but if not, write to anyone you may know, or to the chairmen. Write to both committees. And keep on writing so long as the question remains undecided. Write to other members and Senators. Collect signatures to petitions against this infamous resolution. No man deserves liberty who will not fight for it. Those who can afford the expense would do well to send telegrams to the chairmen or others on the committees.

The House Committee on the Judiciary will giv another hearing on March 6th. It may be that the Senate committee will do so earlier. The committees may consider the resolution the same day. If so, we shall be in a bad plight if we hav but one representativ in Washington.

To those optimists who think there is "no danger" we wish to say most positivly that there is danger, and serious and imminent danger. The political Christians hav heretofore wound Congress around their fingers, and they will do it again and again if the people of this country who are opposed to the union of church and state do not make themselvs heard and felt. It is sheer folly to attempt to make light of or disguise the gravity of the situation. In spite of all the warnings uttered by the Liberal press, in spite of the daily object lessons of church-state triumphs which are given us, the mass of the people of America seem to be under the soporific influence of a deadly apathy or locked in the treacherous embrace of a false sense of security. We confess that we are pained and surprised when we look through the piles of letters we receive and see how few of even our correspondents hav a word to say regarding the crushing, grinding, remorseless juggernaut of political ecclesiasticism. Our people do not seem to realize that for every one thousand scientists, teachers, authors, artists, journalists, and other educated people who hav lost faith in the old dogmas and abjured the leadership of the enemies of religious liberty, there are tens of thousands who are yet under the influence of the priesthood, and that these men hav votes which elect Congressmen, and that Congressmen will cheerfully trample on or patch the Constitution rather than run any serious risks of failing to secure a re-election. Our hope lies in convincing an important fraction of this army of voters that the union of church and state has always been a curse to the world, and that the rights of no minority, Christian or Freethought, are for one moment safe under the rule of a hierarchy which controls the state.

We hav already set the ball in motion, and hope to be able soon to report substantial progress. The first step to be taken by the Federation is to get a hearing before the Judiciary Committees of the House and Senate. We hav written to Chairman Culberson asking that the Freethought societies be heard before the House Committee, and shall make the same demand upon Chairman Pugh of the Senate Committee. This initiates the official, organized work, and now the Freethinkers all over the country should appeal directly to their Representativs and Senators. Do not wait for some one else to lead; go ahead yourself. Only thus are victories won and rights preserved.

Send to us for petitions against this Amendment.

The "Sun's" Work of Supererogation.

The New York Sun, Tammany organ, has come out with a long editorial, evidently written by or at the dictation of an ecclesiastic, protesting against attacks upon the Roman Catholic church by either lay or clerical men.

Evidently Archbishop Corrigan is waxing still more powerful in the councils of Tammany. Otherwise there would be no necessity for this, for the Catholic population does not read and the Catholic business men are the keepers of gin-mills and do not advertise.

Consequently, the defense of the heirarchy by the Sun shows the need of redoubling the attacks upon it.

Wanted—More Subscribers.

We solicit the kind attention of our friends to the need which exists of increasing the subscrip tion list of THE TRUTH SEEKER. There are several reasons for this, which our readers will readily see. First, It will do a world of good, by making more Liberals and by interesting those already liberal in the work of Freethought. The church is making great encroachments upon our liberties, and the people need to know about it, in order to defeat its tyranny. And those who read THE TRUTH SEEKER are a hundred times more interested and activ than those who do not. Second, It is a duty we owe to our fellow-men to giv them the light of reason we hav obtained. Liberalism makes for true civilization, and freedom from fear of an angry God makes men happier and better. Every Liberal should do all he can to lift up his neighbors from the darkness of superstition to the glorious plain of mental liberty. And, as Mr. Wakeman says, referring to the resolution regarding the Liberal papers passed at the late International Congress: "They are the very life of the cause of intellectual and practical emancipation of the people. As such they are to be built up and sustained by constant care, payment, encouragement, and solicitation for subscribers for them." Third, An increase in the list will relieve the readers from the occasional "duns" we are compelled to send out in order to get money with which to pay bills. If we can obtain two or three thousand new subscribers, the increased revenue will make the business work of the paper easier, and we can continue to improve the paper without fear of financial embarrassments.

To reward those who will do a little for us in this matter we hav arranged to take a large number of Mr. Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," and to every one who sends us four new yearly subscribers at the regular rates of $3 ($12 in all), we shall send a copy of that magnificent work free. Those who send the club before the book is on the press will be enrolled among the original subscribers and patrons in the book.

And to make it easy to get these four new subscribers we will offer them as a premium either of two spendid works—The "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated," or W. S. Bell's "Handbook of Freethought" in cloth binding. Our readers know the value of these books, and that about every Liberal in the country would like a copy of one or the other. Either one of these, as may be chosen, will be given to the new subscribers obtained in these clubs of four, and a copy of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" to the one who gets up the club and sends the money and names.

We cannot afford to make this premium to single subscribers, but to enable old subscribers and single new subscribers to obtain these and other desirable works at a great reduction, we hav made a list of premiums in connection with subscriptions to the paper, to be found in the first column of the first editorial page of THE TRUTH SEEKER. We are willing to do our part toward making the obtaining of good Liberal works easy and cheap, and hope our readers will take advantage of the terms offered.

Once more we ask that a favorable eye be turned in our direction, and a helpful hand extended. As the resolutions of the International Congress expressed it, Boom the Liberal papers and you boom the Liberal cause.

Our readers will find Robert Lawrence's "Failure of Christianity" in this issue very entertaining and nutritious reading. He makes several excellent points. Perhaps one of the best is his refutation of the claim that we must not charge to "Christianity" the sins of "the church." In history they are one and inseparable. He also strikes deep the dagger of truth into the vitals of the antinatural moralism of the church.

Beware of the priest in politics. He is there to magnify his office. His ideal government is the theocracy. He will strangle liberty.

Watson Heston givs us something especially noteworthy on the first page this week. The Rev. G. F. B. Howard, just landed in the penitentiary by the United States government at a cost of $75,000, is one of the most notorious and successful swindlers of the decade. His bogus European estates claim agency was one of his best paying specialties. His operations took in the whole field of the United States, and he did business under a dozen aliases.

Next week will appear the regular monthly installment of Charles Watts's "Freethought and Secular Notes from England." Mr. Watts tells us about the condition of labor in England, and what Parliament is doing to mend matters; about Secular education; a blow at priestly domination; children and their "betters"; an instance of successful intolerance; Professor Tyndall and Christian mockery; activity in the theological literary world; death of a Freethought veteran; the "Converted Atheist Shoemaker," and many other matters of interest.

The sore need of cash compels us to ask our friends to renew their subscriptions to THE TRUTH SEEKER at the earliest convenient moment. The "hard times" hav hit us, but we must crawl through them somehow, and we turn with confidence to our readers. The amounts in individual cases are small and easy to pay, but the aggregate is large and we must hav it to meet expenses. We hav made such a combination of books and paper that everyone can get a good deal more than his money's worth, and attention is called to these offers. Purchasing books will help us also. But please renew your subscription now. We need it.

"Representativ Meiklejohn, of Nebraska, has reported from the House committee on Public Lands a bill authorizing the issue of a patent to the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions for certain lands on the Omaha Indian Reservation. Meiklejohn's report was ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union."—Congressional Record.

The union betwee n church and state, we presume, is the "Union" to which reference is made; at least, that would be a fair inference from the nature of the report. The bestowal of public lands upon the church is no new thing. Just here the question arises: Has Congress authority to giv to a church any portion of an Indian reservation without the formal consent of the tribe to which the land belongs? But if the land in question is United States property, there is no question about the illegality of such action as that recommended in Mr. Meiklejohn's report.

"In view of the statement that the committee on ways and means was in session on Sunday, January 14th, a resolution was presented at Joseph Cook's lecture in Boston, on the 22d, making a respectful but earnest protest against such action, especially at this time of financial distress, and when throughout the country there is such a realization of the necessity of divine wisdom to guide the counselors and lawmakers of the nation."—Independent.

"Especially at this time of financial distress" contains all the milk of this Cook's cocoanut. Having need of a quantity of "divine wisdom" in an emergency it is not deemed prudent to provoke to wrath the head of the firm in whose laboratories this brand of wisdom is distilled. The inference is that if there was less financial distress in the country it would not be such risky business for the ways and means committee to hold Sunday sessions! God might forget the offense before the next panic arrived!

Rev. Compton Reade, Church of England, in enumerating the influences which are inimical to that church, and, through it, to the old-time fervid piety and implicit faith, mentions the growing laxity of the Nonconformist bodies, and especially their evident desire to get away from creeds, and he asks: "Is it too much to affirm that creedlessness leads to the abject Materialism of Professor Huxley?" We hav often heard of "cold," and "cheerless," and "naked," and various other kinds of uncomfortable Materialism, but this is the first time we hav met an "abject" variety of a shamefaced genus. What does Mr. Reade mean by the term? We hav thought that Professor Huxley gave evidence of very little abjectness of spirit in his criticisms of the dominant theology. And his life is ample proof of the fact that his refusal to close his eyes and swallow unquestioningly the fantastic theories of the church has not degraded his splendid manhood. It would appear either that Mr. Reade's vocabulary is decidedly limited or that his sense of verbal fitness is very deficient.

"The street preacher, with his gospel of calumny, has invaded the capital of Munster and his blasphemies and insults to the Catholic church sorely try the hot blood of the Corkonians."—Catholic Union and Times.

Doubtless the street preacher is unscrupulous in his attacks upon the Catholics, as he is in his onslaughts upon Freethinkers, for that is the nature of the religious protagonist. When Catholics write or speak of Liberals and Liberal principles and of Protestants and Protestant beliefs they are very careless of facts and make free use of denunciatory and disparaging epithets. For instance, they hav frequently been known to declare that all children born of parents who were married by civil ceremony are illegitimate. It is very probable that the street preachers in Munster hav not uttered a more gross "insult" against Catholics than this which Catholics are fond of hurling at Protestants and Freethinkers alike. It is also not impossible that the street preachers hav said something that is true about the Catholic church. Nothing will more "sorely try the hot blood of the Corkonians." But they should learn to argue with their brains instead of with clubs and paving stones.

Some weeks since we sent to A. W. Archibald, Joggin Mines, Nova Scotia, a copy of "Old Testament Stories Comically Illustrated." Mr. Archibald failed to receive the book, but he did get an insolent postal card note from a collector of customs stationed at Amherst, N. S., a copy of which note we give below, with the official's italics:

"A book, entitled 'Old Testament Stories,' came to this office to your address. I hav laid it aside, to be destroyed, according to instruction, as of 'indecent character.' W. D. MAIN, Collector."

Mr. Archibald writes us that he could easily stand the loss of the book if he knew that the collector had read it. But there is little probability that he did; such upstarts do not often read anything that can improve their minds or polish their manners. They are the legitimate children of centuries of "Christian civilization," and hav as little taste for instructiv reading as they hav understanding of the principles of justice and equity. They pretend to reverence the Golden Rule, but never think of ordering their lives by it when their ignorant prejudices impel them to violate it. This robber on the border does not seem to know that when he condemns our book as "indecent," he stains his sacred volume with the same epithet. However, we must not be too severe upon him, for, as Mr. Archibald observes, the Christian has a very poor cause at best, and "must keep it well guarded, or all will be lost;" and as the Christian has never learned to defend his position by fair argument, he resorts to prosecution and persecution, to calumny, fines, confiscation, imprisonment, torture, and death. These Canadian officials can seize and destroy "Old Testament Stories," but they cannot eliminate those stories from the Bible. Why do they allow the Bible to pass?

The Failure of Christianity.

The religion of any race or nation—the system of rites and assumptions which serves to express its opinions regarding things divine—is precisely an outgrowth of racial instinct, a development of social intelligence. No historic system of religion has ever continued to be ahead of the times, nor has failed to modify and advance in proportion to the evolution of ideas; ever in the rear of progress, conserving the forms of the past, never leading to better things until compelled by the logic of events.

The Christian church is no exception to this rule. It was at the start a popularization or adaptation, and hence a perversion, of a lofty ethical system set forth by the prophet of Galilee. It forthwith ceased to be a radical and revolutionary movement, as with him, and degenerated into a mere sociological phase. It became first a peculiar secret society, having certain set rules regarding conduct, but more especially inculating certain rites and opinions more characteristically Semitic than Aryan. Being a narrow, positiv, and exclusiv cult, like the race from whence it sprang, it attracted attention and respect, as well as persecution, in an age of uncertainty. Finally, after passing through numerous vicissitudes, it came to be recognized as the supreme cult in the Roman empire, and persisted as the papacy through the efforts of crafty men when the Cæsars had ceased to reign.

Thenceforth it held the power. The Saxons and other tribes were conquered by Roman arms, and Christianity—a system of rites and usages—fastened upon them as a condition of treaty. The controling party in the church contrived to destroy and degrade all heretics, pagans, and other nonconformists, suppressed all knowledge not in accordance with its own conceptions, and abolished all customs which in any measure bid fair to hinder its supremacy. Thus resulted the Dark Ages, the Inquisition, the establishment of inhibitions upon human freedom and of such cruel and unnatural moral distinctions as remain to curse even our own day.

The discovery of America—an utter accident, for which we are indebted to the science and the traditions of non-Christian nations—gave a new opportunity and a new impulse to human activity. Thence followed the Renaissance, the revival of learning, and finally the Reformation. The Romish hierarchy, the controling party among Christians, strove to the extent of its power against the new learning. But the activities of men being largely occupied in conquering a new world or in developing the new possibilities of life then revealed, were diverted from "religious" ends, leaving the church only the opportunity to display a fiendish cruelty in attempting to maintain its supremacy. But liberty once tasted to any degree left an insatiate thirst; the church was defied and its power broken.

The Reformation came as a step in advance. Luther, Calvin, and Henry VIII. arose and proclaimed the right of all men to think as Luther, Calvin, and Henry VIII. thought, and as a result arose the several sects and schisms of Protestant Christianity. Some reformers proclaimed the "right of private judgment in religion," but carefully published the Geneva Bible with such annotations as would lead "private judgment" to agree with their interpretations. Thus they "robbed Peter to pay Paul," and the ideas which had been germinating as Freethought for two centuries were crystallized into Protestantism, a new order of authority, an expression of the advanced ideas of the day.

Even as one thousand years before Buddhism, driven from India, left its impress on the later Brahminical thought, so Protestantism "broadened" Romanism, and as a result came the Douay translation of the Bible and the various Catholic apologies, which with the self-same pretense at liberty sought to control and fasten thought.

In course of time, after the Inquisition had ceased its vain fury; after Calvinists were tired of persecuting Socinians; after the Puritans, driven from England, had settled in America, and had done molesting the Quakers; after freedom of thought was to a degree an established fact, new germinal elements appeared in humanitarian and scientific interests.

These were movements which hav inestimably benefited the world, but against which all the churches fought until defeated, then sought to conciliate and absorb. They are in no sense the outcome of any religion, but the result of a broadening of life, and an opportunity for the development of every faculty such as never existed before within historic times.

As result has come the independence, frankness, honesty, and refinement, moral and intellectual, characteristic of present-day thought. The craving for freedom for each and all, mark of our advanced stage of evolution, and diametrically opposed to the notions of the church—whatever those of the New Testament may hav been—has freed the negro slaves, despite popular opposition and clerical denunciations at the time, and now looks to larger freedom in the social and moral reforms which the churches hav left unnoticed during all these twenty centuries, and which, even now, only the more "liberal" handle at all, directly or indirectly.

Yet, typical of its hypocrisy in all ages, the church to-day is awakening to the "humanitarian interests," establishing social clubs, mutual improvement societies, guilds, and missions, patronizing industrial schools—all very good works—and then turns and bids us see the "wonderful way in which she leads men," after borrowing the ideas of those she has denounced Trade guilds and mutual improvement societies hav existed, we know, much more than a century. Yet scarcely twenty years hav passed since they were called "worldly," and apart from the church, whose only duty was to "save men's souls." And this same attitude is still maintained by certain conservativ bodies of Christians. It is thus evident that the church urges a false claim, and deserves no credit for co-operation on these lines of work, since, like former concessions, they are merely self-preservativ.

The matter is indeed characteristic of an exceedingly insidious and hypocritical phase of present-day thought, an apparent adaptation of religion to present needs suitable to concealing the same old outgrown orthodoxy with which they are incompatible. The school mostly patronizing the humane movements is that known as "liberal," a word dear to many advanced souls among us, but utterly false in application here, a mere foil or sugar-coating. "Liberal orthodoxy," so-called, is loud in proclaiming that "religion is, in essence, justice, mercy, truth, and freedom;" yet upon closer investigation offers nothing but the form, the shell of that same old orthodoxy which in history has been characterized by none of these virtues, but hostil to them all.

This recent attempt to combine external and social interests with the church is of necessity a failure, and proof sufficient that they are not an outgrowth of ecclesiastical life. In their logical outcome they lead to a form of culture entirely modern and characteristic of an utterly new religious type. The church may do good work in these directions and become one factor in the growth of the new order, but it is working against its own ends, and must presently renounce its traditional standards or be left behind in the progress of evolution. The fact cannot be concealed that the restlessness of our day calls for a moral dynamic which theology, with its metaphysical assumptions, cannot afford. It is a movement which involves utter denial of the traditional notions of sin, virtue, salvation, retribution, man, and God. It is steadily away from them, and is avowedly or tacitly seeking substitutes.

The age has done with supernaturalism and "mysteries" and looks for a faith, born of science and philosophy, which shall teach the unity of nature. The quest is for an "inner imperativ" to duty which shall culminate in the new humanity, a type as far above the civilized man of to-day as he above the savage. The world has seen enough of legislation and imperativs which control by merely outward force, and seeks for culture of the moral sense as opposed to restraint, development of every faculty as opposed to suppression of any. It only perceives the fact that "sin"—that greatest of bugaboos—is merely a phase of the undeveloped involutions of humanity, and not a thing to be cured by quasi-magical rites, or controled by priestly threats or legalized brutality.

The church cannot, unless utterly changed—and that means destruction of tradition—furnish this element to progress. Although professing to draw all standards from the New Testament, and to perpetuate its ideals, it has never ruled by "touching and regenerating" the heart of man, it has never influenced the world as a religious force, but, apart from its cult of ideas and superstitions, has ruled as a political machine, engineering each "moral reform," as it does to-day, by influencing the lawmakers. That the church in these matters longs more for the perpetuation of her own standards and power than for the good of humanity is demonstrated by her methods. Existing evils are not treated wisely and calmly, "overcome with good measures" as was Jesus's principle, but opposed by the armed force of law. It may be very well to restrain wild animals and savages by compulsion, but when civilization advances these restrictions become burdensome and hurtful, restraining growth and development, and shackling the spirit of humanity with "burdens grievous to be borne." The church has ever treated men as savages, or worse, as beings utterly depraved, and has thus provided no opportunity for their advancement. The false standards and the abominable inhibitions she has set up for homage hav done nothing whatever to eliminate the hideous depravity, the miserable poverty, the vile sycophancy, and the despicable greed which characterize the civilization of every Christian land, no matter about others.

As against this assertion we are bid to consider the moral superiority of our civilization over that of our Greek and Roman predecessors. Our attention is particularly called to the "Christian home," the "elevation of the female sex," and the "broad fellow sympathy among men as expressed in charities," etc. But in the first place these generalizations are founded upon a few assorted instances of ancient depravity of local or doubtful origin, as against scores of instances to the contrary suppressed. They are based first upon the assumption that even a "heathen" state could stand with no recognition of the cardinal virtues of society, and second, that these virtues could possibly hav been inaugurated at any one historic period—absurdities none too great for "Christian faith." Again, they ignore and gloss over the fact that advancing civilization and refinement tends, up to a certain point, to soften and modify old abominations rather than to eliminate them. Thus from the age of chivalry comes that prurient and utterly unreal "homage to womankind" which, kindly granting a few privileges, none the less merely conceals the fact that she is still the toy and slave of man—a form of elevation which amounts to nothing. We are still savages, only in a softer, gentler way.

As for the "charity" which seeks to better the poor and oppressed by doles of goods and gold, that is and long has been a favorit method of securing public credit. The New Testament, most of whose precepts are ignored and explained away, inculcates this as a minor virtue, and thus, although the real spirit of love is dead, the letter is supposed to be obedience. Rich men giving large amounts from immensely larger stores are lauded as generous public benefactors—which end they seek and rejoice in—but those who giv all that they hav, unless it be a huge amount, are overpassed and forgotten. Some, to be sure, giv all for humanity, even life itself; but if the merit of these few among myriads is the credit of the church, of what use is such a church when the myriads still sin on? The fact is, if the church could exercise the same influence in moral and spiritual spheres that it does in the matter of controling opinion and influencing legislatures there would be no unbelievers, and no sinners. But this it does not and cannot. For two thousand years its power has gone to other ends, and now it is rather late to retrace its steps.

The fact need not be denied that throughout its entire history the church has shown far more desire to aggrandize itself, and the mere name (not the character and spirit) of him she called "God," than to provide for the needs of suffering humanity that looks to her for comfort.

Of course, being the self-appointed guardian of the New Testament writings, it has not failed to influence many individuals who were already possessed of proper and normal tendencies, but it has never been anything more than a "guardian;" it has failed utterly to incarnate and express the New Testament principles. It teaches flagrant absurdities in the face of the evident sense of scripture, and has prostituted the gospel (the glad news) it professes to preach into a maze of superstition and a synonym for intellectual slavery, misnamed faith.

The principal matters referred to in the "moral superiority" argument are certain personal actions, in regard to which statistics are worthless. The "Christian home," and this is not expressiv of universal happiness, fortified by the "sacrament of holy matrimony," is, so far as not human alone, a product of superstition working upon law. The vast amount of the so-called "immorality" of the later Roman empire arose from the abuse of the freedom all men then rightfully had in regard to marriage and divorce. The church perceiving that any degree of personal freedom was hostil to her sway, proclaimed marriage an unbreakable contract (that was after 1200 A.D.), and a sacrament, in violation of Old Testament tradition and obvious New Testament spirit, foisting it among other forms of slavery upon the world. The untold misery that has resulted from this one fact would fill libraries with horrible narations; yet the form, the letter of morality was preserved, and that was all the church could accomplish or appreciate. If it were otherwise, and the church proclaims the "glorious liberty of the children of God," why does it so fearfully deplore the increase of divorce, itself a mark of that spirit of liberty in souls who will not tolerate the ungodly oppression of an unhappy and hateful marriage? Yet churchmen do deplore this fact as a "mark of growing immorality." How do they make clean the exterior, when they cannot reach the hopeless filth within! How do they call down upon themselvs the condemnations of "their master" against their Pharisaical prototypes!

The church has ever professed itself a moral and spiritual—i. e., having to do with quality of motivation—agency, and as such it is a failure, as such it is dead. Rejoicing in the law-compelled forms of morality, it "boasts many things of itself," and points to our advantages as against the abuses of freedom or the excesses of savages. Macaulay has said that "freedom is the only cure for the evils produced by freedom," and surely compulsion has never demonstrated its superiority. Yet the church has ever ruled by compulsion alone, either in superstitious threats or legal force. It cannot do otherwise. Professing to follow one who preached freedom, it is the apostle of oppression.

The church is dead. The child of Roman absolutism has lost its power, has seen the last form of slavery, save that of the mind, thoroughly eradicated in the progress of evolution in the last two centuries, and yet it is to-day striving to use the arms of freedom and progress to maintain that, and will not succeed.

"Christian" activity to-day is not the activity of the church, although striving desperately to keep life in the moribund body. In societies of Christian Endeavor, in young people's guilds, White Cross armies, gymnasiums, reading-rooms, and other missions and charities it strives hard to reflect all credit upon an institution which in direct influence is powerless, and to help retrieve its hideous past. In societies for Suppression of Vice, temperance unions, anti-divorce leagues, and various other meddling compacts it strives to influence the ruling classes to restrain by force of law the moral delinquencies of the majority, and thus compel the observance of "Christ's moral standards." The activity among Christians to-day in forming these moral reform societies is differentiating church influence into hundreds of schisms, which work on even though the church in and for itself is helpless. Christians are building better than they know, yet the church remains, not a conservator of religion, but a huge political machine, a vast superstition trust, an agency for controling and compelling men to artificial standards, a dead-weight upon civilization, and a clog to progress.

Many persons, scarcely realizing their inconsistency, di criminate between the "church" and "Christianity," or between the "church" and individual Christians, calling "Christianity" the "body of teachings set forth by Jesus." Yet the church can hav no raison d'être, except as a vehicle of these, and as expressed by this vehicle Christianity has failed.

The teachings and ideals of Jesus, as properly understood, cannot be outgrown, but honesty demands some other name than Christianity for them—that has stood too long for the perversion they hav suffered, and in proper parlance refers to the church itself. The world looks forward to-day to an ideal of religion which shall truly regenerate—make over—the nature of humanity. It trusts more and more as "sacraments" of life to those agencies which refine and cultivate every faculty; which develop each individual into freedom and power to comprehend and govern self; which elevate the motivation into a sphere whence the actions of daily life may be maintained in healthy and normal channels, independent of law and compulsion. The age wants Mrs. Fuller's ideal "spiritually minded worldly men," men who in Pauline phrase are a "law unto themselvs." It wants, above all things, a real religion, and the need in evolution will generate the supply. The age wants a science of humanity, which shall understand and treat man for his obvious benefit, train him according to his capacity. It wants a system of ethics, an idea of right and wrong, founded upon fact, and not upon outgrown assumptions and harmful superstitions.

This ideal may be, probably is, Jesus's ideal, but we must make no compromise with past mistakes; we cannot call it Christianity. It will recognize the spiritual value of Buddha and Confucius, of the saints and prophets of all ages and nations; it must be the religion of humanity, whose first ideal is the man-divine. Now, in this new age of unprecedented opportunity we may hav perfect faith in the "rising of the sun of righteousness;" the true return of the "Son of man" in "spirit and in power;" the attainment of life's ideal; the putting away of all childish things, our superstitions and our errors.

ROBERT LAWRENCE.

The Problem.

We know not if there be a God;
  Nor know we, friend, the yet to be;
For out of reach of human thought
  Is soundless, boundless, mystery.

We may, from legendary lore,
  Crude, mystic, theories receive,
And in our helplessness declare
  Through self-delusion, "I believe."

But not a dogma, faith, or creed,
  No uttered word or written line,
Can, save by test of proven fact,
  Be claimed immortal or divine.

Belief and knowledge are not one:
  Belief presumes and knowledge knows;
And knowledge is but what the laws
  Of science and of sense disclose.

We know not if there be a God;
  But this we know, that if there be,
He givs the Reason that endows,
  Controls, performs, and governs me.

And as in nature no two things
  Are each to other counterpart,
So differ minds which seek to solve
  The things concealed from mind and heart.

Vain quest; vain waste of mental power,
  This unsubstantial, fruitless strife;
While round us lie to sense and sight
  The stern realities of life.

Enough to know that if there be
  A Power supreme o'er each event,
He must, foreknowing all, exist
  Omniscient and omnipotent;

Who with a flash, a word, a sign,
  Could still the strife that shakes our zone,
And with the splendor of himself
  Replace the unknown by the known.

Since then in ignorance we grope,
  And wisdom infinit wills it so;
Man's true philosophy should teach
  Contentment with the things we know;

And that for man to preach to man
  God's purposes and attributes,
Asserting as historic facts
  What scientific truth refutes,

Is but the arrogance of fools,
  The rash presumption of the weak,
Who claim from rotten creeds of old
  In "revelation's" name to speak.

"But Christ says this—and Christ says that,"
  The casuist argues in reply,
"Surely what God, the son, declared,
  Were revelations from on high!"

To whom I say: first prove thy Christ—
  A proof by doubters long desired—
Remembering, as with other faiths,
  Each founder claimed to be inspired.

But if 'twere proved that Christ was sent
  By God, his people to redeem,
It would but prove that God himself
  Hath failed in his salvation scheme.

For, since the blameless Jesus taught,
  Age after age hath passed away;
And, lo! of all the human race,
  A fraction name his name to-day.

And, of this fraction, who can say
  He stands unshaken by a doubt,
While subtle mysteries, like clouds,
  The truth of prophecy shut out?

And even he who most believes,
  Must feel his footing insecure;
For, if material life be false,
  Why should ethereal life be sure?

I envy not the restless heart,
  The frail, imaginativ soul,
That with unsatisfied desires
  Forever seeks a sightless goal;

That, half in terror of a hell,
  Half hopeful of a heavenly birth,
Lets go the claims of present needs;
  The opportunities of earth;

That, all oblivious of the feast
  Which nature spreads in daily food,
Knows not the hallowed peace that springs
  From utmost faith in utmost good.

Be still, O trembling child of fears!
  Awake, O dreamer of the night!
Arise, and bless the living day
  That sanctifies with healing light.

The golden light of confidence,
  That all is right, that all is just,
And that whate'er the future holds,
  There is no room for cold mistrust.

Be this thy creed: If God there be,
  Goodness and justice are his throne;
Who, knowing all, controleth all
  The mysteries of the vast unknown.

And that a power divine who placed,
  Unasked, our helpless natures here,
Created not to wreak revenge
  In some accursèd future sphere.

If this, my friend, false reasoning be,
  But this alternativ remains;
Our God becomes a hideous fiend,
  And man the victim of his pains.

Away with these debasing doubts—
  With all that lessens hope, away!
Be to thy nobler instincts true,
  And all the laws of life obey.

Stand firm! the world is at thy feet;
  Seek here thy mission, not above;
Liv to lift up each other's lives,
  And build thy heaven on human love.

Friend, think of this, and ask thyself
  If thy professions coincide
With the convictions, calm and clear,
  Which in thine inmost soul abide;

And if they do not, be sublime;
  The knell of ghostly gods hath rung—
Break, break thy bonds conventional
  And giv to honest thought its tongue.

CAROLUS.

Storms, Wrecks, and Special Providence.

The year E.M. 293 has been most cruel and destructiv. The death rate (outside of loss of life by earthquakes and floods) by violence exceeds that of any in my recollection. And the manner of death in many instances has been very cruel. If there is any God, or any being or power higher than man, then he, she, or it has been more cruel than any fiend managing the orthodox hell. The scenes of suffering left in the path of the irresistible and remorseless cyclone, which commenced its destructiv work early in the year, and seemed to hav a peculiar penchant for little children, women, and churches, were enough to melt the heart of an orthodox devil. The floods came next, and in their wild rush seized the weak, the helpless, the innocent, and the beautiful and overwhelmed them together with the strong, the guilty, and the deformed.

Then came the wrecks of boats and steamships on the rivers, lakes, and ocean, and of railway trains on land, with the drownings, crushings, and burnings of the helpless crews and passengers. Infants hav been drowned, or torn, or burned to death in the presence of their parents; wives or husbands within reach of each other, and yet each unable to rescue the other from such a horrible fate.

And in all these cases there has not been a single instance where a God, special providence, virgin, mother of God, son, saint, or other celestial being, power, or anything whatever above or superior to man, has lifted a hand or aided or assisted any man, woman, or child—not one. The question then comes naturally, What is the use of people paying money to build sacred houses, and for an army of over 111,000 ministers to intercede between man and these gods and goddesses with scanty bodices who cannot protect themselvs or do anything for their own support? In all my readings, conversations with people who had traveled extensivly, and in my own travels over continents and islands, through storms, shipwrecks, railway collisions, and the carnage of the battlefield, I hav never heard of or known of any person who was, under any circumstances, aided or assisted except by a human being, a dog, a cow, an ox, or a horse. Did you? So long as the gods of the religionists cannot aid us they are worthless, and it matters not what the "books" are, whether true or false. People are becoming practical. They hav no use for the useless. The burning question is, if applied to business, How much money is there in it? If to machinery, or anything connected with labor or power, What can it accomplish? And right reason would apply the same rules to gods and the entire celestial family. What can they do in making and pushing forward real, live, revolving worlds? What to aid man in protecting himself against the force of the elements? to subdue and bring under his control the elements of the earth? When man is in contention with a superior force and is about to be overcome, what can the theological gentlemen and ladies of the air do for him? The so-called ministers of religion say that they cannot do anything for him. This, then, should settle that question. The entire lot, gods, goddesses, saints, churches, and every person in any manner connected with religion should at once be wiped out, that is, all human laws should be withdrawn from their support. If true, they will remain; if false, they will crumble and decay. Truth is eternal and will remain.

P. V. WISE.

St. Joseph, Mo.

If we would be followers of God and the dear Savior, we must be contended to obey without questioning. They do not want any questioners in heaven. The man who asks questions is an Infidel, and only fit to associate with the devil. He is the wicked angel who demonstrated to our first parents in the Garden of Eden that our Heavenly Father was deceiving them as to the quality of certain fruit.

News and Notes.

Although Delphos, O., is overshadowed by an immense cathedral, and the Catholics are in numerous array, yet the light of Freethought is not extinguished, but sends many a ray into the darkness. The Delphos Liberal Society has a stanch membership, and it purposes to keep things lively for human progress, even under the very shadow of the cross.

The lecturer who comes to Delphos will hav a good time always. He will hav a hearty welcome; and if he happens to be discouraged at the outlook from other points of pioneer labor, he can brace up here with plenty of good fellowship, and feel that this "old world is growing brighter." B. A. Roloson takes the pilgrim at once to hospitable table and bright fireside, and there is all the fun in the world mingled with the "tug of war" for liberty and justice. I giv three lectures at Delphos on Jan. 30th and 31st and Feb. 1st, and the audiences are good from the beginning and constantly increase, although the churches are pushing their revivals, and hold services until two o'clock in the morning. The Christian Endeavor Society prayed until the members got hungry, and then they had supper and went to praying and singing again into the small hours. These all-night revivals will become popular, I guess, they are so much like the dancing parties that sinners enjoy. There's music and the festal board, etc. I wonder if some day they won't dance people into the kingdom of heaven, or win souls by a game of draw poker. If the sinners hav a good thing the saints adopt it sooner or later.

Charlesworth, with B. A. Roloson, started the Freethought organization in Delphos, about a year or more ago, and it has kept steadily on. Its object is "to encourage and promote intellectual and moral development, individual liberty, and human happiness unrestrained by church or creed." This is a broad and practical platform, and there are a large number in Delphos as elsewhere in sympathy with it; but many are not yet bold enough to let the world know just what they do think.

One pleasant feature of the meetings at Delphos was the presence of quite a company from a distance. Mr. Elmer Miller came from Crayon, Ohio, about fifty miles off; and he stayed through all the lectures. He is an occasional contributor to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and advances Freethought whenever he gets a chance. Mr. D. P. Lloyd was present the first night from Fostoria, and J. F. Hanenstein from Lima. Mr. P. J. Lauth, from Southworth, was at all the lectures; and others from a greater or less distance, not residing at Delphos. Delphos is a town of about six thousand inhabitants. Three or four railroads run through it, and it is a good rallying-point.

It has a big cathedral, the largest, I understand, in the state. It can hold a congregation of fifteen hundred. It cost $100,000, and its docorations cost another $100,000. It is simply magnificent—the windows and altars and images and painting. The railing about the altars cost $30,000, and was imported from Italy. I ventured into its sacred precincts with Roloson and other freinds, and admired the splendor and deplored the waste. The Catholics own pretty near half a million dollars' worth of property in Delphos, a square of real estate, with large buildings besides the cathedral.

It is quite satisfactory to discover that the women of Delphos are ready to be counted as Liberals. There were many ladies present at the lectures. Mrs. Nora Roloson, wife of B. A. Roloson, and Miss Dora Brundage, her sister, are stanch Liberals, notwithstanding early Christian training; and they gave a generous welcome to the Infidel lecturer. I must not forget to mention G. Bruno Roloson, three years old, a Freethinker from his birth; born to be an orator, I am sure, for he can talk, and has more sense than some folks older. He believes in equal rights and impartial liberty, without doubt. He attended all three of the lectures, and behaved like a little man, and slept soundly. Louis Eysenbach, president of the society, was at all the lectures, with his family, which count well for Freethought, he having ten children, and the church has not caught one. Two of his daughters are teachers in the public schools. Mrs. H. H. Brundage is vice-president of the society. Dr. Brundage is a Liberal, too. Jos. Roth, treasurer of the society, and his wife are devoted to the cause. W. S. Miller is radical to the backbone. His daughter favored us with music every night, and that was an excellent service. She is a Liberal, bright and early. Mrs. W. S. Miller, Mrs. J. H. Kuhns, Mrs. M. E. Brundage are in the ranks with their husbands; so that the Delphos Society is made up to a great extent of united families, and this is a beautiful feature about it and a source of life and progress. S. G. Roloson, photographer; B. W. Smith, Patrick H. Krutsch, F. J. Miller, N. B. Heidlebaugh, Frank Rye, and others are among those I met here, and the three days of my campaign passed off quickly and delightfully, and I think all feel that something was done for Freethought, intellectually and socially, and that we can look forward with greater hope and determination to do our level best. I am sure I can; and Delphos, with its cheery Liberals, has been to me a very encouraging field of labor.

While I was at Northport I made a statement of the case of an engineer on a railroad in Massachusetts who sued for damages and could not recover, the railroad making the plea that he was engaged in unlawful labor and not entitled to damages. A lawyer present at my lecture desired a record of this case, asserting that such a decision could not be rendered in Massachusetts, for it is a principle of law that the railroad could not make its own unlawful act—namely, making the man work on Sunday—a plea for non-payment of damages. While with Roloson, and by his aid, I went through the records to find the case I cited. It is well known that law books are interminable, and a record can not always be found, and in this case I was disappointed. I am quite certain of the case, and I hope those who know anything about it will hunt up the legal record and let me know just where to find it for future use. But I did find two cases in the law books where the same principle is involved, and which prove beyond question that I was right in my statement of Massachusetts law; and the railroad could make the plea and escape thereby payment of damages; and I will giv these cases for the benefit of others where a like dispute might arise:

The plaintiff sustained personal damages from the negligence of the defendants while assisting them in their work on the Lord's day; in an action to recover for such damages held that the plaintiff's illegal act in working upon the Lord's day was so inseparably connected with the cause of action as to prevent his maintaining the suit (Case of McGrath vs. Munn, Massachusetts).

A conductor of a street railway car performing his ordinary duties on Sunday is both laboring and traveling and can maintain no action for an injury by collision with a car of another company while so employed (Day vs. Highland Street Railway Co.).

This makes it plain beyond question that no workingman in Massachusetts can recover damages for any injury received on Sunday. Was there ever a more unjust law?

I left Delphos on Friday, February 2d, and it was a great pleasure after a long day's ride to meet in Chicago's magnificent Auditorium C. P. Farrell and Mr. and Mrs. Ingersoll, and to listen to this peerless orator of Freethought; and on Sunday night the pleasure was repeated at McVicker's. How the people do throng to hear Ingersoll, and how the old towers of superstition do tumble down when his electric words sparkle along.

On Monday evening, February 5th, Father Thomas Sherman, son of "Tecumseh" Sherman, made a brilliant and passionate plea for the Jesuits. Central Music Hall was crowded to its utmost capacity. Thunders of applause greeted the speaker. He painted the Jesuit as the ideal man, devoted altogether to the good and true and beautiful; a soldier and a saint; a gentleman, a scholar, and a hero. All of which remains to be proved. Father Thomas has a good deal of snap to him, and can fire up like the old warrior himself. The following, reported near the close of his discourse, is rather startling, and it may be well to put it on record as showing the spirit of the Jesuit still. I guess he will bear watching:

WHAT SHOULD BE DONE.

For my part, I hav no apology to offer for the acts of Catholics in vigorous protest against these wholesale vendors of infamy (referring to the American Protectiv Association lecturers). The father who slays the corrupter of his child must be left to the almighty. The man who shoots an Anarchist at sight is a public benefactor. These ex-priests are Anarchists of the worst stamp. They appeal to free speech. If by free speech is meant the right to debauch the minds of women and children at pleasure, then I for one say, Better free bullets than free speech! If America will not draw the line between liberty and license, then America means chaos and old night. There is no right to do public wrong, and every town and village must prevent it. Sue for libel? The evil is done when the suit is begun. Of course I know you will not agree with me, but if the blight of corruption were to threaten your own you would act on the principle of prevention. There are certain questions that cannot be touched in public without doing vast harm. The state exists to preserve public morality.

This is the principle that burned Bruno at the stake, and countless others. It is the same old doctrin that justifies persecution. "There are certain questions that cannot be touched in public without doing vast harm"—namely, such questions as the purity, genuinness, etc., of the papal church. He who discusses these questions must hav a "free bullet." Ah, Father Thomas, you gave yourself away that time. You may put on sheep's clothing, but the wolf will growl. Father Thomas is a Torquemada at heart, a true Jesuit. "Free bullets." Yes, that has always been the policy of Rome. "Shoot an Anarchist at sight." He meant "Infidel," of course.

I am glad to announce that over five hundred pages of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" are now in type, and that the writing of the book is practically completed. Of course there will be the arrangement of the portraits and biographies, and this will take time, besides the binding, etc. But whatever happens to the Secular Pilgrim, the book has been born out of his brain, and I hope it will liv.

Those who hav not subscribed I hope will do so. It will cost two thousand dollars to publish the first edition. I hav devoted months to the work. I feel sure that it will contain information and thought that cannot be found elsewhere in the same compass. I want the help of friends.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Observations.

Concerning visions of the dying, like that attributed to Pasco Hodges, of Wilmington, North Carolina, I hav not read any more sensible remarks than those of Dr. J. M. Buckley. Although Dr. Buckley is a clergyman and editor of the Christian Advocate, he rejects all the superstitions of Christianity except those a professed belief in which is essential to orthodoxy. In his recent book on "Faith Healing, Christian Science, and Kindred Phenomena" he talks like a Materialist. His study of psychical things, including mesmerism, which he has practiced more or less, leads him to the same conclusions, so far as he goes, that were reached by the late La Roy Sunderland, with whom he was well acquainted. Dr. Buckley says: "During the past thirty years I hav seen many die, and many who thought themselvs to be dying who afterward recovered; but I hav no ground to suppose any of the visions supernatural, nor hav I seen any indication of the development of a faculty of cognizing another world." His explanation of death-bed visions is that the vital force is so nearly exhausted as to be incapable of stimulating any of the brain cells except those early impressed; and a dying person is more likely to look backward and see his childhood home than to look forward toward what he expects to find after death. Devout and consistent Christians, Mr. Buckley says, sometimes die in great agony of spirit, while total unbelievers pass calmly away, their minds unruffled by apprehension or remorse. The fact as he states it is that "when the dying appear to see anything it is in harmony with the traditions they hav received." Thus dying Catholics may hav visions of the Virgin Mary, because they hav been trained to supplicate her and hav had her image before them in the church; but she never appears to Protestants who hav not been trained in their youth as Catholics. "Where wicked persons see fiends and evil spirits, they harmonize with the descriptions which hav been given in the sermons, poems, and supernatural narrations with which they hav been familiar."

That is a natural and sufficient elucidation; and it may be ornately said that mental phenomena not susceptible of explanation on this hypothesis are referable to the imagination or dishonesty of those who assert them. Probably in the case of Hodges, Dr. Buckley's method need not be applied. Given a dying unbeliever, an unscrupulous priest, and a reporter hunting for a sensation, and you hav the best raw material and the highest class of skilled operativs for the manufacture of lies that the planet affords.

The Manhattan Liberal Club failed to furnish the press with a list of its lectures for February, and for that reason I did not know that on the evening of Friday, February 9th, Miss Ida Craddock, of Philadelphia, would deliver a discourse on "Survivals of Sex Worship." Otherwise I should hav attended, going early to avoid the rush. I learn from a person who was there that at the close of Miss Craddock's remarks an officer of the club arose and suggested that inasmuch as the lecture was indecent and unfit to be either listened to or discussed, the meeting do now adjourn. Those who, like myself, missed this chance to be corrupted, may be able to make up the loss by indulging in a little moral agitation on their own account; nevertheless, such an opportunity as Miss Craddock's lecture affords cannot be lost, I fear, without deplorably lessening the sum total of human cussedness.

The persistently obtuse silver men continue to display the incorrigible nature of them, by maintaining that it is better for a merchant to pay his bills out of cash in hand than to borrow money for that purpose and pay interest on it. They even go so far as to apply the same principle to the government, arguing that while the treasury contains uncovered and uncoined silver, there is no economy in issuing interest-bearing bonds. They will never learn what a hardship such a course as they propose would work to those who liv without work. The bond system and the banking system exist in such a beautiful and harmonious reciprocal relation that none but a silver man or a greenbacker would disturb it. It is so simple, too! Like the manual of arms, it is reduced to numbers. At number one, the banker buys government bonds, paying for them in gold, and issuing bank notes at the rate of $90 in notes to $100 in bonds, and drawing interest from the government on the bonds. At number two, having turned his own notes and his customers' deposits into greenbacks or treasury notes, he exchanges these for gold at the subtreasury, withdrawing gold from the government, which necessitates the issuing of more bonds. At number three, he buys these bonds, issues bank notes as before, exchanges them again, and goes back to the first position. The present ability of the bankers to double up indefinitly, and also to draw interest both on what they owe and what others owe them, shows what a hardship the silver men, by blocking the system, are trying to work on a worthy class of citizens.

The female sex has been taught another lesson in obedience and silence, and the Rev. Mr. Pelletreau of Ballston, N. Y., is the teacher. The female beneficiary is Miss Vassar, a member of Mr. Pelletreau's church. It is a conceded fact that clergymen want to do all the talking, and it is equally well-known that the average female has some talking ability of her own. So while Pelletreau preached, Miss Vassar conversed in a whisper to other members of the choir. The displeasure of the pastor at this being manifest, the young woman endeavored to consume some of the superabundant vitality of her jaw by chewing gum, which still more harassed the spirit of Pelletreau. When he could endure it no longer, he quit his pulpit, advanced to the center of the chancel, and, in secular phrase, called Miss Vassar down. Then the young woman arose, stiffened her neck, and talked back. Finding that extreme measures were demanded, the clergyman braced himself for a final effort, and thundered at the kicking female the words of St. Paul, "Let the women keep silence in the churches." Fortunately for Miss Vassar, nature besides furnishing woman with a pliant tongue, has also provided her with seating power and superior proportions for sitting down substantially and with comfort. The young lady availed herself of this gift of nature, and subsided. Miss Vassar must yield to Pelletreau in the matter of silence; but the pastor has won only half a victory. Where in the scriptures can be found any inhibition on the chewing of gum?

Does anybody know whether the Friendship Liberal League has ever asserted its interest in the property of Levi Nice, bequeathed to the "Infidel Society of Philadelphia" twenty-five years ago? "Immediately after the death of both my said grand-nieces," says the will of Mr. Nice, "then it is my will that my real estate aforesaid shall go to and be held in fee simple by the Infidel Society of Philadelphia, hereafter to be incorporated, and to be held and disposed of by them for the purpose of building a hall for the free discussion of religion, politics," etc.

A judge named Sharswood, who occupied the bench of the supreme court of Pennsylvania at that time, decided that the will was void for the reason that no Infidel society existed in Philadelphia; and the judge added that it was moreover improbable that one ever would exist. Judge Sharswood, who does not appear to hav had brains enough to sustain a headache, went further, and, in what Mr. Wakeman would call an obiter dictum, said: "The laws and institutions of this state are built on the foundation of reverence for Christianity. To this extent, at least, it must certainly be considered as well settled that the religion revealed in the Bible is not to be openly reviled, ridiculed, or blasphemed. Indeed, a hall dedicated in perpetuity to the free discussion of religion, politics, et cetera, under the administration of a society of Infidels 'would be a nursery of vice, a school of preparation to qualify young men for the gallows and young women for the brothel; and there is not a skeptic of decent manners and good morals who would not consider such a debating club as a common nuisance and a disgrace to the city.'"

The decision that a corporation cannot be formed for the purpose of holding property already bequeathed to it is said to be good law; for it is according to Coke, who, by the way, was one of the most atrocious villains that ever escaped tar and feathers. Nevertheless, if the society existed at the death of the grand-nieces, the fact of its then being a qualified devisee should somewhat modify the relevancy of Mr. Coke's proposition that "a possibility upon a possibility is never admitted by intendment of law." I know that Coke was a bigot and totally destitute of the sense of justice; I know also that he has been dead several hundred years, and that therefore his opinion about current affairs is entitled to great respect; still I think he might safely be ignored in cases where his opinions obviously do not apply.

One of the great ornaments on our system of doing things is the fact that the will of a testator cannot be carried out until some antic on the bench has had an opportunity to consider how it will affect his own interests or prejudices. Probably Sharswood is dead—the lapse of a quarter of a century givs us reason to hope; but as the place where bigotry or idiocy reigned in one generation is often competently filled by hypocrisy or rascality in the next, the probability is that the will of Levi Nice is broken forever.

L. I., Feb. 7, 1894.

THE TRUTH SEEKER Co.: If you are not agoing to publish the book, "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," why do you not return to the subscribers their money?

ONE OF THE SWINDLED.

Friend, you err in roaring against the printers. Address your remarks to Putnam. He promised you six hundred pages, and nothing but some supernatural interference can now prevent him from giving you eight hundred. You must remember that the Truth Seeker Company has a conscience, and therefore cannot return you your money after having agreed to provide you with a book worth so much more than the humiliating sum received. Let out another reef in your patience, dear friend. The great work is just trembling on the horizon, and when it bursts upon you full-orbed, you will no longer regard yourself as one of the swindled. You will be One of the Delighted and Blest.

GEO. E. MACDONALD.

A Book Note.

Speaking of good books to sell, which likewise do good when sold, and also of good men to sell them, we can unreservedly commend "Old Testament Stories" and our friend W. M. Carpenter, who in a small New Hampshire town has sold within the past four weeks one hundred and three copies of Heston's humorous work. The way of the preachers in that town will be a trifle harder this year than last. For which, O Lord, make them, or at least us, truly thankful!

Mortuary—Elizabeth Hart.

Mrs. Elizabeth Hart, wife of William Hart, of Kirksville, Mo., author of "The Candle from Under the Bushel," died at her home in Kirksville on January 27th, at the age of sixty-three years. It was her request that no minister should hold services over her remains. Dr. M. L. Ward read a Spiritualist burial service from "The Truth Seeker Collection." A local paper reports that she had a premonition of her coming demise about a week before the beginning of her fatal illness, which lasted two weeks. She promised her husband, with whom she had lived for forty-six years, that, if it should be possible, she would communicate with him from the beyond. She calmly died in the faith in which she lived.

One of our most welcome exchanges is the New York TRUTH SEEKER. Like other things that come from America—cyclones, for instance—it arrives irregularly. The latest number before us is bright and interesting. Watson Heston continues his cartoons, George Macdonald has his keen pen again at work on the paper, and Charles Watts contributes Freethought notes from England. Mr. Watts says that the National Secular Society, at whose birth he assisted, is "in a better condition in every way than it has ever been." This is a statement which we are not prepared to contradict.—London Freethinker.

The assistant Comstock society, known as the Quadro-Centennial Committee of the United States Senate, has voted unanimously that artist St. Gaudens must so alter his pure design for the World's Fair medal as to make it acceptable to these Senators' demoralized imaginations. We shall be greatly disappointed if Mr. St. Gaudens does not once more and finally inform them that they will hav to find some one else to do the indecent work. What do these would-be critics know about art? Their trade is politics. Let them stick to it. Even there they are only apprentices.

Lectures and Meetings.

J. E. REMSBURG will lecture in Elmira, N. Y., Saturday evening, Feb. 24th. Elmira last heard a Freethought lecture some twelve years ago.

THE Pittsburg Secular Society meets in Curry University Hall, Sixth street, near Penn avenue, every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

W. F. JAMIESON desires to make lecture engagements in Nevada, Utah, and Colorado, along the lines of railroad East. Address W. F. Jamieson, Elsinore, Cal.

THE First Secular Church of Portland, Ore., meets in Central Labor Council Hall, 170½ Second street near Yamhill, every Sunday at 7.30 P. M. Katie Kehm Smith, lecturer. Sunday-school in same place at 12:30 P.M.

THE Ohio Liberal Society meets in College Hall, 168½ Walnut street, Cincinnati, Sunday evenings at 7:45, prompt. Admission is free.

THE WOMEN'S LIBERAL LEAGUE, of Philadelphia, meets in the Skerrett Building, Ridge avenue and Green street, Tuesday evenings at 8 o'clock. Admission free. All are welcome.

S. P. PUTNAM'S lecture appointments:

Chicago, Ill., Feb. 18th, 25th.
Metamora, Mich., March 1, 2.
Toronto, March 4, 11.

Those who desire lectures at any points between New York and Chicago, and in the vicinity of Chicago during the month of February, will please write at once to Mr. Putnam, care of THE TRUTH SEEKER, New York.

JOHN PRESCOTT GUILD gives an "Essay on Giordano Bruno, the Martyr Prophet of Science," to the Spiritualists, Wyman's Exchange, Lowell, Mass., Sunday evening, February 18th, when he would be glad to greet all truth seekers in the Spindle City.

THE Brooklyn Philosophical Association holds meetings every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in Long Island Business College, South Eighth street, between Bedford and Driggs avenues. Program of lectures for February:

February 18th—"Personal Hygiene," Dr. Charles H. Shepard.
February 25th—"Morality without Christianity," Franklin Steiner.

MISS CRADDOCK spoke last Sunday before the Brooklyn Philosophical Association on "Survivals of Sex Worship." It was an attempt to show how largely that ancient worship survives in Christianity, and how little its devotees know it. She also made a plea for more enlightenment on sexual matters, so that the sexes might understand their relations to each other better than they do, and the miseries resulting from present ignorance on this matter be lessened. The audience was most attentiv throughout the address.

FRANKLIN STEINER'S lecture engagements are as follows:

Feb. 18, Alliance. O.	Mar. 11, Boston, Mass.
" 23, New York City.	" 12, 13, Harwich, Mass.
" 25, Brooklyn, N. Y.	" 14, Cotuit, Mass.
" 28, Ellenville, N. Y.	" 15, Osterville, Mass.
Mar. 4, Philadelphia, Pa.	" 18, Boston, Mass.
" 8, Norwalk, Conn.	" 21-23, Northport N.Y.
" 9, Meriden, Conn.	" 25, Newark, N. J.

Mr. Steiner has some open dates for his return trip. Address him, after February 12, in care of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

J. E. REMSBURG is now on his way East. His appointments as far as arranged are as follows:

Feb. 17, 18, Cortland, O.	Feb. 24, Elmira, N. Y.
" 19, Jamestown, N. Y.	" 25, 28, Scranton, Pa.
" 20, Ridgeway, N. Y.	" 26, N. Mehoopany, Pa.
" 21, Fairport, N. Y.	" 27, Tompkinsville, Pa.
" 22, Newark, N. Y.	Mar. 2, New York, N. Y.
" 23, Lisle, N. Y.

Appointments for New York and Pennsylvania, also additional appointments for Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri, will be published later.

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL'S lecture appointments and subjects for the present month are as follows:

February 17th—West Superior, Minn., ... Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child
February 18th—St Paul, Minn., Some Mistakes of Moses
February 20th—Saginaw, Mich., ... Shakspere
February 21st—Bay City, Mich., ... Shakspere
February 22d—Grand Rapids, Mich., ... Shakspere
February 23d—Jackson, Mich., ... Shakspere
February 24th—Battle Creek, Mich., ... Shakspere

GEO. L. PRATT, of Ridgeway, N. Y., writes: "J. E. Remsburg is to lecture here Tuesday, February 20th, at the Universalist church at 7.30 P M., and I want all the truth seekers in Western New York, and especially all those in Orleans and Niagara counties, to be here so we may get acquainted and know each other. I invite all such from a distance to my house for entertainment. If more come than my house will hold, we will adopt the custom in vogue among the Universalists and other Christians, and I know there are plenty of people among my neighbors who will giv free and hospitable entertainment. I hope all who intend to come will drop me a postal-card in advance. Trains pass Medina and Niagara Falls branch of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad both ways between 3 and 4 P M., and two stages come that day. Rendezvous at Adler & Co's clothing store and I will see that the stage drivers of both stages wait for both trains and stop them. Trains stop at Lyndenville on the R. O. and Lake Shore Railroad both ways between the hours of 12.22 and 2.25 P.M. No stage that way. I will meet or send team for any who notify me they are coming that way. Ridgeway is three miles north of Medina and four miles south of Lyndenville."

The many admirers of Mr. Otto Wettstein's writings, which are of the unsophisticated materialistic variety, will be glad to learn that his Congress address on the "Giant Delusion" is now obtainable as a pamphlet for 10 cents.

Letters of Friends.

A Strong Plant from a Sample Seed.

ST. MAGDALENA, IND., Jan. 28, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Some one has sent me a copy of your paper and I like it so much I herewith send money for the same for one year. I hope to be able to send a few subscribers in a short time. Wishing you success, I am, Yours in Freethought,

MRS. ELIZA W. HAINES.

That Live Secular Church.

PORTLAND, OR., Jan. 27, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $3, which pays for paper to next January. I think a great deal of it and could not get along without it. We hav some lively meetings in our First Secular church in Portland every Sunday evening. The hall is filled every time. Wishing you every success, I am, Yours respectfully,

HENRY BENNETT, SR.

Trying to Spur Them Into Activity.

BAKER CITY, OR., Jan. 1, 1894

MR. EDITOR: I send one new subscriber. I hav not the money at present to renew my subscription. Just send the paper right on; I will send the money as soon as I get it. If you hav any tracts for distribution please send some and I will make good use of them. There are plenty of Freethinkers here, but all seem to be silent. I think their silence won't last long if I can get some tracts scattered among them. MRS. M. C. KEYTON.

A Characteristic Offer.

FRIEND, NEB., Jan. 27, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3 for renewal. I would like to send you other subscribers from here, but do not know how to procure them. But if you hav any old or infirm subscriber unable to pay for his paper I will gladly pay for some such.

J. W. GILBERT.

[Mr. Gilbert's generosity need not be wasted, as we are carrying several aged and impecunious Freethinkers on our list. Some of them wouldn't like to hav their hard lines published to the world, so we refrain from mentioning them.—ED. T. S.]

School vs. Revival.

GRAHAM, MO., Jan. 29, 1894

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find postal order to apply on subscription for the accompanying list of names.

The Methodist church of this town has been making an effort to increase its membership. It has been striving for the last four weeks, but so far has failed to cut the mustard. The kind of material used for their purpose is getting scarce in this community. We hav a good school, with three departments, and most of the pupils hav learned their alphabet and multiplication table, which makes it uphill work for the enemy of intelligence.

G. D. MOWRY.

Clergy As Silent As God.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., Jan. 30, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: It is a pleasure to inform you and your readers that Los Angeles has again paid proper tribute to the name and memory of the immortal Thomas Paine. Prof. W. F. Jamieson was the principal speaker on this, the 156th anniversary of his birth, and other talented speakers followed him, with a good musical program. It was a successful celebration as far as oratary and music were concerned, but financially it was otherwise, as we were twenty-one big dollars behind on expenses.

We hav been favored with a course of seven lectures on Freethought subjects by Professor Jamieson, and the possibility exists for a debate on that ever-interesting subject: "Does a Man Liv After he is Dead?"

The clergy are as silent as God since his last conversation with Moses, and they don't hanker after a debate, so far as heard from. C. SEVERANCE.

Trademark of the Free Methodist.

BERRYVILLE, ILL., Dec. 24, 1893.

MR. EDITOR: I hope you will excuse me for being so far behind. Please find check, for which you can carry me a while longer.

I hav no chance of getting into a club; the nearest outspoken Liberal to me is eight miles distant and the next one is eighteen miles away. I hav never had the pleasure of hearing a Liberal lecture. I had the money promised by Liberal friends to hav Mr. Remsburg giv us two lectures, but it soon got rumored that he was an Infidel and I could get no house. I knew if I got Mr. Remsburg we would be sure of a debate, for we hav several Campbellite ministers here who hav boasted in their cowards' castles how easy it would be for them to silence any of those Infidel lecturers.

The Free Methodists hav been raising hell for some time in our neighborhood. They hav a great many converts, but I cannot say that one of them is of good, sound mind. They are recognized as honest people, but they are weak mentally and very easily excited. I know of several who hav lost what little sense they had before they became sanctified.

The Halls of Congress the Temple of Liberty—Perhaps!

OURAY, COL., Jan. 23, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Received all books O. K. I don't know whether you people realize that a powerful bond and gold serpent entered the United States in 1873; that ever since then it has had its head in the United States treasury; that its body has coiled around our industrial system so tight that the time has come when the people must and will kill the reptil, or it will starve the people into industrial slavery. It has invaded the sacred temple of liberty, the halls of Congress.

I am for Freethought, free coinage of silver at 16 to 1, and for free men and free women. The voters of Colorado, by six thousand majority, hav said to the world: Colorado must and shall be the second cradle of freedom, by restoring to woman her natural rights, and partly righting man's inhumanity to woman within the state. Why, if woman's rights were to be voted on again to-morrow, with the honest study that has been given it of late, I truly believe the majority would be twice six thousand.

These are the views of a Colorado miner.

Don't Let the Senate See God's Denuded Arm.

PAULINE, ARK., Jan. 22, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Talmage's wail: "Arm of the Lord awake!" "God has never half tried!" "There is such a reserve force." After contemplating the inroads of Mohammedanism, he yells: "We are looking for the stretched-down, bared arm of the God of nations." This is news. We thought that distinguished person (Talmage's God) had "half tried" when he worked once six days and got so tired he had to rest, and for some time afterwards could only walk in the garden in the cool of the day; when he drowned the world in the cause of morality; stopped the sun to murder; when he wrestled all night with Jacob. But now we know what was the matter—he didn't roll up his sleeve to his shoulder and "bare his right arm." Still we suggest a better way would be to go into training for three months and then strip bare to the belt and try Corbett.

Since I come to think of it, Talmage's prize-fighter has killed but three or four himself. Let us see—there was Er, and Onan, and Nabal, and perhaps one or two more. It was his followers who did the killing, but said he told them to do it. We hope to hear from Heston on that comet's-tail arm.

DR. W. R. BACHELOR.

That Must-Be-Good-Which-Is-Counterfeited Argument.

HARPSTER, O., Jan. 25, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: The tab on your valued paper notifies me that I am slightly in arrears. I therefore inclose $5 for it two years longer. And, as I wish to deal square, I inclose a little slip describing a little "slip." I often try to call my orthodox friends down by calling attention to the frequency of such "slips." But whenever I thus try to call them down, as I was saying, they will come and counter by saying: "These slippers are all counterfeits; the counterfeit game is never worked on a bad bank, and the goodness of the bank is usually in proportion to the number of its counterfeits." Pretty sound logic, I must confess, as to ordinary banks, and if it applies to the great Christian bank it must be sound indeed. But I come back at them again by saying: Banks themselvs detect these counterfeits on sight, or if they can't, and there are many counterfeits, they hav to go out of business and wind up their affairs; while the Christian bank, having ignored Mark's casting-out-devils, speaking-with-new-tongues, taking up serpents, drinking-any-deadly-thing, laying-hands-on-the-sick test, they hav no means under heaven given among men whereby they can tell a genuin from a counterfeit Christian until he has done his deviltry and is caught "dead to rights" at something that causes weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth in a whole neighborhood, and at something that he would not hav had an opportunity but for the church's garment of sheep's clothing.

Therefore don't you think, Mr. Editor, that the logic of the argument carried fairly out requires that the "true church" should either resurrect the said casting-out-devils, etc., "detector" ("detectors" —that's what they called it in wild-cat banking times), as it is wont to resurrect the old savage Puritan blue-laws every now and then, to worry and torture good men for no other offense than carrying brains too large to grapple a lot of Munchausen nonsense, unsupported by any evidence such as would be admitted by a backwoods justice of the peace to prove the least material fact in a dog-fight case. Don't you think they had better, with other fossils, resurrect Mr. Mark's casting-out-devils, etc., test, find some other equally potent one, redeem or atone for the deviltry of the counterfeits their stamps keep in circulation, or go out of business, turn over the church property to atone, and round up so that a long-suffering church and god-tax ridden people may be rid of the ravages of these omnipresent wolves in sheep's clothing, and which they would be rid of but for the sheep's clothing?

Awaiting your views, I remain your ancient patron, CYRUS SEARS.

Rather Rough on the Parents.

LONE ROCK, OR., Jan. 15, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $1.50, which is all I hav. I hav been waiting to get some money that is due me, so that I could send you $6.50, which would pay for my paper two years, as I hav always sent before, and would also hav given me a copy of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," and also enrolled my name in Brother Putnam's great book, which I should consider a far greater honor than to hav it enrolled in the lamb's book of life. But if I cannot get what is coming to me, I cannot pay what I owe you, and then those fellows down town will suffer, as creditors do here, and so we all become rascals together. However, you can set this $1.50 to my credit on subscription to the glorious old TRUTH SEEKER, and if I do not send the remainder when the time is out, stop my paper and I will go without if it kills me; I would rather die than sponge my reading off the struggling Liberal Editors of to-day. The Liberal cause out here has a gloomy outlook; three churches organized in our little town, and the people nearly destitute, and now we hav got a God house stuck up in our midst. I call it the Lone Rock Imposition, when the lambs come bleating around me to get my opinion, for I am out of patience with their tomfoolery. We hav had one after another of their different kinds of fingerboards in here this winter holding protracted meetings in our school-house and disturbing our school, drawing the children's attention from their studies. How they would kick, and not without cause either, if we had a dance every night in the week to prepare the children's minds for study next day! They cannot hurt me through my own children, for they can no more affect them than they could wet a duck by pouring water on its back, but I feel so grieved to see the bright young minds filled with such silly rot instead of common sense, and I think we hav the brightest lot of children here of all the places in which I hav lived. I think they hav taken all the sense their parents ever had and left them destitute. I do hope that the time is not far distant when the sun of science and not the sun of righteousness will shed its effulgent rays over this benighted, preacher-ridden community.

Well, before I close, I must send a good-speed to all the dear TRUTH SEEKER family; I hav been so enlightened, amused, comforted, and cheered by their letters that I feel that they are indeed friends. It makes no difference if I do not always agree with all. I hope they will take me as one of the TRUTH SEEKER family and cover my many faults with a mantle of charity. A. M. CRAWFORD.

Behold, How These Fakirs Do Lie!

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., Feb. 1, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: While not a subscriber to that grand old paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER, direct, I hav taken it almost continuously two or three years, and am very much in love with it. I ordered two copies at a news-stand in this city, and left one for sale, paying the dealer for it if not sold. In this way THE TRUTH SEEKER has gained another subscriber, as that extra number is now sold regularly.

I had the pleasure of knowing Mr. Heston and his wife when they lived at Fort Wayne, Ind., and a nobler man than he is I hav no desire to meet. When I learned of his financial distress, and read his appeal for aid it grieved me much, because of my inability to respond at that time. If he is still in need of assistance to tide him over, let me know. Kindly giv my best wishes to Mr. and Mrs. Heston, with the hope that the climatic influences of San Diego are proving beneficial to Mrs. Heston's health.

We are to hav a rare treat February 21st, at Powers's Opera House—a lecture by by that greatest of all orators, Col. R. G. Ingersoll.

THE TRUTH SEEKER, I suppose, as the name implies, is a seeker after truth wherever it may be found; but I hav been under the impression that its special aim was to fight superstition in every form. Next to religion, political discussions engender more ill-feeling than anything else, and it seems poor policy to me to fill THE TRUTH SEEKER's columns with such fruitless, discord-producing matter. There are numberless books, pamphlets, and papers, giving both sides of the question, to be had at little expense by anyone desirous of studying political economy.

In a recent number of THE TRUTH SEEKER was a letter which suggested some questions to me. It is this: If the mind and "soul" are the same, how much of a soul has an infant one hour old? If the mind and the creativ power are interdependent, what could such an infant "create?"

Is not the brain matter; is not the mind dependent on the brain, and do they not both grow with the body? If their existence commences with the body, is it not foolish to claim that either exists after the body?

I inclose a telegraph clipping from the Inter-Ocean of January 22d concerning the death of a certain Pasco Hodges, of Wilmington, N. C. Believing it to be a "fake," I wrote to the postmaster of Wilmington, asking for information. The inclosed letter and clipping from the Wilmington Messenger of January 21st is his reply. How is one to refute such things?

F. G. BALL.

This is the dispatch printed in the Inter-Ocean, and following it is the letter from the postmaster at Wilmington:

RALEIGH, N. C., Jan. 22, 1894.—Many persons in Wilmington believed Pasco Hodges died and came to life again for the purpose of telling his friends that heaven and hell were realities. Before falling ill he was an Atheist, as were many of his friends. They did not believe there was a God, a heaven, or a hell. His views changed, however, on his deathbed, and on Friday he was baptized by Father Cahill, of the Catholic church, and ordered his Atheistic books to be burned. On Saturday he became unconscious, and the physicians fearing that the end had come, requested his wife to leave the room. Soon afterwards he sat up in bed, called his wife, and, taking her in his arms, said he had died but she had brought him to life by her distress. Then to the startled group of Atheistic friends who had by this time collected around him, he said expressivly (sic):

"There is a hell; there is a heaven; I hav seen both."

Then he described both, and saying that Jesus was waiting for him and he must go, bade his wife farewell, placed his hands in the attitude of prayer, became unconscious, and remained so until the end. Those around who had professed unbelief trembled and wept bitterly.

WILMINGTON, N. C., Jan. 27, 1894.

MR. F. G. BALL—Dear Sir: Replying to your favor of the 24th inst. I beg to say that Pasco Hodges was a genuin resident of this city, and there hav been numerous wild stories afloat as to the deathbed scene.

I mail to you copy of a Wilmington paper of last Sunday, giving a detailed account of his death, and beg to say that I do not know anything of the particulars from a personal knowledge.

I return you the clipping.

Yours truly, J. S. MORTON.

[This tale has all the familiar features of the ordinary priestly lie about the deaths of Infidels. The picture of Atheistic repentance and remorse is painted in lurid colors, but it will frighten no one who has sense enough to be worth standing-room on this earth. Note the bathos of the closing sentence: "Those who had professed unbelief trembled and wept bitterly"! What "Atheistic books" did the "dying Atheist" order burned? Can "Father" Cahill tell? What liars these medicin men are!—ED. T. S.]

Dangerous Wisdom.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Jan. 20, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: From the columns of our newspapers, the majority of which pander to the tastes of orthodox Christians by publishing church notices and a class of Sunday-school short stories and rhymes, it is very noticeable that the publishers do not exercise as keen a censorship over the matter which, in the shape of a record of current events, gets into their grist of news items as would be of most benefit to the churches in sustaining a reputation for morality or many other godlike qualities. A late copy of the Utica Saturday Globe, which only a few months ago published a lengthy lie about Thomas Paine (which was referred to by a correspondent of THE TRUTH SEEKER), contained a statement made by a Japanese priest at the theological congress in Chicago wherein he said that the antagonism of the people of his country to Christian missionaries was forced by the missionaries themselvs stirring up dissensions among the people and inciting to rebellion and violence. The Japanese were compelled in self-defense and to protect their lives, homes, and families to oppose the missionaries.

Another weekly literary sheet, published at Scranton, Pa., which always reproduces one of Talmage's sermons, along with a hodge-podge of goody-goody stories, last week contained the following paragraph:

There is a firm in Ohio which, according to its own statement, has furnished for a number of years past sermons, lectures, and literary productions to many ministers throughout the United States. For stock sermons the terms are $1.50; for a sermon on topic assigned, $3. Lectures are from $5 to $50, according to style, length, etc., and the firm pledges itself not to duplicate any production within a radius of two hundred miles.

The Binghamton, N. Y., daily Republican is a stanch defender and friend of orthodox ecclesiasticism. I hav many times noticed its editorial leanings toward the established order of things. Its Saturday edition advertises all the churches and meetings, and tells who preached or is to preach. I was astonished, one day recently, to find the following among its telegraph items:

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—The preliminary trial of Rev. Frank H. Sheffield, of Westerly, who murdered his five-year-old daughter, Margaret, at Rocky Point last Monday was held in Apponaug. When the bloody garments and little shoes stained with blood were exhibited, Sheffield looked at them for a moment, a flush spread over his face, he dropped his eyes, and then allowed his head to sink upon his breast. There was no defense offered. Sheffield was adjudged probably guilty and bound over to await the action of the grand jury. Just before being removed from the court-room Sheffield had a severe paroxysm and had to be forcibly removed.

News of this kind getting into the columns of a press notably under control of the church is very convincing because it is not to be supposed that such news is sought after with any very particular avidity.

From the columns of another sheet, which several months ago declined to publish an article I sent it, that simply referred to church persecution of anti-Christians during the Middle Ages, I hav just clipped the following:

Gypsies hav no religion and some of them hav such an aversion to churches that they never pass by one without a muttered curse. In European countries they never suffer themselvs to be buried in a churchyard, but whenever allowed, they bury their dead in out-of-the-way places. This antipathy to churches and religious forms is supposed by some persons to hav originated from their persecution in the Middle Ages, but, whatever its origin, it is a fixed fact.

This little item, published in the manner it is, carries more weight against the church than any half dozen articles I could hav written. I repeat now what I hav often said before—that the church, especially the Protestant church, is committing gradual suicide by the expression of any liberal idea, by allowing the press to publish the news as it comes, and by permitting the free, non-sectarian education of our children. J. B. SWETT.

Burns and Paine.

A TRIBUTE TO TWO HATERS OF SHAMS.

By John Prescott Guild, before the Spiritualist Society, Lowell, Mass., Sunday, Jan. 28, E.M. 294.

The world, the devil, and Tom Paine
Hav tried to crush us all in vain;—sing.
The reason of their failure is—
The Lord protects the Methodists.—sing.

Thus used to "line" and sing the devout disciples of Charles Wesley, who, when the unsurpliced Thomas Paine was inspiring Americans with the spirit of liberty, was himself preaching the Tory gospel of obedience to the British king and Parliament.

The Methodists to-day boast their strength, to which they hav grown under a free government founded by the maligned Thomas Paine and his reason-guided cohorts, who "swore on the altar of their God eternal enmity to everything that can enslave the mind of man"—as voiced by Jefferson, another "doubting Thomas," who would "not believe every spirit talking through a white cravat."

Truth courts verification, but faith's faithless ministry remand investigators to the court of inquisition for the punishment of heresy, and after burning the life out of their bodies consign their souls to ceaseless tortures in endless hell.

While "the unspeakable Turk" to-day stands guard over the alleged sepulcher of the so-called prince of peace to keep his discordant Christian worshipers from killing each other, yet in America, and wherever the principles of Thomas Paine hav taken root and borne fruit, the Methodist and Presbyterian, Romanist and Armenian, are accorded equal right and jostle each other in street and public hall with the security of common citizenship and the feeling of common destiny by kinship from Mother Nature.

Still there are those who are glad to come to these fair shores and enjoy the blessings of a land uncursed by a crown and unfettered by a crosier, and with their foreign brogue on their tongue, and the mark of a master on their forehead, deny the beauty of the character that instituted their franchise according to the natural "rights of man," which none but him ever defined so well.

One of the announcements in this morning's papers was to the effect that Rev. Robert Court, D.D., pastor of the First Presbyterian church, would preach on the subject of "Sundry Times"—"God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake unto our fathers by the prophets," being of course intended, and which was taken as the text.

The reading of this notice led your speaker to the solemn court of the Covenanters, and suggested the following friendly note, which was sent up to the pulpit, the sanctum sanctorum of parchmented godliness:

LOWELL, MASS., Jan. 28, '94.

ROB'T COURT, D.D., Rev. Sir: To-day the friends of Thomas Paine celebrate his anniversary. As you hav long annually and justly praised Robert Burns for his devotion to the people's liberty, will you not now say a kindly word for the Scottish bard's often-traduced English compeer, the first and foremost advocate of American independence and republican equality—the "author-hero" of the Revolution? He was one of those "sons of the morning," "at sundry times and in divers manners" sent to light the world to "universal brotherhood," and who, "when he came to his own, his own received him not." Though the ranter and the romancer hav tried to blacken his fame by calling him "a brute and an Atheist," yet his own confession of faith, exemplified in his life, was: "I believe in one God and no more, and I hope for happiness beyond this life." "The world is my country; to do good, my religion."

Respectfully, JOHN P. GUILD.

This "epistle of John" was intended to draw the gospeler's fire, and it had the plotted effect. Indeed, it proved like a red blanket flung at a furious bull.

To this polite request to remember his political savior the divine referred, without reading it to his sheep, while reviewing the XIXth psalm, saying in parenthesis that Paine in the very book he wrote against the Bible had praised Joseph Addison's metrical paraphrase of it as the most beautiful thing in the English language. "It is true," said Dr. Court, "that Paine helped on the Revolution by writing 'Common Sense,' a political pamphlet, the ideas of liberty in which he drew from the Bible, which he freely quoted, and then professed at least that he believed. He afterward wrote the 'Age of Reason,' as he named it, ridiculing the scriptures. He was engaged in this both in France, where he was concerned in the revolution then going on, and in the United States, where at last he died blaspheming. Burns, with all his errors, never attacked the Bible; his assaults were aimed against ecclesiasticism. He called in a Presbyterian minister when on his deathbed and confessed all his sins. There is no comparison between the two men."

Of course to confess your sins to a Presbyterian minister liquidates all your crimes. The blood of Jesus then marks you as God's child, and you sail to bliss on angels' wings. Delightful morals, are they not?

In the course of the sermon Dr. Court took occasion to say that the prophets were God's mouthpieces, preaching righteousness, fearless alike of king, priest, and people; that such a man was John Knox, and if ever an old prophet came back it was through him. He [Dr. Court] did not say that any one did, though certain ladies of Lowell claimed that Joseph Addison had spoken through them; the idea was too ridiculous to think of. He also made the charge (which he ought to be brought into court to prove, if he can) that "the Unitarians stole the Huguenots' Presbyterian church in Boston, and are enjoying it to-day through the nefarious transactions in the superior court of Massachusetts."

The foregoing is as nearly verbatim as I am able to recall it. To all which kindly remarks I will comment in the words of his own scriptures—"Behold how these Christians love one another." I don't know why any ladies of Lowell should not be honored with a friendly visit by the shade of Dr. Addison to-day as well as that a lady in Nazareth should hav been courted by the Boss Holy Ghost near two thousand years ago.

Yes, Paine was a prophet if ever there was one, and Isaiah may hav been his ministering spirit, for all we or Dr. Court knows. Certainly Mr. Paine was not fool enough ever to hav said as Dr. Court, jackdaw-like, repeated, that the Bible would cease to be read in ten years after the "Age of Reason" was published.

That the Bible is read now more extensivly than ever is due largely to the disposition of the people, which he helped greatly to form, to not allow the clergy to do all their thinking. He believed in reading the Bible like all books, for himself. The more it is studied by the populace the less they are controlled by the dogma of the church in its interpretation and view of its authorship. Paine believed more of the Bible, doubtless, and had a more personal God in his fancy, than do an important proportion of churchmen and clergy and theological tutors to-day. The heretic in gown to-day outranks the Infidel in coat a hundred years ago. Why not? Isaiah and Jesus were both executed as blasphemers, same as were Socrates and Bruno.

Paine attacked ecclesiasticism and also showed up the inconsistencies of the Hebrew-Christian scrap-book, claimed as its authority or record of ordination. He denied the divine right of kings, assumed from the texts: "The king beareth not the sword in vain;" "Submit yourselvs unto the powers that be, for the powers that be are ordained of God."

As J. J. Morse, the great London Spiritualist, has said in a Fourth of July oration on Thomas Paine:

No wonder religious people feared him in the country across the sea. If his doctrins were true, he had undermined a state that sanctioned the divine right as associated with kings; torn the mask away from a hereditary ruler, uprooted the fiction of an aristocracy that, like leeches, sucked the blood from the common laborers of the land. No wonder they denounced him, for his voice was as the voice of a god, kindling life and action in the hearts of men that, in the name of liberty, they might drive the evils that oppressed them from the world!

That eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, is a proverb emphasized by every step on a bibled pulpit stair up which a shameless cheek mounts to discount reason and defame the honest, self-sacrificing thinker for the sake of a paltry salary, or under the vain pretense of saving souls by a change of heart, when what is most needed in both pulpit and pew is a change of brains.

The trouble with the preachers of revealed religion, as they call it, is, having no rational principle of their own, not having been born with any natural religion of doing good, as they confess, "conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity," they cannot understand nativ virtue in anybody else, for rational things are rationally discerned, and therefore they attribute total depravity to everybody else and call for them to be born again in order to get into heaven, and picture hell and the devil as the things that are to be avoided, instead of holding forth to moral sight the worthiness of right and the glory of true self-respect.

In this respect Robert Burns preached a better sermon than any pulpiteer ever propounded, when he sang:

The fear o' hell's a hangman's whip,
To keep the rogues in order;
But when I feel my conscience grip,
E'en let that be my border.

They may call Paine a blasphemer, because he cursed hypocrisy and lies. They may call him an Infidel, because he repudiated sham and showed himself a man. Such "blasphemy" is his beatitude and such "Infidelity" is his indelible fealty.

As E. A. Stevens, the able Chicago Secularist, wrote some time ago in THE TRUTH SEEKER, closing an account of a brilliant lecture by ex orthodox minister Samuel P. Putnam on "The Glory of Infidelity:"

"The Glory of Infidelity" makes us proud to bear that term of reproach; it makes life eminently elastic, and proves that heretics increase the world's wealth of knowledge; it givs us clearer, wider, deeper stretch of mental vision, and thus confronts us as Secularists with the importance of our present duty, besides picturing the substantial realization of a Secular paradise, where peace, wisdom, and justice may find a resting-place, and bigotry, hatred, and superstition be forever banished.

Let me conclude with this sentiment for Thomas Paine on his anniversary Sunday: If Thomas Paine, the lover of liberty for all, for you and me, for white and black, the advocate of reason in face of intellectual treason, has been damned therefor by his angry maker and sent forever to dwell in flaming hell, while every gallows bird is jerked to Jesus and borne on angel wings to realms of glory, because with a noose round his neck he has confessed his cussedness and been sopped with the "blood of the lamb" alias "holy-water," then I want to be excused from that ignorant and ruffian crowd and seek my company in the other direction.

The Best Offer Yet of Seeds is that made on page 112 of this issue of our paper, by the great Seed House of Peter Henderson & Co., of New York, who will send Sixteen Varieties of Sweet Peas (including the famous Emily Henderson), together with their Illustrated Catalog, at about half the regular prices. This offer is well worth reading and accepting.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Washington's Birthday.

Though no one knows when he was born,
Nought of the year nor month nor morn,
Children are taught to praise the name
Of Jesus, and to sing his fame.

Of Washington we know the day
He came on earth his part to play;
No fraud was used about his birth,
No myth to fright the folks of earth.

Yes, Jesus through his mystic life
Wrought deadly hate and world-wide strife:
War and torture, all in his name,
Hav been practiced for priestly gain.

But Washington was in the van
Of those who claimed the rights of man,
And with them gained a victory
O'er kingly foes from o'er the sea.

And he was friend of Thomas Paine—
That son of man whom priests defame;
That man who givs all priests offense
In "Age of Reason" and "Common Sense."

He risked his life 'gainst deadly foe,
To help his fellows here below;
And all his deeds were works of love,
Without commission from gods above.

Oh! go not back two thousand years,
And worship him of fraud and fears!
But if to man praise must be done,
Then giv that praise to Washington.

L. G. R.

[But Washington's treatment of Thomas Paine was anything but kindly. See Conway's "Life of Paine."—ED. C. C.]

Wit, Humor, Patriotism, and Independence.

The old year has passed into the realms of memory and oblivion. The new one is upon us, and day by day into Time's "wallet of forgetfulness" we throw incidents of minor worth, while memory stores away the more important ones for future reflection. The old year went out smilingly and the new one came in fully as gorgeous, fully as beautiful. I wish ye snowbound Northerners could enjoy some of our beautiful Colorado days. Our autumns are lovely, our winters usually mild. Six days of the new year hav slipped into the past; the seventh is going. I suppose the Lord knows by this time just what he is expected to do during the ensuing year. Ministers all over the land assume the right to prepare for him annual programs, and lest he should be remiss they afterward prepare weekly ones. The fulfillment of these programs are always insisted upon by a formal "Do Lord," coming from away back in the "amen corner." He is always given timely notice of his official duties. As you say, Miss Wixon, as Christmas came on Monday, "We shall see what we shall see."

This is that ill-used and much-abused day, Sunday—that day over which there has been so much controversy. At the Lord's feast the prayers hav been duly warmed over and served in the most approved manner, the guests partaking with closed eyes, ready to swallow anything that is offered them. It has been some time since the people of Canon hav been favored with an open-eyed, broad daylight feast of reason and common sense. Something over a year ago Prof. W. S. Bell stopped off on his way across the continent and delivered an exceedingly interesting lecture. He is a Freethinker and his remarks were well spiced with a genial flow of wit. It has been just a year since Mrs. Mattie P. Krekel gave us a call. She delivered two lectures in which she illustrated Liberalism in a very comprehensiv and convincing manner.

A few incidents hav come within my notice which may afford a little diversion to the readers of the Corner. On one occasion, when visiting a schoolmate, as we were all seated at table, the father, as was his custom, "asked the blessing." There was a little five-year-old in the family whom I noticed growing quite restless during the ceremony. He had evidently been taught to sit quietly, but his hands were going as though afflicted with something akin to St. Vitus's dance. The little fellow's eagerness burst forth in chorus with his father's closing words, "For Christ's sake," by saying, "For Christ's sake, giv me a piece of pie." I had been thoroughly amused at him all through, but at this my amusement was almost unbearable. The joke was too rich. Piety gave way and I was relieved by an audible titter all around. I never heard whether the Lord enjoyed the joke or not.

One morning a small boy was walking briskly along when he chanced to meet a woman in the service of the Salvation Army, who said to him: "My boy, wouldn't you like to work for Christ?" Not having time to converse with her, he quickly replied: "No, madam; I am going to work for Mr. Sell to-day," then hurried on. Of the two he was business.

A Sunday-school boy of our neighborhood, about nine years of age, felt somewhat doubtful of what his teacher had told him regarding the efficacy of prayer. Accordingly, he consulted his mother to know if he had been properly taught. She replied that she supposed he had. With this he fell to his knees in earnest prayer. It being Christmas eve, she thought him praying that Santa Claus might look upon him with favor. He arose early the next morning and ran to a neighbor's house, where lived two playmates who were almost blind. Quickly returning, he exclaimed: "Mother, prayer isn't true at all. The little Cooley boys can't see any better than before." The little boy, instead of the big God, had the big heart.

Once while working in the garden I came across, to me, a curious worm. A few steps away was a very religious young man, who I knew professed quite a knowledge of natural science. Calling his attention, I said: "What do you call this?" "I will tell you," said he. "That is a tobacco worm." He then struck an attitude of eloquence, not unlike that of the great Grecian orator, and in a most sanctimonious tone, making every word stronger with an upward motion of his head, he continued: "If there is as great a difference in the present life and the life to come as there is in the tobacco worm and the beautiful moth which develops from it, it will be superb indeed." Overcome by amusement, for a moment my face was buried in my sunbonnet. On looking up, I found that he retained a reverential attitude, and was looking as surprised as though he had expected me to uplift my eyes in solemn prayer—knowing I was an unbeliever—lest I might escape the possibility of such a boon.

The anniversary of the birth of the great Thomas Paine is close at hand. Doubtless before this reaches the Corner readers it will hav been celebrated. I trust he will be as ably defended this year as he has been for several years past. I will here relate a little incident which occurred while studying English and American literature at school. My classmates were of the pious order. One morning among other authors in our lesson was the name of Thomas Paine. As an unusual circumstance the principal gave us our own selection of the subjects of the lesson, each taking one of the authors and writing from memory on the blackboard. The text-book itself had, as usual, slighted the author of "The world is my country, and to do Good, my religion," and I knew my classmates would do as much. Remembering one of Watson Heston's illustrations, where Thomas Paine was represented as clearing a forest of its rubbish and worthless trees, I selected him as my subject, and wrote: "Thomas Paine was a defender of human rights. He was born and lived for many years of his useful life in England, telling her where she stood politically. He, having labored for England, came to America. By writing 'The Rights of Man,' 'Common Sense,' 'The Crisis,' and the 'Age of Reason,' he led the colonists into the right channel. His was in fact the intellect which roused the American people to independence. In the sluggishness of the political forest he uprooted the undergrowth of hypocritical weeds and left the trees of worth growing in a free and unpolluted soil, beneath a clear sky, in an atmosphere of joy and freedom. 'Always defend the defender of mankind.'" The effect was what could hav been expected on Sunday-school scholars. As I repaired to my seat I noticed a smile and a wink being passed around the class. I then read what I had written. The teacher looked somewhat astonished, but said nothing. As yet I hav heard of but one text-book which pays a fair compliment to the memory of Thomas Paine. That one is Montgomery's "United States History," which says that even Washingson never dreamed of a separation between the colonies and Great Britain until after the publication in Philadelphia of a little pamphlet called "Common Sense." I am told that the author also compliments him highly as a writer.

It is thus in Liberal minds livs the memory of the noble and just. We may look through the category of the ages and we will find none more original in character than Thomas Paine. Never did a grander type of humanity figure on the possibilities of a race. He realized every phase of life. All along down the stream of Time, his persecutors all forgotten, will be remembered the name and deeds of Thomas Paine. ORELLA LOCKE.

Canon City, Col, January, 1894.

Correspondence.

CROMWELL, IA., Jan. 13, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my first letter. I am nine years old. I go to school. My teacher's name is Miss Edith Alvord, an unmarried lady, and her hair is gray. I hav one sister and one brother. Papa takes THE TRUTH SEEKER. W. S. Bell came to visit us, and we had a good time. We played high five and ran a race, but Mr. Bell could not catch me. We would be pleased to see him again. There are but few Liberals here, and we havn't had a Liberal lecture this winter. There has not been snow enough to run my coaster. I hav not had much fun this winter. It is just go to school all the time. We liv one one mile from Cromwell and the C. B. & Q. R. R. This is a nice blue grass country; stock could stay out all winter if there was no snow. Good improved farms are $50 an acre.

I would like to correspond with some Liberal about my age. EDNA E. GEIER.

[No one can fault with that letter.—ED. C. C.]

ATCHISON, KAN., Jan. 1, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: To-day is the beginning of another year and my wish is that Freethought will triumph as grandly as it did in the year we hav just bidden farewell to. I believe Freethought gained a victory last year that the church cannot overcome. It fought for the greatest of all world's fairs to be thrown open on Sundays, and it won the fight grandly and nobly. She held a convention in Chicago in which men from all over America and Europe assailed religion for a week, uttering living truths. Not a quarrel was heard. The Christians held a Parliament of Religions at Chicago which consisted of boisterous quarreling, in which the "great" Joe Cook was a conspicuous figure. The two great meetings proved to the world that Freethought can hold a meeting without fighting, while Christianity cannot.

The men who should be praised for the good work done in the past year are Colonel Ingersoll, the Demosthenes of America; S. P. Putnam, the poet-lecturer, and hero of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought;" Charles Watts, Saladin, and G. W. Foote, the champions of our cause in England; John R. Charlesworth, the young and brilliant orator of the West; E. M. Macdonald, editor of the grandest paper beneath the shining sun; L. K. Washburn, editor of the oldest Freethought paper in the world; Robert C. Adams, Canada's brave and fearless champion, and C. B. Waite, the noble president of the American Secular Union. The women who had the courage to defend what they knew to be right are Miss Wixon, the woman who has done all in her power to make the children happy; Mrs. M. A. Freeman, the Secular Union's brilliant secretary; Helen H. Gardener, the Freethought novelist, and Voltairine de Cleyre, Freethought's woman orator. With these brave men and women fighting for our cause Freethought made 1893 a glorious year; and if 1894 is as glorious we can be thankful, not to almighty God, but to truth and humanity.

Wishing you a happy New Year, I remain, Your Liberal friend,

CHAS. B. REMSBURG.

[Our friend Charles modestly refrains from mentioning the name of his honored father, John E. Remsburg, among the valiant workers for a better time to come. He is one of the most effectiv and brilliant orators in the ranks of Freethought, of whom we are all proud. Best of all, his bright, progressiv sons are being trained in the way they should go, and are already making their mark in the world, young as they are.—ED. C. C.]

WIFE WANTED

Who believes in no Christian creed; hence I advertise. She must be a good cook and housekeeper; also 5 ft. 5 in. to 5 ft. 9 in. in hight, weigh 140 to 165, and have blue eyes, light complexion, light or golden hair: age 25 to 30. I am a poor man (mechanic), farmer's son, fairly educated, honest, industrious, steady, quiet, and unassuming, have no licentious or intemperate habits, belong to no church or lodge, am fond of home, and want a wife who will help me earn one which we both can enjoy. Maiden reader, if the above describes you and you would like a plain, honest workingman, like me, then don't hesitate to write to me. References furnished and required. Correspondence strictly confidential.

Hard Knocks at Christianity.

By R. WHEELER.

This book is just what its title implies—thumping whacks at superstition. It deals with the effect of Christianity on the world, showing what Christians have done to advance their religion and impede the progress of man. It shows that Jesus was a false prophet, that the gospels are not authentic, and that Christianity is a borrowed system of religion. That the Bible is not in accord with Science, that the atonement scheme is futile and foolish, and that religion is not a real benefit to man.

Pleasure and Progress.

AN ATTEMPT TO PROVE THAT

The Pursuit of Pleasure is the Sine Qua Non of Intellectual, Moral, and Social Development, and that The Promotion of Pleasure is the Duty of Philanthropy and Statesmanship.

By Albert M. Lorentz, LL.B.

CONTENTS:

BOOK I.—PLEASURE: Chap. I.—Sources of Pleasure. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures. Chap IV.—Social Pleasures. Chap. V.—Pleasures of the Savage, the Barbarian and the Civilized. Chap. VI.—Genesis of religions. Chap. VII.—Christianity.

BOOK II.—INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Purpose of life. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures: Knowledge. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Reason. Chap.—V. Ideal Pleasures: Character. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Pedagogical Despotism.

BOOK III.—MORAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Morality. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures: Prudence. Chap. III.—Material Pleasures: Refinement. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Foresight. Chap. V.—Ideal Pleasures: Civilization. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII—Vice Caused by Restraint.

BOOK IV.—SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Progress. Chap. II.—Protection, Capitalism, and Socialism: Respectively an Actual, an Imminent, and a Proposed Violation of Individual Sovereignty. Chap. III—Condition of Agriculture. Chap. IV. Public Schools, the Mene, Mene, Tekel of Socialism. Chap. V.—Province of Government. Chap. VI.—Our Social Disorder.

Here are some of the verdicts on this remarkable production which have been rendered by men who are in every way qualified as judges of books:

This is a spirited, rattling sort of a book that skates right along over the deepest subject without much thought whether the ice is thin or not. It answers the greatest question—What is the use, object, motive, purpose, and summum bonum of life, and the real cause and motive of progress? —by one word, Pleasure!—Thaddeus B. Wakeman.

He sharply attacks, also, modern methods of education, and in this he is most abundantly borne out by the facts, and his arraignment is practically unanswerable. His book is altogether a curious and suggestive one.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The man who wrote this book knows how to write a book, and knows what he is writing about. There is not a padded sentence in the volume, not an attempt to fill up with words for lack of knowledge. The author deals hard blows at shams and falsehoods, and hard blows for realities and truth. We do not see how anyone can read this book and disagree with the leading propositions. The work is good; every chapter is worth reading. It is a work of common-sense Socialism. The chapter on public schools ought to be put into a tract and sent to every teacher in the land. Thousands of sentences are worthy of being framed as political maxims and hung up all over the nation. The book deserves a wide reading, not only for its literary style, which is clear and incisive, but for its bold, honest sayings.—L. K. Washburn.

Here we have philosophy up to date, the advance word of the progressive thinker; not a dry, abstruse discourse, but a common-sense essay in plain words upon the conduct of life, and all illustrated with such an abundance of anecdote and metaphor as add real entertainment to solid instruction. This is an important book striking at superstition and unreasonable tradition, and upholding individual liberty in defiance of governmental law and social custom. After reading this book one feels that the author will never be able to write another, for he has put all his life and knowledge into this one. Every page bristles with points; there is no padding or filling in, no mere literary embellishment; but clean-cut apothegms abound, and every line is dictated by hard-headed common-sense.—Capt. Robt. C. Adams.

After you read this book you will be as enthusiastic in praise of it as are the eloquent editor of the Investigator and the gallant President of the Canadian Secular Union,

"Pleasure and Progress" has 398 pages, is splendidly printed from large, clear type, on excellent paper, and costs, bound in cloth, $1; paper covers, 50 cents.

A most extraordinary publication. We venture the assertion that nothing like it has ever before appeared in this country, and it is very doubtful if another one like it will ever again be published. We must give the Truth Seeker Company the credit of putting the book in the reach of all. At twice the price it would have been a cheap book. Artist Heston as a portrait-painter and designer is a wonderful success, and we judge from our own feelings that nearly every Liberal in America will desire a copy of this most wonderful volume.—[Freethinkers' Magazine.

Mr. Heston deserves to be called the artist-hero of Liberalism. He has dedicated his genius to Freethought, and has done faithful and noble work for the cause of right and truth. But the pictures do not make up the whole of his volume. There are nearly two hundred pages of reading matter that serve first as explanations of the illustrations, and secondly as texts to prove the utter falsity of the church's professions and the hypocrisy of those who uphold them. Altogether the book is one of the best weapons against Christianity and the church that has ever been put in the hands of Freethinkers.—[Boston Investigator.

BIBLE MYTHS,

BEING A

Comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of Heathen Nations of Antiquity,

CONSIDERING ALSO THEIR ORIGIN AND MEANING.

WITH NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS.

[Heathen Illustration of the Temptation.]

The Bundehesh (a sacred book of the Persians,) states that Ahuramazda after creating the first man and woman, Mashya and Mashyana, bade them "to be humble of heart; to observe the law; to be pure in their thoughts, pure in their speech, pure in their actions." But an evil demon came to them in the form of a Serpent, sent by Ahriman, the prince of devils, and gave them fruit of a wonderful tree, which imparted immortality. Evil inclinations then entered their hearts, and all their moral excellence was destroyed. Consequently they fell, and forfeited the eternal happiness for which they were destined. They killed beasts, and clothed themselves in their skins.

BIBLE MYTHS shows this to be the origin of the Hebrew story.

AN English Methodist paper says a well-meaning local preacher recently prayed that the Lord would "annihilate the queen and all the royal family." When he learned afterward what "annihilate" meant he was greatly distressed. "I dearly loved the queen," he said. "and I thought she deserved the longest word I could get hold of."—Tribune.

LAWYER BROWN is a Sunday-school teacher. He was endeavoring to inculcate in his pupils' minds the necessity of a firm belief in things spiritual, when one of the class, with open-eyed astonishment, exclaimed, "Why, Mr. Brown, I heard you tell a witness in court the other day that you didn't care what he believed! All you cared about was what he knew!"—London Freethinker.

"WHAT do you mean by faith?" was the question. "Please, sir, when you believe anything you are quite certain is not true," was the prompt answer an Indian boy gave me. But the story on this subject I delight in most was that of the little boy who asked his mother what faith was, and received the not very judicious reply that faith was believing in something you could not see, but which was told you by a person whom you could trust. "For instance," she continued, "if I told you there was a chair in that corner, you would hav to believe it, though you could not see it." "Yes, mother, but should I be bound to sit in it?"—Spectator.

IN Pittsburg, Phipp's Conservatory, in Schenley Park, was opened on a recent Sunday, and four thousand people visited it. This nearly threw the Christian Statesman into hysterics, whereupon the American Sentinel comments: "This is truly awful! What is the country coming to, when people even in Pittsburg will persist in visiting a conservatory on Sunday? Mind you, a conservatory! a wicked place, in which flowers actually grow and exhibit their gorgeous tints and exhale their sweet perfumes on Sunday! How long, American Sabbath Union, oh, how long? Cannot the papacy or somebody put a stop to such things ere the 'American Sabbath' be—smothered in a bank of winter roses—murdered in an evil resort wherein flowers are permitted to run opposition to the Sunday pulpit."

I AM reminded of a story which the late Cardinal Cullen used to tell. The cardinal was taking a walk by himself in the country one Sunday afternoon, and seeing a boy on the roadside holding a goat by a rope he entered into conversation with him. The following was the dialog: The cardinal: Were you at mass to-day, my boy? The boy: No, your riverence, I wasn't. The cardinal: Why not? The boy: Because I was howlding the goat. The cardinal: Were you at mass last Sunday? The boy: No, I wasn't, your riverence. The cardinal: Tell me, do you ever go to mass at all? The boy: No, I don't. Don't I tell you I do be howlding the goat. The cardinal: But couldn't you sometimes get some one else to hold the goat for you? The boy: No, your riverence, I couldn't. You don't know that goat. The devil couldn't howld that goat; you couldn't howld that goat yourself.—Catholic Review.

IN a certain locality there lived some years ago, and may yet, a good old Methodist brother and a good old Presbyterian brother. They got along very well together until they tried to trade horses or talk religion, and then the Methodist brother always lost his temper, and said things he was sorry for. On one occasion they had traded horses, and though the result still rankled in the breast of the Methodist, he was on terms with his neighbor, and they had met in a piece of meadow and started a discussion on pre destination. It proceeded warmly until the Methodist brother lost control of himself, and, with horse trades and John Calvin mixed up in his mind, he exclaimed: "Go 'way from here; you're a thief and a liar and a Presbyterian." This was too much, and the next minute they were rollover in the grass, clawing like a pair of cats, and pretty soon the Presbyterian was sitting astride of his foe bumping his head into the soft ground. "Take it back," he yelled; "take it back or"—bump—bump—"I'll knock your old head off." "Stop and I will," gasped the Methodist brother. The Presbyterian let him up "That is," he continued, as he brushed himself and spit the dust out of his mouth. "I'll take it back on the first two counts, but you're a dad blamed old Presbyterian anyhow," and it was an entire week before they were friendly again.—Exchange.

RELIGION A CURSE, RELIGION A DISEASE, RELIGION A LIE.

By Samuel P. Putnam.

Dedicated to the American Congress, of 1892, which for the sake of Religion, Stabbed Liberty to the Heart.

A work burning with indignation inspired by the Congressional act closing the World's Fair on Sunday—an act which practically united the government and the Christian church.

To which is added Mr. Putnam's address delivered before the Columbian Exposition Committee of the House of Representatives against Sunday closing.

Also the following Essays and Poems by Mr. Putnam, which have never before been put in book form: Orthodoxy; Freethought; Man, Not God (written for a Paine anniversary); The Statue of Liberty and Thomas Paine; a poem written for the opening exercises of the Silverton, Ore., Freethought Hall; Death and Life; The Golden Age; Shut the Door (a poem on the closing of the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia, in 1876).

The main essay in this work is one of the strongest arraignments ever made of the religion which cramps and fetters the minds of the people of this country. It should be distributed widely. It has been commended in the highest terms as it appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER and we hope every reader will buy a copy to lend his neighbor and arouse thought.

Gems of Thought.

THERE is nothing better for training the memory than on one's appointments.—Galveston News.

THE optimist is he who insists upon believing that everybody is comfortable because he is.—Puck.

"No florid prose, nor huried lies of rhyme,
Can blazon evil deeds or consecrate a crime." —Byron.

WE do not see any sense in thanking God for the potatoes the school-children hav contributed for the destitute.—Boston Investigator.

WE do not believe in appealing to the uneducated. We disapprove of making people "Freethinkers" before they are thinkers at all, either bond or "free."—Saladin.

IT is unfortunate for mankind, but fortunate perhaps for tyrants, that the poor and the wretched hav not the instinct or the pride of the elephant, who will not reproduce his species in servitude. —Chamfort and Vauvenargues.

THE clergy can now only prop creeds once believed essential to public order by invoking the laws for a moral system largely based on those creeds. All Sabbath laws and blasphemy laws contain the old virus of theological persecution and ecclesiastical authority. Their worst effect is not palpable.—Moncure D. Conway.

IT is only now that the world is growing so delicate and refined that it can see the beauty of a fact; that it is developing a taste so rare as to distinguish between the false and the true; that it can be moved by the gentle breeze as well as by the winter's gale; that it can see a greater beauty in a statement true to life than in the inflated tales which children read.—Realism in Literature and Art.

THERE is a general tendency Romeward among Protestants. They took the first step in this direction when they united the church with the civil powers, and every religious law made by the state is an additional step in the same direction. By making Sunday laws Protestants render special homage to Rome, for they are thus elevating and enforcing an institution which rests solely on the authority of the Catholic church.—H. P. Hosler.

IT is one of the fundamental principles of our government that "all men are created equal." It is not the prerogativ of any one to be lord over any other, to prescribe rules by which he must liv. They are equal in this, that all hav an equal right to think and act as suits their inclinations. But this right is limited by the fact that all are equal, which forbids each to do anything that would encroach upon the rights of his neighbor. For that which would interfere with the rights of others is not a right. Rights cannot conflict. Rights run in parallel lines, never crossing, never clashing.—L. A. Smith.

IT does, indeed, seem at times as if a certain class of delusions were fixed and immovable in the human mind. Accepted from time immemorial as truisms, reason and experience alike, no matter how clear the teachings of the one may be or how bitter those of the other, produce no real impression. The thing is repeated over and over again in words slightly varied, but always when analyzed reducible to the same residuum. Fixity and uniformity of belief are good in themselvs; and unlimited freedom of thought and discussion, no matter how decently exercised, hav a dangerous tendency to unsettle! In other words, faith is not generally felt that truth is only made stronger and clearer by discussion, and that error only has to fear from it. The average historical writer, like the average man, instinctivly clings to his delusion—hence the cant with which so-called histories are replete.—Charles Francis Adams.

MOST of the literature and art the world has known has been untrue. The pictures of the past hav been painted from the distorted minds of visionists and the pliant brains of tools. They hav represented impossible gods and unthinkable saints, angels and cherubs and demons—everything but men and women. Saints may be all right in their place, but a saint with a halo around his head was born of myth and not of art. Angels may be well enough, but all rational men prefer an angel with arms to an angel with wings. When these artists were not busy painting saints and Madonnas, they were spending their time painting kings and royal knaves, and the pictures of the rulers were as unlike the men and women whom they were said to represent as the servil spirit of the painter was unlike the true artist of today. Of course an artist would not paint the poor. They had no clothes that would adorn a work of art, and no money nor favors that could pay him for his toil. An ancient artist could no more afford to serve the poor than a modern lawyer to defend the weak.—C. S. Darrow.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF MENTAL HEALING.

The Popes and Their Doings. Biographical sketches of the most noted of these vicars of Christ and vicegerents of God, showing what they have done, and what kind of men they were. It contains very plain statements, in very unvarnished language, and the unmasking is complete, proving them to have been cruel, intriguing, and licentious men. Considering the rapid growth of Catholicism in this country, this book cannot be too widely disseminated. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Awful Disclosures of Maria Monk, as exhibited in a narrative of her sufferings during her residence of five years as a novice, and two years as a black nun, in the Hotel Dieu Nunnery, at Montreal. Perhaps not any anti-Catholic book published has created more excitement, and had such a circulation as this work. To counteract its effects the Catholics circulated a story that Maria Monk was "no better than she should be," but investigation disclosed that her "child of shame" was none other than the child of her priest-seducer. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth 75 cents.

Auricular Confession and Popish Nunneries. By Wm. Hogan, for twenty-five years a confessing priest. A revelation of the licentious practices of the priests and nuns in these religious brothels. There is no question that Ex-priest Hogan knew the truth of the tales of vice, seduction, and infanticide he gives in this volume, and equally there is no question that if the people generally knew of them, Catholicism would not be given the vast amounts of money now allowed it by our various city governments. Price, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents.

The Priest in Absolution. A Review of the system of auricular confession, including copious extracts from the "Confessional Unmasked," from the "Master Key to Popery," etc. The work is a protest against and an appeal to every American citizen to examine carefully and thoughtfully a religious system so invasive of privacy, so powerful for evil in licentious hands, so fraught with danger to female modesty, to the ingenuous openness of youth, and to the freedom of thought, speech, and action. Price, paper, 25 cents.

Priestly Celibacy Exposed. A lecture by the Rev. Geo. Townsend Fox, of Durham, England. Revised American edition, showing the result in parishes of the Roman decree that priests shall not mary. Price, paper, 15 cents.

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA IDENTIFIED AS THE CHRISTIAN JESUS.

An important and remarkable revelation concerning the life and times of Apollonius of Tyana, the great sage and philosopher of the first century. It is here claimed that his life and teachings were appropriated and utilized by the formulators of the Christian religion in the interest of so-called Christianity. The plagiarism is made plain in this brief history of Apollonius, especailly in view of the historical references and comments thereon. It is quite evident that to conceal the plagiarism, the name of Apollonius was suppressed.

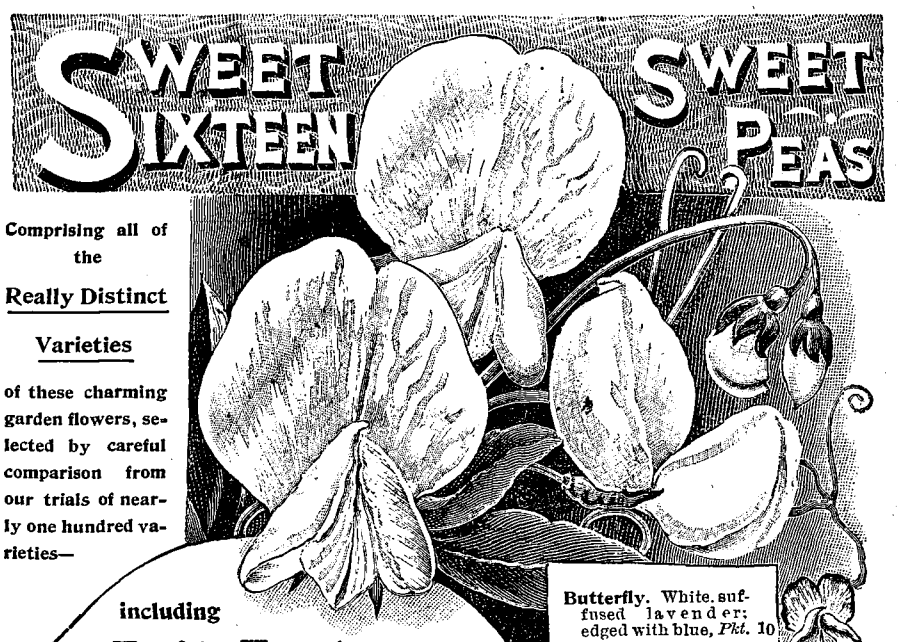
Col. R. G. Ingersoll's ARGUMENT



IN THE

Reynolds Blasphemy Trial,

At Morristown, N. J.

This is the greatest argument ever made in a case of this kind, and will be a model for the Bar so long as the Christians use force to repress free speech. Its legal acumen is unsurpassed, its eloquence never equaled. Wherever Christian persecution is going on this argument should be freely circulated, read to the Christians, and expounded on every occasion.

IT is proposed to run a trolley line from New York to Philadelphia.

RODNEY DENNIS has been reëlected president of the Connecticut Humane Society.

KING BEHANZIN, of Dahomy, has surrendered to the French, and will be sent to Senegal.

DURING 1893 Boston lost almost $5,000,000 by fire, and the United States $150,000,000.

IN Massachusetts there is manifested a growing feeling against the compulsory vaccination laws.

THE French troops near Timbuctoo were nearly annihilated by the nomad Touregs, and Timbuctoo is besieged.

THE Board of Aldermen of Boston has appropriated $500,000 for park improvements, to giv work to the unemployed.

OFFICIAL reports of last fall's floods in Japan show 1,400 people killed, 1,000 missing, 46,000 buildings demolished, and 300,000 damaged.

THE Mississippi legislature elected A. J. McLaurin to fill out the unexpired term of United States Senator Walthall. He has less than a month to serve.

A mechanic's lien for $138.23 was foreclosed in the Court of Common Pleas in this city. The bill of costs amounted to $435, to which should be added the fees of counsel.

GEO. E. WILSON, of Chicago, will soon bring out a new book on immoral literature. He is on the track of the blackmailing gang which livs on the smaller booksellers.

A TRANSATLANTIC steamship pool is in course of formation. It will control the steerage and second-class passenger travel and may affect the first-class. Many agencies will be dropped.

A WIND and rain storm blew down a church at Gate City, Ala., in which thirty women and children of the Christian Endeavor Society were holding services. Three will die. A judgment.

THE bill repealing the Federal Election law passed the Senate on February 7th by a vote of 39 to 28. The affirmativ vote was cast by 35 Democrats and four Populists. President Cleveland has signed the bill.

THE Brazilian insurgents captured the Itapa with the government Admiral Goncalvez on board. Rear-Admiral Julie de Cesar Noronha now commands the government naval forces. Severe fighting at Nictheroy last week.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL PORTER, of Alaska, has ordered the arrest of every white man known to hav formed illegal marriage relations with nativ women. As a result nearly every man on board the United States steamer Pinta is in jail in Sitka.

THE United States corvette, Kearsarge, which on June 19, 1864, sunk the Confederate cruiser, Alabama, off Cherbourg, France, foundered on the night of February 2d on Roncador Reef. She was on the way to Bluefields, Nicaragua. A total wreck, but only one man lost.

THE Petite Republique Francaise says that the French minister of war has ordered that hereafter the army shall be supplied with French canned goods, instead of American. This will increase the cost of the goods to the government 130 per cent.

IN the mayoralty election at Duluth Rev. T. Lewis, Republican, was elected by a majority of 3,025 in a total vote of 10,300. One of the causes of the defeat of John Jenswold—nominated by the Populists and indorsed by the Democrats—was the fact that his wife is a Catholic, and so the Apaists worked against Jenswold.

THE McCreary Hawaiian resolutions, sustaining President Cleveland and condemning Minister Stevens, passed the House by a vote of 176 to 57. Only three Democrats voted against the resolutions. Of the Populists Baker and Kem voted with the majority, and Bell, Boen, Davis, Harris, Pence, and Simpson, with the Republicans.

THE ex-priest, J. T. MCNAMARA, has been found guilty at Independence, Mo., of slandering Father Dalton, making the penalty twelve months in the county jail and a fine of $500. An appeal was taken. The jury in the charge of slander against Father Lillis disagreed. The bonds on McNamara are $500 in the Lillis case, $500 on the charge of circulating obscene literature, $1,000 on the charge of slandering Mother Vincent, and $1,500 on the appeal.

The Most Magnificent Work Ever Published by the Freethought Press.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The object of this work is to present the Course of Freethought throughout the Civilized World for the last Four Centuries, from the time of Columbus and Bruno to the time of Ingersoll.

It will be a radical Historic Record of the Greatest Developments of the Human Race.

It will reveal Freethought as an Intellectual, Moral, Literary, Social, Industrial, and Political Movement.

It will show what Freethought is in itself and how manifold are its influences, and with what hope and promise we can hail its future triumph.

"Four Hundred Years of Freethought" will Embrace the most Illustrious Pages of Human History,

adorned with the brightest Genius, radiant with the most splendid Poetry, rich with the greatest Inventions and Discoveries and ennobled with Freedom's most shining advance.

Nothing Can be More Interesting,

more inspiring to the Pioneer Workers of to-day—to those who are still in the van for Human Rights and Progress. The struggle is not ended and what is already won must be carefully guarded. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; and from the Past we must ever learn Great Lessons for the Future.

NO LIBERAL CAN AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THIS BOOK.

It will contain the Greatest Thoughts and the Greatest Deeds of the Greatest Men

In One Harmonious and Magnificent Whole,

a vivid picture of man's sublimest evolution, with the added glory of

WOMAN'S EMANCIPATION

from the chains and slavery of a barbaric creed and church.

THE FIRST PART of the book will deal with Freethought as a Universal Power, as a Spirit, a Method, a prevailing but unorganized Influence in every Department of Human Growth.

THE SECOND PART will deal with Freethought as an Organized Movement, especially in America and Europe; and this history is of equal importance with the first, and should be justly understood and the Pioneers of our work recognized.

The first part will embrace the following Grand Departments:

Philosophy.	Science.	Education and Ethics.	Literature.		Government and Politics.		Woman's Emancipation.
Bruno.	Copernicus.	Bacon.	Boccaccio.	Lessing.	Voltaire.	Gambetta.	Madame Roland.
Spinoza.	Galileo.	Comenius.	Rabelais.	Schiller.	Rousseau.	Castelar.	Mary Wollstoncraft.
Descartes.	Kepler.	Pestalozzi.	Cervantes.	Goethe.	French Salon.	Bradlaugh.	Harriet Martineau.
Locke.	Da Vinci.	Froebel.	Marlowe.	George Sand.	French Revolution.	Garrison.	Frances Wright.

THE PORTRAITS OF THESE ILLUSTRIOUS REFORMERS

in every domain of Human Thought and Progress will adorn the pages of this volume.

The Second Part of this volume will be devoted especially to organized Freethought and the Liberal Press in modern times. The Truth Seeker, Investigator, Ironclad Age, Secular Thought, Freethinkers' Magazine, Independent Pulpit, Lucifer, the Freethinker, Agnostic Journal, etc.

It will give a history of the

GREAT INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

at Chicago, the Freethought Federation of America, the American Secular Union, the various state and local organizations, the Canadian Secular Union, the British Secular Union, and other Liberal associations throughout the world.

It will contain the portraits of those who, up to the present time, have been identified with Freethought work—editors, lecturers, officers of societies, and those who, as representative men, have won distinction in other fields of effort. There will be the portraits of

Horace Seaver,	George E. Macdonald,	Capt. R. C. Adams,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Sr.,	Susan H. Wixon,
J. P. Mendum,	E. M. Macdonald,	John R. Charlesworth,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.,	Mrs. Charles Watts,
D. M. Bennett,	L. K. Washburn,	Samuel P. Putnam,	Prof. J. H. Cook,	Mrs. Robert C. Adams,
Parker Pillsbury,	Ernest Mendum,	John E. Remsburg,	E. H. Heywood,	Mrs. M. A. Freeman,
Elizur Wright,	Charles Watts,	Franklin Steiner,	Otto Wettstein,	Katie Kehm Smith,
T. C. Leland,	G. W. Foote,	J. D. Shaw,	Stephen Pearl Andrews,	Lucy N. Colman,
T. B. Wakeman,	Saladin,	E. A. Stevens,	James Parton,	Lillian Leland,
Judge C. B. Waite.	J. R. Monroe,	H. L. Green,	Abner Kneeland,	Amy Post.

and other men and women who have contributed to the advancement of Freethought and whose names should be remembered throughout the Liberal ranks. There will also be about

ONE HUNDRED BIOGRAPHIES,

and in these will be given a picture of Freethought progress which will be most interesting and valuable, for it is in individuals that we find the best interpretations of the age.

The Price of This Superb Book is $5.00,

and not for the same amount of money can there be found such an array of facts, such a survey of history, and such a galaxy of Freethought.

Mr. Putnam is now devoting his whole time to this work and it will be published at the earliest possible moment.

The name of every Subscriber who sends five dollars before the work is on the press will be enrolled in this book. DON'T FAIL TO SUBSCRIBE AT ONCE.

This book will contain

Over Six Hundred Pages of Printed Matter and Over One Hundred Portraits.

It will be elegantly bound. It will be a book for the home and the fireside. It will be a book to give to your friends when they ask, What is Freethought—what has it done and what is it doing in the world?

This is the most universal presentation of Freethought ever given to the public, and no Freethinker can afford to be without it. It is a library in itself.

In Place of Christianity—What?

A correspondent wants to know what he should substitute for the Christian religion to make himself and the world better. What does Christianity offer? is a preliminary question. Leaving the God dogma to one side, as it is not the private property of Christianity, we find that this religious system rests on certain assumptions pertaining to the origin of the world, the first appearance of man on the earth, his early and subsequent relations to God, his alleged "fallen" state, places of future reward and punishment, his possible redemption through the shedding of the blood of a God-man said to hav been sent to the earth for this purpose, the infallibility of the collection of books in which we find the account of the "creation" and the later reputed events, etc., etc.

Christianity says that the universe was created by God, in six days. Science says that the universe has existed for unnumbered ages, and is the result of the operation of forces never at rest, in and upon matter, which cannot be destroyed, and hence could not hav been created. Therefore, substitute for the unverifiable guess of theology the demonstrable truth of science.

Christianity says that a perfect man and woman were made by God a little less than six thousand years ago. Geology shows that man has existed on this earth at least a quarter of a million years, and biology demonstrates that he was no more nearly "perfect" in the past than he is to-day, to put it very mildly. Study natural science instead of accepting a theory of man's beginning proved to be wholly unbased on facts.

Christianity avers that the first man and woman were tempted to sin by a bad god called a devil, who appeared in the guise of a snake; that this first "sin" brought suffering and death into the world, and forced upon God the necessity of drowning all but a handful of earth's inhabitants in a universal deluge. The revelations of science show us that suffering and death were always concomitants or effects of sentient existence; that animals lived upon each other millions of years before the time of the alleged creation, and that the legend of a universal flood grew out of the fact of local floods in ages when a man's "world" was the very limited province in which he lived. Therefore, again, search for truth as it is in nature and compare it with the assertions of the theologians.

Christianity declares that the drowning expedient was not a success, the descendants of the few who were saved being as great sinners as the people who were drowned. So God had recourse to the experiment of sending one-half of himself to associate with a young woman, the result being the birth of a hybrid—one-third of himself—through whose vicarious sacrifice all who should believe the Munchausenism would be enabled to dodge hell, a place of excruciating and eternal torture, by giddily walking a terribly narrow footbridge across a chasm debouching into the "bottomless pit," and squeeze into heaven, a place of eternal insipidity and felicity. The virgin-born redeemer scheme has always been a trump card of the religion manufacturers, and there is nothing new about this Judean one save the names of the characters. In place of the fantastic tale our correspondent should place the deductions of sound common sense and critical scholarship. As a matter of fact, the more sensible Christians of to-day hav found something to put in the place of these nonsensical dogmas. About all they retain of the old simon-pure Christianity is the name, although some of them cannot get its spirit of intolerance out of their blood.

Christianity says that the Bible is authentic, genuin and inerrant, the very word of God. Impartial investigation and historical comparison show beyond the shadow of a doubt that it is largely unreliable in its historical averments; that much of it is spurious, and that from Genesis to Revelations it abounds in errors of every conceivable kind. The evidence is simply overwhelming that it is the work of imperfect man. In place of this book as an infallible guide given us by God, we take it—as we take all other books of the past and present—as one of the fruits of man's groping after knowledge and happiness, and we are prepared to accept whatever there is within its covers which is good viewed in the light and measured by the standards of this age. We must not stultify our reason and smother our ethical sense in order to accept as true and moral statements and maxims merely because they are found in an old book which a priest, who is a party in interest, assures us is divine.

Then, for what is false in Christianity we advise our friend to substitute all attainable truth; for the vengeance of the gods, the best possible human justice; for the intolerance of the creeds, the right of private judgment in all things, that is, Freethought, abstract and concrete; and for nightmare dreams about heavens and hells in unlocated spheres, the study of sociology and ethics, that the hells of this world may be destroyed and its heavens multiplied, widened, and beautified.

Christianizing the Constitution.

The Church Reformer of February 10th has a full report of the hearing in behalf of the Christian amendment before the sub-committee of the House Committee on the Judiciary. The sub-committee consisted of Representativs Charles J. Boatner, of Louisiana; Wm. L. Terry, of Arkansas, and Wm. A. Stone, of Pennsylvania. Representativ Isaac Goodnight, of Kentucky, a member of the Judiciary Committee, but not of the sub-committee, was also present. Representativ Elijah A. Morse, of Massachusetts, who introduced the resolution in the House, was present as a special attorney for the Reform Association, taking full notes of the hearing, and interjecting arguments in favor of the Covenanter program. The theocrats were also represented by Revs. H. H. George, W. J. Robinson, T. P. Stevenson, D. C. Martin, and D. McAllister. Surely that was a one-sided hearing.

Part of the time devoted to the hearing was consumed by an informal conversation on "certain aspects of the resolution." The Christian Reformer says:

"It was brought out by different speakers that Romanism makes the Pope the final authoritativ interpreter of moral law for nations as well as for individuals. Nations must, according to the papal claim, which is inherent and essential to the papacy, accept moral law as interpreted by the infallible Pope as final. Protestants hold that the nation must interpret moral law in its own sphere of action for itself, taking help from advice, and counsel from churches or other bodies or individuals that may address it by petitions or memorials or public meetings."

In other words, matters of conscience and morals are to be decided on one hand by the infallible head of a church, and on the other by an infallible majority led or bullied by churches and their auxiliary societies. On one side we must obey the Pope, or be excommunicated; one the other, we must submit to government by preacher or be fined and imprisoned. It is the old dilemma—the devil on one side and the deep sea on the other. As between the two, we prefer the first. Those of us who do not believe in the devil do not fear him; the ghostly penalties of Rome do not frighten us in the least; so long as we can keep church and state separate, the Satan of the Vatican may fire all the ecclesiastical arrows at us that he pleases. But in the deep sea of legal punishments the least superstitious of Freethinkers may easily drown. We much prefer to keep our Constitution as it is, and take our chances in a fair field with Rome and the Covenanter.

Here is a thought for Secretary McAllister and his associates: Has it not occurred to these gentlemen that the church of an infallible Pope may just as readily as the Protestant churches giv "counsel" and "advice" to the state which sets out to control conscience and morals? Why may not Rome thus help the nation "interpret moral law"? You gentlemen claim that you are helping the nation do this when you seek by the use of every influence and instrumentality at your command to amend into the Constitution a recognition of God, Jesus, and the Bible. You say that this is not the union of church and state, oh, no. It is simply the "interpretation of the moral law" by the Protestant minority, which calls itself "the nation." But suppose the Catholics are in any nation in a majority, cannot they in the same way secure the national recognition of the Virgin Mary, of the confessional, et al., and this without a union of church and state if you are right in your contention that your schemes do not involve such union? Of course. All they will hav to do will be to giv "advice" and "counsel" "by petitions or memorials" addressed to the law-making body, or by "public meetings" mold public sentiment and influence legislators.

To return to the hearing on February 1st: Dr. McAllister made an address to the sub-committee, which we hav not space to answer in detail. Some of the questions asked and remarks made by the representativs call for a few words. Judge Boatner thought that the clause in the proposed amendment which makes "acknowledgment of the just government of Almighty God over nations would bring us into serious trouble. We should acknowledge God's supreme authority, and I believe all our blessings come from him. But it will never do to charge the evils which are man's own doing upon the Almighty." Mr. Boatner does not say what he thinks of the omnipotence of a God who lets man overturn his moral law.

Mr. McAllister thought that the adoption of this amendment would "effectually guard against all uniting of church and state." He added:

"Let the nation itself recognize its own obligations in its proper sphere of law and rights, distinct from that of the church, to take the law of God as the rule of its conduct, and then let it interpret and apply that law for itself, and there will be embodied in one fundamental law the most effectual barrier possible against all intermingling and confounding of the relations and functions and duties of church and state."

This is charmingly frank. Hitherto there hav been unions of church and state, more or less close, and there hav been state churches in various nations. But now we are to hav a state which is at the same time a church, or to make use of a compound which we hav often found it convenient to employ, a state-church. This state-church is "to take the law of God as the rule of its conduct," and is to interpret and apply that law for itself," and this taking and interpreting are to erect an "effectual barrier against all intermingling and confounding of the relations and functions and duties of church and state." But what is "the law of God?" Each sect says it knows just what that law is. Who are to "interpret and apply" it? Congress and the state legislatures, presumably, aided by the president and the governors and the courts. This will make Congress and the legislatures practically church councils, and the legislators priests. But suppose that the priests in Congress, for instance, do not "interpret" the "law of God" in a manner satisfactory to the priests in the pulpits, what then? More "advice" and "council" will be tendered, we presume, and the barrier between the churches and the Church will be badly shaken. We hav so many kinds of religion that there is bound to be very lively times in these church-state councils (now called Congress and legislatures) when the political priests of the the warring sects set about the task of interpreting and applying some part of "the law of God."

Could any clearer demonstration of the folly and criminality of this carrying of religion into politics be made than Mr. McAllister has given us in the paragraph quoted? Religion is a matter which the individual must decide for himself. When "the nation" begins "to interpret the law of God,' pandemonium breaks loose.

Congressman Goodnight asked: "How will this affect the Unitarians?" To which Congressman Stone replied: "They are not of great account so far as numbers are concerned." Of course not. They do not cast many votes, and everybody knows that only large masses of voters hav any rights. Christian law is made for the protection of the strong, who do not need it; not for the weak, who do. But Mr. Goodnight was not satisfied with the answer of Mr. Stone, and he retorted: "No, not in numbers, but that does not meet the question." Manifestly not. Mr. McAllister said there would be "no difficulty whatever with such representativ Unitarians as Dr. Channing and Dr. A. D. Mayo," and Dr. Stevenson supplemented, "or Dr. Gannet." Continuing, Mr. McAllister said:

"Such men hav said that a mere acknowledgment of God, without a distinctivly Christian element, such as that in the words, 'according to God's appointed way, through Jesus Christ,' would not meet their desires. A number of these men hav been activ workers for the Christian amendment of our national Constitution."

These men are fine representativs of the "Liberal" Christians! In this bad company should be placed Dr. Miner, the Universalist.

Dr. McAllister argued that the Jews would not resist the adoption of this amendment because, in spite of the fact that the unwritten constitution of this country is distinctivly Christian, they hav come here. Why did they come, he asks in substance, if they fear Christian institutions will jeopardize their liberties? His answer is that they hav no such fear. He says:

"Jews hav come hither attracted by the liberty which the moral laws of Christianity hav secured. They enjoy full protection in all their rights just because the nation is Christian in its unwritten constitution."

This is special pleading. Jews hav enjoyed a very large liberty in this country because we hav had much less of Christianity in our written and unwritten law than hav had most other Christian nations, for this nation is Christian in the sense that a majority of its people hav at least a nominal belief in what to-day passes for Christianity. But if Jews come to this country because of our unwritten Christian constitution instead of in despite or disregard of it, then they must hav gone to England for the same reason in the years before the repeal of the disability acts under which their people suffered. Then England had an unwritten Christian constitution and written Christian statutes which cruelly discriminated against the Jews. Yet they lived there. Why? Was it because they loved Christian oppression and oppressors, or because they must liv somewhere and other Christian nations were still more outrageous in their persecutions? Is not this one of the chief reasons why they come here? Russia is a Christian nation and the Jews are very oppressivly treated there. Why did they remain until thousands were banished? Was it "just because the nation was Christian"?

It is rank nonsense to claim that the Jews will favor the Christianizing of this government because the absence of Christian laws here has enabled them to dwell in America in a state of comparativ security denied them in the Old World, where Christian prejudice and Christian laws hav robbed, tortured, and slaughtered them for centuries. Mr. McAllister, usually a shrewd polemic, was fatally off his guard when he advanced this argument.

The Constitution provides that amendments to it may be ratified by either the legislatures of three-fourths of the states or by three-fourths of the conventions in the states, which conventions may be ordered by Congress when it submits the amendment. Up to this time all proposed amendments hav been submitted to the legislatures, but the one now pending in committee of Congress is to go to conventions, as the resolution now reads. Why this departure from the old custom? Why the expense which these conventions will involve? Is it not apparent that the theocrats think that members of conventions elected on this issue will serve their purposes more surely than will members of the legislatures? The action of the latter in voting against ratification might not seriously imperil their political futures while, as we think the Covenanters reason, there are many strongly Christian communities in which politicians would not dare stand out openly on an anti-amendment ticket, and so the amendment candidate would hav an easy race. Then the theocrats undoubtedly presume, with good cause, that there would be very many constituencies in which, because of their comparativ poverty or their failure to realize the necessity for unceasing activity, the opponents of the amendment would fail to act promptly and vigorously. It seems to be certain that there is a very large and hungry cat in this convention mealbag. We cannot be too alert and aggressiv.

Another Pious Lie Nailed.

Mr. Watts tells us something about the "Converted Atheist Shoemaker" in his "Notes" this week. Mr. Foote, in his paper, the London Freethinker, completes the story. He has found that the "Herbert" of Rev. Hugh Price Hughes's narrativ was a Charles Alfred Gibson, of Northampton; that he never was a Freethinker, much less a distinguished speaker at Victoria Park and in the Hall of Science; that he and all others of his father's family were Christians, and that before his alleged conversion from Atheism at the West End Mission he had worn the uniform of the Salvation Army; that his wife Julia was the author of the essential features of the story, and that Mr. Hughes had received the tale from her and "Sister Beatrice" of the mission without the least attempt at investigation and had worked it over and embellished it with fanciful additions of his own, sending the finished romance out in a large pamphlet as a sober history of the conversion of one of the foremost Atheist speakers in England. The father and brothers of Gibson, earnest Christians, repudiate every material allegation in Hughes's pamphlet and appeared upon the platform of the Hall of Science to substantiate Mr. Foote's statements. But all these facts do not prevent Mr. Hughes from flooding England with Mr. Holyoake's "vindication" of the Methodist novelist, which goes far to prove that that gentleman knew all the time that his story was a fake of the worst kind. Mr. Holyoake admits that Gibson was the name given him in confidence by Mr. Hughes as the real cognomen of his "John Herbert." Mr. Foote is doing his part of the work thoroughly, after the manner of the English Freethinkers, and the lie will be chased by the refutation into every nook and corner of the land. One hundred thousand copies of Mr. Foote's exposé will be at once printed and distributed. The London newspapers reported very fairly the Science Hall meeting at which the Gibsons appeared.

Referring to Puck, the Catholic Telegraph remarks:

"Catholics throughout the country could teach Puck a sorrowful leason if they would, but they won't. It is simply astonishing what an amount of patience the average Catholic has for the insults heaped upon him and his church by some secular sheets which he helps to maintain with his money."

And the Catholic Review adds:

"It is a barber-shop paper—and in intelligence matches its clientele."

There is certainly something inharmonious about those two statements. It seems to be a fact that the Review means to depreciate the intelligence of barber-shop habitues, else it would not hav flung the epithet of "barber-shop paper" at Puck," coupled with the statement that its intelligence matches that of its readers, in said shops. But how are we to reconcile this with the assertion of the Catholic Telegraph that Catholics help to maintain Puck? which must mean that they buy the paper, in which case the conclusion seems irresistible that their intelligence is on a par with that of the barber-shop patrons, and as the intelligence of Puck matches that of the latter, it does not seem that the mental superiority of the Catholics has been established.

RESEARCHES IN ORIENTAL HISTORY. Embracing the Origin of the Jews, the Rise and Development of Zoroastrianism, and the Derivation of Christianity; to which is added, Whence our Aryan Ancestors? By George W. Brown, M.D. Fourth Edition.

Dr. Brown has been a pioneer and practical reformer all his life. Going to Kansas in the early years of the fierce struggle out of which that perpetually perturbed domain was born a free state, he threw himself into the conflict with the slave power, and fought worthily in the cause of human justice. Calm, firm, thoughtful, and courageous, he was never a partisan at the expense of truth, fair play, and humanity. He has sought all his life to get at the facts, to dig deeply for the radicals from which grow upward all aspirations, religions, politics. He has never been satisfied to believe on hearsay and to yield his reason at the behest of authority. He has patiently explored, collected, classified, reasoned, and one of the results of his painstaking investigations is this work on our desk, "Researches in Oriental History." The book has slowly developed, appearing first in short installments in the columns of a public journal, and its author had ample time in which to arrange and systematize the material which he had carefully collected. It was Dr. Brown's purpose to show how the religious beliefs and the ecclesiastical hierarchy of our time and nation hav grown from seeds sown by the priests and mystics, by the prophets (so-called), and scientists of bygone ages, distant lands, and early religions. He holds that it is better to explain superstitions and distorted conceptions than to attack them. When they are understood they cease to astonish, terrify, and corrupt. Dr. Brown quotes Las Casas in this connection: "Idolaters never giv up their idols voluntarily, because no one can leave, of his own choice and with pleasure, that which he has drawn in with his mother's milk. · · · Before idols can be taken from their hearts, we must know the conception and estimation the idolaters hav of their gods, and then paint upon their hearts the conception of truth." Our author adds: "Is there not more hope of reforming the idolater by teaching him how and by whom his idols were made, than by an indiscriminate slaughter of those lifeless and senseless objects of ignorant devotion?" Such is the spirit and such the purpose whose concrete fruit is this handsome volume of Oriental Researches.

In the preface Dr. Brown states that his "facts are almost wholly drawn from well-known ecclesiastical and reliable historical authors, many of whom were writing in the interest of the church to further protract its power and its existence. Great care has been taken to avoid skeptical authority."

"The subject of morals, Christian or otherwise," has not been canvassed in this volume. The author's object was to trace the rise of dogmas. In this time of theocratic machinations for the subversion of the system of civil self-government which has hitherto been the pride of the American people, the publication of such a work as this Dr. Brown deems most opportune, because it shows the sources and explains the meaning of the dogmatic affirmations which misguided men are seeking to force upon their fellow citizens by the power of the law.

Part I. of "Researches" is devoted to investigations of Jewish History. Dr. Brown disputes the Christian assumption that "the pagan theology, physics, politics, poetry, history, and rhetoric are deduced from sacred names, persons, rites, and records." He demonstrates that the exact opposit of this is the truth. In this connection he quotes at length from "Ancient Empires of the East," by the Christian interpreter of the Assyrian monuments, Prof. A. H. Sayce, of Oxford University. The territory later occupied (from about 1700 B. C.) by the Chaldean and still later by the Babylonian empire, was formerly substantially covered by the Accadian empire, whose capital was Agade. Of the civilization of those pre-Christian and pre-Jewish ages I will let the Christian scholar, Professor Sayce, testify:

From the earliest period the literature of Chaldea was stored in public libraries. · · · Every great city had at least one library, and the office of librarian was considered honorable enough to be held by the brother of the king. The most famous of the Babylonian libraries were those of Erech, Larsa, and Ur, and of Agadé. The older library of Babylon perished for the most part when the town was destroyed by Sennacherib. Scribes were kept busily employed in copying and reëditing old texts, and more rarely in preparing new ones. The copies were made with scrupulous care. · · · When an Assyrian scribe was in doubt as to the meaning of a character in his Babylonian copy, he either reproduced it or gave it two or more possible equivalents in the Assyrian syllabary.

The libraries established by the Assyrian kings at Assur, Calah, and Nineveh, were formed in imitation of those of Babylonia. Like the Babylonian libraries, also, they were thrown open to the public, though it is extremely doubtful whether the reading public was so large in Syria as in the sister kingdom. At any rate, their contents were derived almost entirely from Babylonia. The tablets or books were all numbered and arranged in order, and the table of the chapters in the great astronomical work compiled for Sargon's library at Agadé (B. C. 3800) enjoins the student to hand to the librarian in writing the number of the book or chapter he wished to procure.

Think of it! These marvelous libraries, these great storehouses of learning, already in existence, only 200 years after the creation! Why, Adam had yet 730 years to liv! Cain would not be born for thirty years! It was 2055 years before the birth of Judah, alleged to be the father of the Jews! And yet all languages, all literature, all art, all science, all ethics came from the Jews!

Again, Professor Sayce:

Observatories were established in all the chief towns [of Accadia], and astronomers-royal were appointed who had to send fortnightly reports to the king. At an early date the stars were numbered and named; the zodiacal signs had been mapped out while the vernal equinox still fell in Taurus; and eclipses of the sun and moon had been found to recur after a certain fixed time, and were consequently calculated and looked for. The equator was divided into degrees, sixty being the unit, as in other departments of mathematics. · · · Time was measured, at all events at a later epoch, by means of the clepsydra, and the gnomon or dial was a Babylonian invention. So, also, was the week of seven days, which was closely connected with the early astronomical studies of the Accadians, the days of the week being dedicated to the moon, sun, and five planets. The 7th, 14th, 21st, and 28th days of the lunar months were kept like the Jewish Sabbath; and were actually so named in Assyria. They were termed dies nefasti in Accadian, rendered "days of completion of labor" in Assyrian; the Assyrian Sabattu or "Sabbath" itself being further defined as meaning "completion of work" and "a day of rest for the soul." On these days it was forbidden, at all events, in the Accadian period, to cook food, to change one's dress or to wear white robes, to offer sacrifice, to ride in a chariot, to legislate, to practice augury, or even to use medicin.

This was in the Accadian empire, which went down 1700 years B. C. and 129 years before the birth of Moses. Twelve hundred years before a Jew was known. But here was a "Sabbath," rigid, puritanical, cruel, long before there was a Moses to whom Jehovah could hav given the command for the observance of the "Sabbath of the Lord!" which we of to-day are told we must reverence under penalty of the law's condign punishment. The only change is, that the asserted divine attributes of Moses's (!) Sabbath hav been transferred to Constantine's Sunday. Professor Sayce finds the very name "Sabbath" upon the pre-Jewish pagan monuments. Such is the "witness of Assyria," according to a learned Christian professor, representing a great university.

Dr. Brown shows that there are no monumental traces of the Jews in Egypt, quoting Naville, Kenrick, Brugsch Bey, and other authorities. In this chapter he speaks of the historical work of the Egyptian priest, Manetho, which was mutilated by Christian apologists to make it serve their "purpose by harmonizing Jewish, Christian, and Egyptian chronology." It was finally destroyed by Christian vandals with the Alexandria library. A few quotations made by other writers from it are all that remain to us.

Palestine was a land of caves and robbers; the Jews were idolaters; there were no Jews prior to the Babylonian captivity; Jews and Phenicians had a common history; their religious views were substantially the same that they brought with them from Persia, the latter nation having received them from ancient Bactria, whose people were taught by Zoroaster 2,400 years B.C. This Zoroastrian source of the most important Hebraic and Christian doctrins has been admitted by a Catholic writer in the London Nineteenth Century in this year of grace, 1894.

The remaining chapters of Part I. are devoted to a comparison of the statements of Jewish and contemporary historians, to an inquiry after the authors of the Jewish records, an exposition of how Bibles are made, and an explanation of Dr. Brown's reasons for writing this book.

Part II. givs the results of researches in Zoroastrianism; Part III. tells us of the derivation of Christianity, and Part IV. answers the question, "Whence came the Aryans?"

In some future issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER I may, with the Editor's consent, present to its readers a few more fragments of this fascinating and instructiv book.

W. F. JAMIESON expects to lecture in Scofield, Coalville, and Salt Lake City, Utah; and in Merced and Escondido, Cal.; also to hold a four nights' debate in Los Angeles. He can accept no calls from Arizona and New Mexico this year. Address Elsinore, Cal.

In Opposition to the Christian Amendment.

To the Friends and Members of the Freethought Federation:

I shall arrange to be present at Washington, March 6th, to meet the present dangerous movement to amend the Constitution so as to make this a Christian government, which amendment will legally disfranchise every Freethinker in the land. I desire funds to push this work, and I ask friends at once to rally to my assistance. Write to members of committee and to your senators and representativs in Congress. Send your contributions for the work to E. C. Reichwald, treasurer of Freethought Federation, 165 South Water street, Chicago.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,
President of Federation.

Lectures and Meetings.

THE Milwaukee Liberal Club meets at Severance Hall, 421 Milwaukee street, every Sunday at 7.30 P.M.

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL lectures Saturday evening, Feb. 24th, at Battle Creek, Mich. Subject, "Shakspere."

THE Radical Library meets in Skerrett's Hall, Ridge avenue, and Green street, Philadelphia. Open on Tuesday, 7.30 to 10 P.M.

THE Pittsburg Secular Society meets in Curry University Hall, Sixth street, near Penn avenue, every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

S. P. PUTNAM'S lecture appointments:
Metamora, Mich., March 1, 2.
Toronto, March 4, 11.

THE Ohio Liberal Society meets in College Hall, 168½ Walnut street, Cincinnati, Sunday evenings at 7:45, prompt. Admission is free.

W. F. JAMIESON desires to make lecture engagements in Nevada, Utah, and Colorado, along the lines of railroad East. Address W. F. Jamieson, Elsinore, Cal.

THE WOMEN'S LIBERAL LEAGUE, of Philadelphia, meets in the Skerrett Building, Ridge avenue and Green street, Tuesday evenings at 8 o'clock. Admission free. All are welcome.

THE First Secular Church of Portland, Ore., meets in Central Labor Council Hall, 170½ Second street near Yamhill, every Sunday at 7.30 P. M. Katie Kehm Smith, lecturer. Sunday-school in same place at 12:30 P.M.

THE Brooklyn Philosophical Association holds meetings every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in Long Island Business College, South Eighth street, between Bedford and Driggs avenues. Program of lectures for February:

February 25th—"Morality without Christianity," Franklin Steiner.

FRANKLIN STEINER'S lecture engagements are as follows:

Feb. 25, Brooklyn, N. Y.	Mar. 12, 13, Harwich, Mass.
" 28, Ellenville, N. Y.	" 14, Cotuit, Mass.
Mar. 4, Philadelphia, Pa.	" 15, Osterville, Mass.
" 8, Norwalk, Conn.	" 18, Boston, Mass.
" 9, Meriden, Conn.	" 21–23, Northport, N.Y.
Mar. 11, Boston, Mass.	" 25, Newark, N. J.

Mr. Steiner has some open dates for his return trip. Address him, after February 12, in care of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

J. E. REMSBURG will lecture in Elmira, N. Y., Saturday evening, Feb. 24th. Elmira last heard a Freethought lecture some twelve years ago. He has been lecturing to crowded houses in Ohio. He had fifteen engagements in Northern Ohio. He is now on his way East. His appointments as far as arranged are as follows: Scranton, Pa., Feb. 25th and 28th; N. Mehoopany, Pa., Feb. 26th; Tompkinsville, Pa., Feb. 27th; New York, N. Y., Mar. 2d. Appointments for New York and Pennsylvania, also additional appointments for Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri, will be published later.

The Christian Reformer, referring to a Sunday session of the House Committee on Ways and Means, and a resolution against it introduced by Joseph Cook at one of his lectures, observes:

"The hand of God is so manifest in the present distress that Senators and Representativs should see and fear, without having their attention specially called to it by religious assemblies."

Andrew D. White should write an addendum for his "New Chapters in the Warfare of Science." He could fill many hundred pages with extracts from sermons preached and editorials written by clergymen in this country during the last ten years, which are as stupidly superstitious as anything he has cited from Middle Age ecclesiastics. What kind of a God do these men worship? Do they, in this age, believe that a just being is deliberately torturing the poor because of the offenses of the rich and ruling classes?

THE Freethinkers' Magazine for March is a Professor Tyndall Memorial number. It contains articles on the late Prof. John Tyndall from Professor Huxley, George Jacob Holyoake, Moncure D. Conway, and Charles Watts of England; Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Parker Pillsbury, Prof. C. de B. Mills, Prof. A. L. Rawson, T. B. Wakeman; and B. F. Underwood, of this country. Price, 20 cents. Address, Freethinkers' Magazine, Buffalo, N. Y.

Freethought and Secular Notes from England.

THE NEW YEAR.

The year 1894 has commenced in England amidst conditions far from discouraging. True, the financial outlook in this as in other countries is not too bright, and the state of the thousands of unemployed casts a gloom over society in general. But notwithstanding these drawbacks, there are many rays of sunshine to cheer us when contemplating the prospects of the twelve months upon which we hav just entered. The working classes throughout England manifest by their activity and the dignified stand they hav taken, that they rightly understand their position. Moreover, by their persistent and orderly propaganda it is evident that they hav discovered the right method of having their wrongs redressed. They are more united than they ever were, and, as the result of this improved attitude, the government has responded to the demand for legislation in the interests of labor. While, in my opinion, the future of the working classes must depend largely upon themselvs, Parliament can assist in getting rid of impediments which the church and the aristocracy hav placed in the way of the toiling millions working out their own redemption. And this is what the British House of Commons has been endeavoring to do for months past. Their efforts hav been, to a large extent, successful, for they hav carried three measures of first-class importance and magnitude: The Home Rule bill, the Employers' Liability bill, and the Parish Councils bill. What will be the ultimate fate of these measures in the House of Lords, cannot at present be definitly stated. But it is evident that the people of England are not in a mood to be longer fooled by an Assembly of irresponsible men who represent no one but themselvs, and that very badly. This House, with few exceptions, is composed of what John Bright termed "moral invalids and intellectual imbecils." There is every sign now that if the House of Lords is not destroyed altogether, as a legislativ chamber, it must be entirely remodeled upon a democratic basis. If a second chamber is retained in this country it will hav to be made an electiv one; the hereditary principle must cease, life peerages must be established, and the bishops will hav to withdraw and confine their labors to what they are supposed to understand—namely, the endeavor to keep together a church that is rapidly losing its once undisputed authority. These are among the reforms that are not far distant. The time of their accomplishment will depend very much upon the conduct of the lords themselvs within the next few months. They hav already once rejected the Home Rule bill, and considerably reduced the value of the Liability bill, and now they hav before them the third great measure. Will they mutilate or reject that? If so, in my opinion, their doom will be sealed.

OTHER INDICATIONS OF PROGRESS.

Whatever tends to improve the condition of "the hewers of wood and drawers of water," must be of interest to Freethinkers of all nations. Undoubtedly Secular legislation is now at the front in England, for every measure that is passed in the House of Commons which has for its object the material improvement of the people, enables them the better to carry out the Secular philosophy of life. The government has decided to establish the eight hours system of work per day for every man and youth employed in the factories and workshops under the control of the war office. As the London Daily Chronicle observes:

> The social effects of the change are great, and they will be felt not simply among the twenty thousand workmen who will immediately benefit by it without the loss of a single shilling in wage, but by the whole body of workingmen in this country, by the great Anglo-Saxon communities beyond the sea—in some of which the eight-hours day is already an almost sacred institution—and by every European country where the labor movement goes on. It is another concession to what are truly called the rights of labor, the human right to rest, to the enjoyment of family life, to self-culture, to amusement, and to variety of social outlook.

Furthermore, the government is pledged to introduce three other bills in the interest of the laborer—a new factories bill, a quarries bill, and a miners bill—all intended mainly to giv additional security to the life and person of the workman. The advantages of secular education are not to be lost sight of. A new regulation of considerable importance has been issued under the new act of 1893. Henceforth no child under eleven years of age will be allowed exemption from school attendance, whether partial or total, and all by-laws now in force in the districts which may provide for the school exemption of a child on his attaining the age of ten, or some lower age, will be construed and hav effect as if the minimum age of occupation were eleven years. Friends of educational progress will regard the change as a most beneficent step in advance. To prolong the school life by a whole year cannot but hav a lasting effect for good on the children. It is probably the most important educational advance that has been made since Mr. Mundella's act of 1880. The vice-president of the committee of council on education is also busy in substituting the teaching of science in our public schools in lieu of the old theological notions which hav so long marred the instruction given to children. Already he has appointed twelve new inspectors of science and he is also seeing that the physical condition of the children is not impaired by unhealthy school-rooms. Thus the right kind of school-masters are taking the place of the one-idea clergyman, and the realities of this life are being deemed of greater importance than are speculations as to a future existence. This is a Secular triumph of which we, as Freethinkers, feel justly proud.

AN IMPENDING STRUGGLE.

Of course it was not expected that the supporters of theological teachings would giv up their educational control over the rising generation without a struggle. Hence, at the coming school-board election these pious gentlemen intend putting forth all their energies to defeat the friends of free secular education. The practical view taken of this matter by the Freethinkers in England is, that while we should allow every person to enjoy his religion, he should pay for it himself and not tax others to support a mere personal conviction. The only true policy to be adopted in a public scheme of instruction is that the children should be taught only that which is necessary to make them good and useful citizens. Moreover, the teachers should be considered. Their duties are at present sufficiently onerous without imposing upon them the task of playing the part of amateur theologians experimenting on minds incapable of understanding the religious puzzles involved in Bible teaching. A prominent churchman recently stated that if some way is not speedily discovered out of the "religious difficulty" the "ultimate end will be in having no religious teaching at all. What we hav to fear in England to-day is not non-conformity, but Secularism." Thus spoke Mr. Torr, the recent candidate for Parliament in Lincolnshire. There is much truth in his remark, and I would suggest as a means to get over the difficulty that the public schools should be utilized for secular training only, and that the inculcation of religion should be confined to the churches and, if it is thought desirable, to the home circles. The squabble at the coming election will be, whether the Bible shall be read without comment or be read and "explained."

> Strange that such difference there should be
> 'Twixt tweedledum and tweedledee.

A BLOW AT PRIESTLY DOMINATION.

The Parish Councils bill, to which I hav already referred, deals a heavy blow to the clergy and squires of the English rural districts, and it also largely increases the principle of self-government in London. The old vestry system of London, at the head of which was the vicar of the parish, is to be swept away, and the vestries and the guardians will in future be placed under the control of the people of the metropolis. But the greatest check to clerical influence and aristocratic monopoly will be in the country districts. During the last three hundred years the poor folks in the villages hav been under the thumbs of the parson and of the squire. They were not allowed to hav any more to do with their local affairs than if they were inhabitants of the Celestial empire, except to pay and bear the burdens of a cruel monopoly. All this will be changed when this bill becomes law, for the people will then be allowed to arrange the affairs of the parish wherein they reside. The bishops and the clergy are not only troubled at this change of rulers, but they dislike the idea of the poor having control of the money and of the charities which hitherto these servants of the Lord hav used at their own discretion. To take the management of these funds from the parson and the squire, and to appoint laboring men to administer them, is considered by churchmen as "a wicked and an infamous attempt at the spoliation of the church of God." It is deemed by some of the orthodox party a dreadful and an appalling thing that workingmen should be placed on a level with the minister of one who "had nowhere to lay his head." The fact is, a contempt is growing in the mind of poor Hodge for his parson. The villagers were taught in their childhood to reverence their pastors and masters, to obey the king and all in authority under him, and for them now to claim to hav minds of their own, and to refuse to be led like lambs to the slaughter, is denounced as base ingratitude. However, the knell of the downfall of priestly supremacy is sounded and a victory is at hand for the principles of true democracy.

CHILDREN AND THEIR "BETTERS."

Under the above heading the following letter appeared in the London Chronicle of January 19th. It illustrates the humiliating, degrading, and non-self-reliant manner in which children are trained who are under the influence of the country parson and squire:

> Miss Florence, Balgarnie, writes: "In your issue of January 18th you describe as an 'extremely fatuous piece of tomfoolery' the remark made by a clergyman at the English Church Union in Birmingham, to the effect that in driving along the queen's highway he knows by the difference in demeanor of the children whether they are brought up in denominational or rate-supported schools. I venture to think, however, that the remark is not so 'fatuous' as it appears, and I hav long ago come to the same conclusion. The child from the voluntary school may be recognized, especially in rural districts, by its obsequious behavior on the queen's highway to those it has been taught to call its 'betters'—i. e., 'the squire and his relations'—and distinguishes itself by standing still with open mouth to make 'bob curtsies' to the 'gentry' as they roll by in their carriage. If the carriage happens to be empty it matters not, the curtsy is made all the same to the outward and visible sign of wealth and patronage. Would that in every school which lays claim to state aid we might see written in letters of gold the words of Victor Hugo: 'I bow only to genius—kneel only to goodness.'"

SUCCESSFUL INTOLERANCE.

Last year the legislature of Guernsey passed a bill on primary education which was to include the teaching of the doctrins of the Church of England under the direction of the rectors of the different parishes, and such schools were to be supported from the public taxes. The whole of the Non-comformists of the island resented such an affront to religious liberty and equality. Petitions against this injustice were unavailing, for bigotry was too strong in this instance for justice. The queen, by the advice of the council for conducting the affairs of the channel islands, has given her sanction to the bill in its entirety, and for the present injustice reigns.

PROFESSOR TYNDALL AND CHRISTIAN MOCKERY.

Professor Huxley pays a touching and sympathetic tribute to his late friend, Professor Tyndall, in the Nineteenth Century for last month. Some professed Christians were sadly disappointed that Tyndall in no way modified his Agnostic views before he died. His friends, I regret to say, did not fail to perform a farce at his funeral; for they buried him in a churchyard and had the inconsistency to hav the church burial service read over his body. Of course it could not harm the professor, but what of the clergyman in holy orders who was the principal actor in the farce? He must hav known that nearly every word of that service, when applied to the great Agnostic, must hav been a sham. The same thing was done with the illustrious Darwin. It is too much the custom when Freethinkers die to bury them in "the sure and certain hope of a resurrection," even while it is well known that during life they had no such hope. I regard such theological impertinence as a violation of common honesty and nothing less than a solemn mockery.

SUGGESTIV FACTS.

During the past year the deaths of nineteen clergymen in England reveal the fact that their gross personality was valued at £1,152,530, which represents nearly six million dollars. This is a good sum, divided among nineteen preachers of a gospel that makes poverty a test of perfection, and that pronounces riches the greatest impediment to entering the kingdom of heaven. These followers of the "poor Galilean" evidently believed that "a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush." The anomalies of the Church of England are like Sam Weller's knowledge of London, extensiv and peculiar. The bishop of Winchester recently prohibited his vicar taking part in a united communion at a Presbyterian church, upon the ground that it would be contrary to church laws. The vicar retaliated by reminding his lordship that he patronized those who performed mass for the dead, which was also against his church law. Hence the vicar is unable to see "the equity of interfering with his Christian liberty." But he does not bear in mind the distinction drawn by Shakspere—namely, "What in the captain is but a choleric word, is in the mouth of the corporal blasphemy." It is no new thing for bishops to preach one thing and to practice another. They seldom do unto others what they would that others should do unto them. There is now in preparation a catalog of the British Museum. Part I. has just appeared, from which we learn that the museum contains only one edition of the whole Bible in the two original languages of Hebrew and Greek, and that this edition is the one published at Leipsic in 1741 by Michaelis. This will be rather startling information for some of our English Bible idolaters.

TWO REVEREND CHARACTERS.

A great fluttering goes on in clerical circles in this country whenever the Rev. Charles Gore is announced to add anything to his "Lux Mundi." The ex-librarian of Pusey House is a vicar and a high churchman, and for some time he has been endeavoring to engraft the metaphysics of Hegel upon the creed of the Church of England. In his forthcoming addition to the above-mentioned work he intends to explain and to justify the position that he has taken in this matter. When the book appears the controversial pens will make the ink fly, as five other "eminent men" hav joined Mr. Gore in his new high-church constellation. Another reverend gentleman of a very different school has just caused some excitement in theological circles. This is the notorious Dr. Parker, of the City Temple of London, who is not at all backward in resorting to peculiar expedients to advertise himself. His latest novelty is to challenge the bishop of London to occupy the Temple pulpit, and to state the case of the national church; while he, Dr. Parker, is to be allowed St. Paul's Cathedral wherein to state the claims of nonconformity. What this means or why this challenge was given, is not explained. But the doctor says it must be a "debate," and the first who makes an offensiv personal remark shall retire. This is certainly a unique idea of debate, with only one disputant at each session, and the subjects to be dealt with so totally different, as conformity and nonconformity undoubtedly are. The two discourses may be termed lectures, but to designate them "debate" is like the peace of God—it passeth all understanding.

THE UNITARIAN LUX MUNDI.

The Anglican party hav issued their Lux Mundi, which was followed by the Dissenters' "Faith and Criticism," and now we hav the Unitarians' manifesto in a work called "Religion and Modern Thought." This is indeed a period of literary activity in the theological world. Explanation and defense are found necessary, in order that Christianity may retain the professed adherence of any portion of the thinking public. These pious manifestos are very amusing to the disinterested observer. First, the Pope issues his claims, then the Protestant Church of England comes with its exposition; this is followed by the dissenting statement of Christian principles, and lastly comes the Unitarian elucidation of the "true faith." Be it observed, they each differ widely from all the others as to what is to be understood by Christianity. It is clear that competition is not confined to commercial pursuits. It is singular, however, that the Unitarians should be the last in the field of criticism to which in times past their leading men devoted so much of their time. In the work just issued, evolution is regarded as the means employed by God to unfold "his own power and glory." Then we are told that the Unitarians "brush away all miracles from the Bible, treating even the resurrection of Jesus as a legend." It appears that Unitarianism is losing ground in its old home, Boston, Mass. We hav always thought that this phase of the Christian faith was too indefinit to catch hold of the masses.

DEATH OF A FREETHOUGHT VETERAN.

Many English Freethinkers who are in the United States and Canada will probably remember Mr. J. P. Adams, who thirty years ago was the principal manager of Freethought propaganda in London. Death has recently closed his career, which was a most valuable one to the Secular cause. He was a thorough Atheist and a deadly opponent of all phases of theology. At the period named he was a regular contributor to the National Reformer, and he was never happier than when working to promote the cause of Freethought. For the last few years age and physical infirmity rendered it imperativ for him to retire from activ life. When living, he was respected by all who knew him, and now he is dead his memory will be revered by his many friends on both sides of the Atlantic.

THE CONVERTED ATHEIST SHOEMAKER.

The Freethinkers of England are just now in the midst of considerable excitement in consequence of a certain action that Mr. George Jacob Holyoake has recently taken in reference to this well-known case. The facts briefly are these: Some years ago the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, a Methodist minister of some notoriety, published a story that he had converted an Atheist who was a popular speaker on the Secular platform in this country. The real name of the alleged convert was not given, and as the Freethinkers here knew of no such departure from their ranks, Mr. Bradlaugh, who was then president of the National Secular Society, wrote to the reverend gentleman for the name of the convert, and also for particulars of his conversion. But neither the one nor the other was given. This occurred in the summer of 1889, and as time went on no information of this said conversion could be obtained, despite the fact that repeated efforts were made to secure it. Then Mr. G. W. Foote wrote a severe criticism upon the story (which he emphatically denied), under the title of "A Lie in Five Chapters." So the matter stood until recently, when an arrangement was made between the Rev. H. P. Hughes and Mr. George Jacob Holyoake that the latter gentleman should investigate the case and publish the result. This has been done, and the Methodist Times for January 18th has a full report of Mr. Holyoake's "investigation," with his portrait. This was considered a trump card for the Methodist paper and for orthodox Christians in general; the more so when Mr. Holyoake asserts: "I do not doubt the substantial truth" of Mr. Hughes's statement. Mr. Foote, in the Freethinker of January 21st, also publishes the report of the investigation, and his reply thereto. The president of the National Secular Society still adheres to his original charge against Mr. Hughes, and denies that the investigation was a fair and reliable one. For instance, he was not made aware of what was going on, and moreover the name of the "converted" man is not even now made public. Apart from Mr. Holyoake, none of us know more than we did before he undertook his task of inquiry. At the time of my writing the case is in a very unsatisfactory state. It will not, I presume, rest where it is, and in my next "Notes" I hope to be in a position to state that the facts, one way or the other, hav been discovered. Although I entertain a profound admiration for Mr. Holyoake, I am at a loss to conceive what induced him to associate himself with our opponents in the matter without consulting with Mr. Foote, who certainly should hav had his representativ present at the investigation. After reading all that Mr. Holyoake has published upon the subject, I am of opinion that Mr. Foote was right in doubting the accuracy of the story and in demanding proofs of the allegations made. But what is done is done, and the best way to settle the whole matter is to hav a complete investigation, and let the name of the heroic Atheist (?) be told to three gentlemen of our party, in confidence, if necessary. Of course I in no way impugn my friend Holyoake's veracity; but, as he admits he is not infallible, his judgment may be defectiv, particularly when it was exercised under the peculiar circumstances of this one-sided inquiry. Inasmuch as thousands of persons are interested in the truth or otherwise of the story, I contend that more than one person should be informed of all that is to be known in reference thereto. CHARLES WATTS.

A Word With Mr. Perry.

Mr. Perry, I want to talk about spirits and Spiritualism, concerning which I know nothing. You know all; you are the teacher, I am the learner. You know all, and are positiv; I know nothing, but am inquisitiv. I can reason only from analogy; you claim to reason from facts. You say of Mr. Wettstein: "If he had made half the effort to obtain and observe some of the facts and evidences of the reality of spirit which he has made to oppose it," etc.

I never had an opportunity to investigate Spiritualism, and I frankly say so. But I am taking the most direct means open to me to do so, by asking a man who knows all about it to instruct me. To my mind, with the information which I hav been able to gather, spirits seem as impossible as gods, ghosts, devils, and witches. I hav read a great deal about Spiritualism. Men say that it is true and a reality. But if we should take all that is said as truth, without exercising our reason, where would we be led? We should be compelled to believe in the six days of creation. We should believe in the inspiration of a dozen or twenty so-called inspired books, in gods begetting other gods, immaculate conceptions, the rib story, the snake, the Samson story, the flood story, the Jonah story, and a thousand other stories which outrage science and sense. Even the law of gravitation would be in question, for it is told that men hav gone up from the earth bodily. Thus we see the danger of trusting to what others say without proof, and without using our reason and senses.

You convey the idea that you hav evidence that death does not "end all." To my mind there is no such evidence. Will you tell me how it is possible for a mind to exist without a physical organization and a nerve system? In other words, tell me where I can find a mind disconnected with animal life. Will you please tell me how it is possible for a brainless skull to think? How a dead eye can see? Will you explain how one can feel when there is no nerve to convey the sense of feeling to the brain? What kind of man would remain if deprived of the sense of feeling, tasting, smelling, seeing, and hearing? He would not know as much as a jelly-fish. There would be nothing to enjoy, nothing to suffer. For Webster defines death as the total and permanent cessation of all the vital functions. Will you tell me how a dead man can speak, see, hear, stand, or perform any act, either mental or physical, or enjoy or suffer anything?

But you reply that there is a soul, a spirit, or a something, which passes out of a man at death and which can exercise these functions. Will you please explain to me how death can be total and at the same time only partial? Tell me what this soul, spirit, or something is, that I may get an idea of it. If it is something it must hav length, breadth, depth, and ponderability; tell me how much it measures, put it on the scales and tell me how much it weighs. I may convey to your mind the scent of a flower you never saw, by telling you that it smells like the rose. You tell me what this soul, spirit, ghost, or what-not smells like. Tell me how I can hear it, see it, feel it, or get some tangible idea of it through my senses. Put something into an envelope, which has neither weight, length, breadth, nor thickness, which can neither be felt, tasted, smelt, seen, nor heard, and send it to me. I want to find out what that envelope will contain. If my mind is so obtuse that I cannot understand, I want to know the fact. But to me the difficulty seems to lie in trying to describe something which does not exist. You try to imitate a noise which you never heard, or to describe something which you never saw, and you will begin to realize where the difficulty lies. So it seems to me, but I do not know.

I hav read of Indians appearing in full nativ costume—with bows, arrows, tomahawks, and scalping-knives. I hav read of their being adorned with feathers, scalps, teeth, claws, bones, beads, and shells, and that the rattle of the shells and bones and beads could be distinctly heard.

Do these Indians at first appear in a nude state, or do they appear in full dress, with feathers, tomahawks, shells, bones, and beads, all complete? Are the bones, beads, etc., real bones and beads, or are they spiritual? If spiritual, what was it that died to furnish souls or spirits for them? Then what becomes of them? Do they dematerialize when the Indians vanish? I should think it would put nature to her very best effort to dematerialize a flint arrowhead or a tomahawk made of iron and steel. I hav heard of spirits appearing with rich jewelry and costly diamonds, which are considered next to imperishable. Suppose a person should capture one of the diamonds, would it melt in his hand, or would it remain a diamond? I heard Jay Chaapel, a Spiritualist of some note, tell of seeing a spirit with a brilliant diamond breast-pin. I asked him whether it was a real diamond or a spiritual one. He said it was a real diamond. Now, where did that diamond go?

You say "Spiritualism is founded on the evidence of our senses." Now can you not so present the facts of Spi itualism as to do away with these seeming impossibilities, and make them evident to my senses? You say of a table that "it did such things as standing on its two legs, rapping a certain number of times, and so on as desired. The same was tested by others in the party, to the entire satisfaction of everyone present. It is a reasonable thing to believe that it was what it purported to be, viz, spirits."

Now let us compare this kind of evidence with the evidence in regard to witchcraft. How long ago is it since men of undoubted veracity stood up in open court and in the most solemn manner swore to things which we know were impossible? And that evidence was not only "to the satisfaction of every one present," but to a grave judge and what was considered an impartial jury.

How do you know that the table was made to perform those evolutions through the agency of spirits? Not long ago I was reading of a young man who had the power of making a table perform according to his will, but finally the power departed from him. An electrician got him into his office and pumped him full of electricity, and behold! he could operate the table as well as ever. Now, as "it is impossible to show what matter cannot do," how do you know that the table was not moved by electricity instead of spirits? I do not ask these questions to bother you or to corner you, but ask them in the same spirit that a pupil asks questions of his teacher.

Is it not a fact that a modicum of faith is required to make Spiritualism a success? You know that faith is the chief stock in trade among Christians. Without it they could do nothing—with it they can remove mountains. And it may be possible that a doubting Infidel; one who takes nothing on trust; one who investigates; one who requires evidence, not "faith" of things unseen, can never be able to understand the mysteries of Spiritualism.

News and Notes.

Franklin Steiner arrived in Chicago on Saturday, and we spent the day in visiting together. We first called on Mrs. Freeman, the secretary of the American Secular Union, who has just recovered from a severe sickness, but keeps at her post, and the work goes on. Then we went down to E. P. Peacock's establishment and had a pleasant chat with him. He has just been getting out some Freethought leaflets, and they are circulating among the enemy with great effect. Mr. Peacock is a tower of strength to the Liberal cause in Chicago. He is generous in the use of his money, and occasionally he sets a gunpowder train for orthodoxy which does a deal of execution. Just now they are trying to put the Bible into the schools of Chicago, and are making a house-to-house visitation to effect this purpose. But Peacock is preparing his ammunition, and the orthodox propaganda will hav a "surprise party" one of these days.

Saturday evening we spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. L. Robertson, with other friends, and as usual there was a delightful reunion. However, we missed Mr. and Mrs. Stevens, who are now away on a trip to Ohio.

Sunday morning Steiner, Reichwald, and myself went to hear Mangasarian. His subject was: "Thomas Paine in a New Light." Now I did expect to hear something good from Mangasarian. He is an eloquent speaker, evidently a scholar and a gentleman, and well furnished with ideas and gifted with language. I must confess, however, that I was greatly disappointed in the tone of his lecture. It was quite orthodoxical, transcendental, mystical, goody-goody, namby-pamby. It was milk for babes all over. It wouldn't do for a stalwart Liberal. He damned Paine with faint praise. He acknowledged the greatness of Paine, but did it with poor grace; and, although he said they had nothing to do with his subject, he mentioned the scandals about Paine, his quarrel with Washington, etc. He didn't say that any of these things were true or false, right or wrong, but he stated them as matters of curiosity, like old women's gossip. As to giving any "new light" on Paine, he did nothing of the sort. He simply used Paine as a gateway to a discussion of the value of the Bible. The Bible in the light of ethical culture was really the subject of his discourse, and on this subject he advanced nothing novel. It was simply a rehash of that transcendental vice of trying to find the "soul of good in things evil"—to my mind one of the most foolish things a man can waste his time upon. Of course, according to Mangasarian, there is a "soul of good" in the cyclone, the earthquake, fire and flood and pestilence. There is a "soul of good" in rattlesnakes and wolves and spiders and fleas. There is a "soul of good" in murder, lying, robbery, rape, and all the rest of the evils that throng the world.

Mangasarian didn't like Paine's method. There was too much fight and vigor in it. It was too destructiv. Paine tried to find the error mingled with the truth. "Don't do that," says the preacher, "but try to find the truth in the error." Now I consider that any man who discovers an error and crushes it is a benefactor to his race. This process of trying to find the truth in error is one of marvelous ingenuity, but quite barren of results, for there can be no truth in error, nor can there be any error in truth. This is simply a play upon words. It befogs the mind. It confounds and confuses. Now what the world wants is analysis and distinction, clearness of thought and preciseness of definition. But Mangasarian mixes things, and creates a great intellectual blur.

How he tried to put some sense into the story of the Garden of Eden! He said the man who wrote that had far greater wisdom than Paine, who criticised it. It was a solution of the problem of evil. "And what," says Mansarian, "is the origin of evil?" He answers, "the desire for knowledge." Now this is manifestly wrong, for evil, as we understand it, existed millions of years before man came into existence. Death is an evil, but desire for knowledge does not make it. Nor does this desire make all the evil in man himself. The desire for knowledge makes man suffer more, because it makes him see the evil and feel it more keenly, but the evil is in the world before the desire. Desire only discovers evil. Again, says Mangasarian, "The doctrin of the atonement is right, for," says he, "we see this vicarious sacrifice in the mother's love, in the martyr's devotion to principle." If this is so, the fact that a mother suffers for her child, or a martyr dies for truth, is an evil, an injustice. But it is a confusion of facts and ideas to say that this suffering of a mother or a martyr is anything like the orthodox "atonement." According to that doctrin, Jesus suffers the penalty in the place of the sinner, and the sinner by faith in Jesus escapes the penalty. Now this is simply and absolutely wrong, and no legerdemain of words can make it otherwise. This method of interpreting the Bible and its doctrins is, I think, immoral. It is intellectual magic and sorcery. It bewilders the mind. Let us hav the plain common sense of Thomas Paine, and call things by their right names. What is the use of trying to put into the Bible a modern philosophy that its writers never thought of? They said what they meant, and it is no use to try to transform their leaden views into golden visions.

Mangasarian said he attended the Paine meeting, and he took up a copy of the "Old Testament Illustrated," and he was horrified. "Too bad, too bad," he said, "to make the dear old Bible look like that. Why, I would rather," he continued, "bow down before the Bible in savage ignorance and worship it as a fetich than to thus ridicule its sacred pages."

Well, if this is "ethical culture" I don't accept it. I say stick to the truth. The old homely saying is, "You can't make a silk purse out of a sow's ear." That is my philosophy. A sow's ear is a sow's ear, and all the ethical culture in the world can't make it anything else. This is a disagreeable truth, no doubt; but how can we help it?

Mangasarian was surprised to think that modern Freethinkers, who are mainly Agnostics and Atheists, should glory in Thomas Paine, who was a Deist, and who passionately denounced Atheism. Mangasarian does not seem to understand that Freethought is fundamentally a method, and not a result. Mangasarian himself attacked the method of Paine; and it is that method and not Paine's belief that ranks him with the world's great Freethinkers and Infidels. It was the method, first of all, of intellectual honesty, of acknowledging facts. It is the method of plain speaking and plain writing.

One of the unfair flings of Mangasarian was that he spoke of "the slovenly scholarship" of the "Age of Reason," and he justified this phrase, "slovenly scholarship," by Paine's admission that he had no books to consult, not even the Bible itself, when he wrote the work. A "slovenly" scholar is one who has opportunities to use books and does not. Paine had no choice. He couldn't get the books. He had to trust to memory. Is that slovenliness? Did he make mistakes in either reasoning or facts? Point them out. When Paine afterwards consulted the Bible he found his references correct. Is that evidence of "slovenly scholarship?" It is evidence of great memory, accurate reading, and careful thought. Paine was not a scholar like Erasmus, or Strauss, or Renan, but he was just as good a scholar as any of his opponents, and just as good a scholar as Channing or Parker. Paine was a man of wonderful information, and no living theologian or philosopher of his time could hav written so accurate a criticism of the Bible under the same circumstances as Paine did. Mangasarian said that if Paine had lived in times of peace he would never hav been heard of. Does not Mangasarian know that Paine invented the first iron bridge? Why, if Paine had lived in times of peace his name would hav been illustrious in the world of invention. He would hav shone at the World's Fair amidst its mighty machineries. Paine was not a creature of circumstance; he was a great original force.

I did not think that Mangasarian would so falsify the record; that he would giv such a childish discourse about this great man, and show such a want of appreciation. It shows the limits of his creed and culture. He can nobly understand and appreciate a Buddha, a Goethe, an Emerson; but when he comes to a man like Paine or Ingersoll he is beyond his clear vision. He cannot see them as they are. They are shadows to him. He does not behold in nature's breadth their real grandeur and nobleness.

When Mangasarian does a good thing I will giv him credit; but when he does a poor thing and a bad thing, as he did in this discourse on Paine, I shall go for him. He deserves to be severely handled.

Well, in the evening I listened to Franklin Steiner on "Secularism and Christianity," and here was a discourse worth listening to. It was the result of thought, and was stimulating. I hav high hopes of Steiner. He is an earnest student, and he has the oratorical faculty. First, in the construction of his lectures; they are real lectures. They are not talks or exhortations, or a string of bright thoughts merely. There is a well-developed argument, a logical process from beginning to end, and a progress of ideas. Secondly, in the manner of delivery, which is animated, persuasiv, and interesting. He speaks freely and forcibly. If he does not falter by the way, he will become one of the ablest lecturers in the field.

Mrs. Ames presided, and it is a good sign for the Chicago Union that women are thus at the front and show their sympathy and earnestness for Freethought. The Union progresses, notwithstanding the hard times. It has good audiences and pays its way, and that shows vitality and determination. Among its lecturers to come are General Trumbull and H. C. Bennett and others of the leading men of the city. The Union goes ahead, like Thomas Paine, into the forest and cuts down the trees and lets in the sunlight. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Sparks from the Lecture Field.

Since my advent into sunny Kansas, and more especially the city of Wichita, I hav met with signal success in my lectures. I am able to report many new additions to our cause and the membership of the Federation will increase. I hav held a series of weekly meetings, lecturing every Sunday night in Wichita, and now I hav several other appointments in the vicinity, with an occasional trip into the territory of Oklahoma.

Wichita is full of excitement on religious topics. The preachers are driven to every expedient possible in a vain endeavor to keep the lambs within the fold, and away from my lectures. But my audiences hav steadily increased from the first, and our Paine celebration held on January 29th capped the climax. There were nearly six hundred people present and two hundred had to be content with a place to stand.

The program consisted of music rendered by Professor Blume and Mrs. Sandford. Their selections were received with enthusiastic applause and encored. Isis B. Martin recited admirably Thomas Paine's poem, "The Converted Jew." Mr. J. H. Purdy, another enthusiastic Liberal, gave a reading of the poem, "The Statue of Liberty and Thomas Paine." The program was enlivened by two good readings by G. W. Collings, editor of the Kansas Leader, a journal of Freethought and reform. Between these numbers I gave an oration on Thomas Paine, dealing with his religious and political work, and showing the services he rendered to America in her memorable fight for independence. The facts I gave were a revelation to many present, for there were several orthodox Christians in the audience, and the effect of this celebration will be that in Wichita many people will hold more kindly feelings toward Paine's memory than they hav done in the past.

This was a splendid triumph for Freethought. Many of our friends came from points miles away, and J. L. Cooper returned to Wichita from El Reno, Ok.—a distance of one hundred and sixty miles—purposely to join in this Paine celebration. It was the first of its kind ever held in these parts, and by it the bed-rock of orthodox Christianity has been moved.

One old Scotch Presbyterian, a preacher of the hell-fire order, whose breath emits a sulphurous odor whenever he givs a sermon, thought well to allude to our celebration in his church the following Sunday. He abused Paine, and abused those who had participated in the celebration. This reverend shepherd told his flock of sheep, whom he fleeces every year to the tune of several thousand dollars, that "he had in his possession a letter, purporting to hav been written by a girl who had visited Paine on his death-bed, and wherein she declared that she had heard Paine calling on the name of Jesus for help, mingling his cries for mercy with groans, curses, and vile epithets." I will giv him one hundred dollars, poor as I am, for a copy of that letter, with a chance to see the original, together with proofs of its authenticity and genuinness. Now, sir, be a man, produce the letter, or else, by silence, acknowledge yourself guilty of wilful falsehood.

This same preacher, by the way, is a worthy disciple of his pretended master. Christ whipped the money-changers out of the temple, after telling his hearers to "love their enemies," and this professional juggler laid his polluting hands upon our old friend Zopher Tuttle, although the latter, whose white hair should command respect, had passed seventy-six years. Mr. Tuttle had simply called on him for information concerning the residence of another gentleman of the cloth. He drew the old man into an argument, and because he was beaten in the encounter, this man of God siezed the venerable Mr. Tuttle by the coat collar, and clenching his fist put it under his nose, remarking at the time:

"You old Infidel, you ought to be ashamed of yourself. My God does not require me to fight for him, or else I would do it, and thrust you out of my house."

I had challenged the Ministerial Alliance to a debate, but they preferred not. I then received a challenge from some obscure lady who was willing to maintain, against my assaults, that "the Bible is essentially true, and its God the true God." Who was she? Nobody knew, except a few who knew that she belonged to some church. Practically speaking, the people of Wichita knew nothing about her, and I knew less. I demanded then that she should receive the indorsement of the Ministerial Alliance before debating with her. Or failing that, one of the preachers should meet me, or all could debate with me in turn. Some local scribe attached to the Eagle thought fit to try to force me into a debate with any obscure individual who may challenge me, and he even went so far as to claim for her a negativ victory over me. But as I had first challenged them, and as they would neither indorse her, nor stand up on their own account, I claimed, on the same grounds, a negativ victory over them all.

With the valuable help of the local Freethinkers we are making good headway, gaining ground rapidly. I hav engagements to lecture in several parts of Kansas, and at El Reno, Oklahoma. My work here will terminate at the end of March, when I shall return East. I hope to get a goodly number of lecture appointments between Kansas and Massachusetts. Friends desiring lectures between here and the East, during the months of April, May, and June, may address at once at Wichita, Kan., or at the headquarters of the Federation in Chicago. All mail matter will be promptly forwarded to me from each place, so as to cause no delays.

JOHN R. CHARLESWORTH.

Observations.

The annual exhibit of the Westminster Kennel Club opened at Madison Square Garden, New York, on Tuesday of this week, and the World publishes the pictures and the names of the men and women connected with the show, none of which persons were ever heard of before. It seems to me that fame is cheap when a man is distinguished by the dogs he owns.

I hav three communications from California people respecting the Midwinter Fair now open at San Francisco; also a newspaper article written in a frank spirit. One communication is from a merchant, who says that the city is full of footpads and tramps, and starving men, women, and children. As a conservativ business man he is preparing for duller and more desperate times than ever, which, he predicts, will mark the period following the closing of the Fair. The second communication is written by a railroad man, a level-headed and trustworthy person. It contains the statement that the projectors of the Fair "hav bitten off more than they can swallow." The third one expresses the opinion of an observing young woman who has traveled extensivly, said opinion being that the show is a bold advertising scheme, so worked that the patron instead of the advertiser pays the expense. It costs almost as much to see the foreign curiosities as it would to visit the countries where they are produced. Fifty cents is charged for admission to exhibits dear at a quarter; twenty-five cents to those worth a dime, and ten cents to others not worth anything. The departments are so arranged, one within another, that the visitor must spend the last nickel out of a ten-dollar piece before he gets to the core of the thing. The newspaper article, which I hav just referred to as written in a frank spirit, speaks of the exhibition as "the Midwinter Fake."

A DRY ESSAY ON MATRIMONY.

The institution of matrimony assumes so many different forms nowadays, that to simply say a person is married does not mean all that it once did. As far back in the history of conjugal life as the records of the divorce courts go, we find that marriage meant the possession of the man by the woman for a short and insane period preceding the wedding, and the possession of the woman by the man thereafter. He professed to be her slave just long enough to induce her to become his in fact. She promised to obey him, which was a definit arrangement, while he got off with a pledge to do something expressed by the vague term "cherish." It was not an equitable adjustment of differences, and the man must hav known it all the time, though he said nothing; but the women hav only recently discovered the fraud. The quickened female perception is now producing results, and in three principal cities of the American union there are indications of departure from the historical system. In Brooklyn, N. Y., just a few days ago a young lady who was led to the altar by the male individual that had for some time professed to be her enamored slave, requested the officiating person to omit the word obey from the marriage obligation. The report of the proceedings does not say that his request was granted, but the protest against an absurd form is on record; and perhaps the day is not far distant when women will marry men without making any more promises than they intend to keep.

The second divergence to which I wish to allude has occurred in Boston, and I shall hav to study the subject more deeply than I hav yet done before I shall be prepared to say that it is a desirable one. The new style of Boston marriage is described as a sympathetic union of two women who hav not been able to make agreeable matches with persons of the opposit sex or with members of the clerical profession. How many such marriages hav been made, or consummated, as the term is, the papers do not state, but the prospectus is out and women as eminent as Susan Channing and Edna D. Cheney hav advocated and defended the habit. Whatever may be said against such consortments, certainly it is the business of nobody but the contracting parties, for we may safely say that women old enough to hav given up all hope of marrying a man hav reached the age of discretion at least. Probably if the Boston system of sympathetic unions were traced to its beginning, it would be found to hav its root in economy; for the New England women are proverbially spare of figure, and no observant person who views one of them can fail to remark the wasteful vacancy of surrounding space. Some attempts at adjustment. hav been made by the introduction of the three-quarter bed and single pillow, but the disparity still exists. In the absence of anything more satisfactory, then, there is no reason why one expectant and another blushing old maid should not enter into the relation here discussed. But what poet would hav the courage to write their epithalamium?

Philadelphia, it seems to me, is far in advance of either Brooklyn or Boston in the matter of chaste unions; for while the Brooklyn method leaves out the obligation of obedience, and the Boston marriage is based on sympathy, the Philadelphia union is a purely spiritual one. No ante-nuptial promises are exacted from the bride, and the groom has no strings on him whatsoever. Again, there is a chance that the Brooklyn system may be undesirably fruitful, and the Boston innovation is hopelessly lacking in completeness for an opposit reason; but the Philadelphia marriage, with the danse du ventre as its outward and visible sign, contains more possibilities than a busy person can find time to speculate upon.

Thus when our current matrimonial market has been closed, and the offenses of all who hav bargained thereat hav been granted pardon and oblivion, the future—by the grace of the Brooklyn girl, the Boston old maids, and Miss Craddock—will still contain mischief for the human race.

In the Century for February, Mr. Washington Gladden, a minister, tells how a short time ago he was called upon to preach the funeral sermon of a man called Land-Bill Allen. This Allen, who died in an Ohio poorhouse, was reported to hav been the author of the Land bill or Homestead act, under which the United States government has been donating land to settlers for many years past. When Gladden set about gathering up material for his discourse upon the achievements of the deceased, he found out that Allen never had anything to do with getting up the bill. He further discovered that beyond some incoherent talking, and some more incoherent writing that was never printed, Allen had never done anything for the land bill at all. Yet Allen left documents in his own handwriting asserting his authorship of the measure, and a few months before his death he stated to the reporters, with an unblushing front, that his bill passed Congress in 1863. His literary remains show that he was a crank and a deliberate liar, but he had stuck to his falsehood so well and repeated it so often, that finally people believed it, and his body lay in state for a day under the dome of the capital of Ohio. Furthermore, subscription papers were circulated for funds to build Allen a monument, thus reversing the proverb that a prophet is with out honor in his own country. Allen was a genuin prophet—that is, nothing that he said was true.

Perhaps there are other places in the United States besides Ohio that hav local originators of the Land bill. The last time I was in Maine I heard people sixty or seventy years of age relate that they had seen or heard of Jeremiah Hacker when they were children. They called him Uncle Jerry. In Aroostook county, two of my aged relativs, both settlers, appeared to believe implicitly that they owed their farms to the efforts of Uncle Jerry. The first Homestead bill was introduced into Congress in 1814.

About twenty years ago a little group of gray-haired men gathered every month or so in the fruit-store of Henry Beeny, at the corner of Fourth avenue and Twenty-fifth street, New York. I recall the names of Evans, Ingalls, Devyr, Rowe, West, and Masquerier as of this remnant of the Free Soil party, whose platform in 1848 is said to hav embodied the homestead idea. The group no longer meets, and Mr. Beeny's fruitstore has disappeared. A true history of the Land Reform movement might perhaps correct as many mistakes as are discovered by research in other directions.

A circular is received from Horace G. Knapp, secretary of the General Union Temperance Committee, inclosing a petition to the New York legislature for "the removal of Political Caucuses from saloons." The object is not a bad one, and if Mr. Knapp will inform me how a state legislature has acquired the right to control caucuses, I will head a petition and circulate it among the infants of my Bible class. I will also sign another petition to the legislature for the removal of political caucuses from church vestries. I would sign both petitions as a matter of accommodation, and not for the reason that my signature to them would be productiv of harm. The saloon in politics, or politics in the saloon, has a bad sound; but no legislation originating in saloons is half as potent for evil as that which originates in the church. The saloon men hav not asked that their property be exempt from taxation, nor do they demand that all other places of business except their own be closed by law on one day out of seven. A cursory glance at the temporary effects of liquor selling might giv one the impression that the saloon is a greater evil than the church, but historically and permanently it is not. Neither is the saloon politician—carelessly oblivious of other people's business so long as he is permitted to follow his own undisturbed—as dangerous as the church politician, who conceives himself to be the custodian of his neighbor's morals and the regulator of his habits.

As for the caucus, it is the very fountain-head of popular government; it is before the legislature, and not responsible to it. That Secretary Knapp should imagin that the legislature may dictate to the caucus shows how far he is from knowing as much as he ought to, and how well accoutered he is to start a political reform movement.

TO VARIOUS PERSONS.

J. S. MARTIN—Do not be surprised that my observation about your boat brought so many inquiries that you had to employ a secretary. My notice fulfilled every condition that could be imposed by an advertising agent, being in our regular type and next to pure reading matter, than which I write no other.

R. F. GRIGSBY, Calistoga, Cal.—The paper containing your article on the initiativ, referendum, and imperativ mandate is read. I note that your plan promises to reduce the number of our representativs to one-half or one-third what it is now. That is good for a starter, but why not let the last third go with the other two? Since the war our representativs in Congress, besides drawing their salaries, hav done nothing but obstruct commerce, interfere with trade, unsettle finance, invade the liberties of citizens, create panics, and invite general national disaster. I hav not the slightest doubt that if all legislatures should adjourn sine die, and the president and governors go home, there would follow such an era of prosperity that hair would almost grow on bald heads.

DR. E B. FOOTE, JR., Manhattan Liberal Club—I regret that the facts with regard to Miss Craddock's lecture before the club, and the vice-president's remarks after the lecture, were not as I stated them. Would suggest that Miss C. be recalled and that the proceedings be reviewed to conform with my account of them. If you can think of any more feasible way to adjust the occurrences to the record, it will be entertained by your sincere admirer.

S. L. HOGAN, Friendly Correspondent—Your suggestion that I turn my attention to politics is noted. Can't do it. I hav tried it occasionally, and for three weeks thereafter didn't know whether to approach the Editor humbly for losing him a subscriber, or to assume unusual importance for gaining him two or three new ones. The balance is on my side just at present, especially in silver states; but in localities where one of the old parties givs a majority at every election larger than the male population, the chances are against my catching on. Nevertheless I will keep your thought in mind.

The Church and Financial Issues.

DORA, Mo., Feb. 2, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER from the beginning, and am afraid that under our financial system, it, and most anything else, will fail; our republic is about at an end; there are a good many Liberals here, but they are unable to subscribe; they hav to sell their wheat at about thirty-five cents per bushel. I wish you could devote some space to the financial question, which is hurting us worse than the church, and we hav plenty able men in our ranks to discuss the same. ANTON FISHER.

To Encourage the Man and Help the Cause.

CAMERON, Feb. 2, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Will send $5 for paper and books as per list. Perhaps later I can find a new subscriber, but fearing that the down-town fellows might be out of coal, I will remit right away. Put me down on Mr. Putnam's list for his "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," to encourage the man and help the cause along. I hav no doubt the book will be a mental treat to anyone reading it. Wishing him and THE TRUTH SEEKER ample success in all their undertakings, I remain yours,

L. C. LIVENGOOD.

Some Information Wanted.

WATSON, MINN., Feb. 6, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find check for $3, with which credit my subscription account. I notice Mr. Ole E. Hagen, of Crookston, Minn., informs your readers that he has started a Populist paper. Our friend seems to be very industrious and I hav always counted him among the Liberals, but how a man can work to the extent of publishing a paper in the interest of the God-in-the-Constitution cause and still be Liberal and patriotic, is not easy to figure out. Would like to hav Mr. Hagen explain himself on that subject.

O. EIDUN.

It Is Worth Three Dollars in Gold if Anything Is.

OMEGA, OKLAHOMA TERR., Jan. 31, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3, for which please giv me credit on subscription.

I do not see now how I can pay you the remainder before next July or August. By that time I hope to hav some more 25 to 40 cent wheat to sell. This getting down to a gold standard is, in my opinion, raising h–ll with things in general. However, if there is anything that I consider worth $3 in gold it is THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I do not feel right in not being able to do better by you. But I still hope to do better by the time another harvest comes round. D. W. ARMSTRONG.

Cannot Giv It Up—It Is too Difficult.

BEN HUR, CAL., Jan. 24, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I did think I would drop the paper as times are so hard and money so scarce and I am taking four or five other papers, but it is difficult to part with old friends, so I inclose money order for $3, for which you will please forward a twelve months' ticket for another cruise on THE TRUTH SEEKER craft with the Editor and the Man with the Badge Pin. Oh, by the way, if George would turn his guns against the rotten political hulks of the two old parties, I think he would be a power for good in our country and would be hard to beat. With my best wishes for yourself and the whole TRUTH SEEKER crowd, I am yours truly, S. L. HOGAN.

Purposes to Help Watson Heston.

FORT STANTON, N. M., Feb. 6, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I am a natural Freethinker and am proud of it, although my parents were religious and tried very hard to pound it into my head; but fortunately they failed to do it.

I hav been reading your paper for the last ten years and think it one of the best papers, doing more good for Freethought than any other paper now in circulation. Watson Heston's cartoons are grand. I am going to take up a collection among my Liberal friends in this section of the country and send it to him to aid him in his grand work.

Freethinkers are gaining ground very rapidly in this section of the country, considering the character of the population. About one-half the people are Mexicans and of course they are Catholics; and they are kept in ignorance by the priests who are sent here to enlighten them. I am a Freethinker first, last, and all the time.

'Travels in Faith" as a Missionary.

LUMBERVILLE, PA., Feb. 2, 1894

MR. EDITOR: In my last letter to you, which contained a renewal of my subscription, I also ordered five books, four of which hav come to hand; the other, "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," I presume will be forwarded as soon as it is ready. Of the four books, I think that "Travels in Faith," by R C. Adams, is the best fitted for missionary work, and I do most earnestly recommend its circulation, and suggest that whenever a Freethinker has a dollar to spare for such purpose he order four copies to be mailed to such of his pious friends as need only such plain and logical reasoning, based upon the eventful experience of the author, to lead them to travel the same journey.

Inclosed find $1, for which send four of "Travels in Faith" to the following addresses. Yours with earnestness,

WATSON KENDERDIM.

Eleven at One Enlistment!

GOLDEN POND, KY., Feb. 7, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find check for $22 to pay for subscription list. I send you eleven. Following is our list of subscribers: Thirteen for THE TRUTH SEEKER. Other Liberal journals: Ironclad Age, two; Freethinkers' Magazine, two; Lucifer, one; Independent Pulpit, one. From what I hear from other country places I hope we are doing quite well. However, the future looks much brighter here. I think the hardest part of the work is done. For a long while only a few would read Freethought at all; now I could giv away books and papers every day. Our people are most all Liberal to a very great degree. I don't think you could find more than forty devout Christians in our section of fifteen hundred people. We hav fairly good schools and a good intelligent community and prosperous people. Our little village has only about seventy-five inhabitants. No church.

Hoping to hear from others,

Your Liberal friend, E. W. RODES.

An Acrostic to "The Truth Seeker."

Throughout all time and ages,
Where religion hath took root,
Human liberty and justice
Hav been trampled under foot;
Earth's millions hav been mourners,
And to-day are mourning still,
Through the edicts of its leaders,
That say, Banish, torture, kill.
Religion, yes, religion,
What deeds thy name implies;
Unveil its crimes, ye Lib'ral hosts,
Till this vile serpent dies.
TRUTH SEEKER nobly leads the van
In this most worthy fight.
Hold up its hands, then, ye who can,
And help it spread the light;
Show by the zeal your cause bespeaks
The generous heart and hand;
Enthrone you thus our tenets true
Throughout each clime and land;
Endear the principles we teach
By kindly acts and deeds;
Keep steady on until the light
Of liberty succeeds.
Entomb you thus by nobleness
Of reason, logic, love,
Religious faith in devils, gods,
From hades to heaven above.

Paine Celebrations in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Jan. 30, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed I send you a clipping from the Philadelphia Inquirer containing a report of the two large Paine celebrations held in this city. I think it worthy of publication in THE TRUTH SEEKER, for it is very rarely indeed that the daily papers notice our meeting. I was greatly pleased on reading that the Spiritualists had an all-day celebration, as it diffused the leaven more widely. Our hall being packed to overflowing, we could not hav found accommodation for them with us. It gives me very great pleasure to report that our celebration was the most successful one that we ever had the pleasure of attending, not only in point of audiences, but as regards talent and financial outcome.

Yours for Universal Mental Liberty,

GEO. LONGFORD.

[We are much pleased to receive such good news from Philadelphia, and only the pressure upon our columns prevents the reprinting of the Inquirer's very fair report.—ED. T. S.]

The Voice of the Sky-Pilot Is Heard in the Land.

LIVERMORE, IA., Jan. 31, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: The sample papers and R. G. Ingersoll's arguments received at Goldfield, Ia., in good order. The sky-pilots hav been holding revival meetings the past five weeks with the result that the people had so much love for their fellow-man at the close of these meetings that they said I ought to be run out of town for giving some of the more intelligent people of the place a few copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER and the Ingersoll arguments. One gentleman, who said he had the love of God in his heart, took a copy of the paper, which I had left on the office counter in the hotel, and shoved it into the stove and told me I should be run out of town, etc. I was afterwards informed that this man was never known to pay his honest debts when he could avoid it. But as he had now joined the church they hoped he would pay up.

The sky-pilot cries most in the winter time and just now the Iowa sky-pilot is in clover. It's a rich field for holy drones.

I am, Yours fraternally,

JOHN AYLWARD.

No Preacher to Support Nor One at the Burial.

MOUND CITY, KAN., Feb. 4, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I see by the reminders sent out every week that you are anxious for all to pay up, and my subscription is past due. I had to try to raise the money to pay for your valuable paper. I hav read it so many years I cannot giv it up yet. I inclose $3. The new year did not begin well with me, as I lost my wife on the 8th of January, and I am left with two little girls on my hands, one five and the other two past. They are good, healthy-looking children, with well developed heads and smart as can be; I don't want to giv them up to be dragged up in the church, which they would be, so I am trying to care for them myself. I am much confined to the house by so doing, and, as I am known to be an Infidel, it is impossible for me to get a woman to keep house and take care of the little ones. I hav a good home of my own and some other good property to keep me from starving, and no preacher to pay.

I wish to mention about the burial of Mrs. Adams. One of the Eastern Star members—Mr. Ely, a lawyer—made a good address at the house. The lady members walked in line before the hearse, and then they officiated at the grave. The whole affair was very well conducted, and some of the Christians said it was very nice indeed; and the preacher got left.

Should some Liberal woman who reads this think such a place would suit her, I should like to hear from her. Must be of middle age, without any incumbrance.

Yours respectfully, JAMES ADAMS.

Some Very Incisiv Remarks.

ILWACO, WASH., Jan 29, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I am taking THE TRUTH SEEKER and I consider it a good paper, and hope it will kill all the humbug religions. I look upon all preachers as Sunday beggars and a dangerous set of men. When I was small I used to get whipped because I would not sit and listen to the preacher's nonsense. They say God made all things, and made them out of nothing; made man out of nothing. Any person with good sense would know better, as something cannot be made out of nothing. They say there was a flood at one time, and all but Noah and his family were drowned. They also say God is merciful; was he merciful when he caused a flood to drown children, even little babies that did not know right from wrong? Anybody that will pray to such a murderer as that has not good sense. There are two Sunday beggars at Ilwaco now, and hav been for three weeks holding meetings and setting the people crazy with their lies about heaven and the merciful God. They say: "Pray to God and he will help you." God never helps anybody, and you can pray till you are white-headed, and God will let you starve before he will giv you one grain. Why? Because there is no God. I wish somebody would tell me where all the water went after the flood; did the merciful God make the water into nothing as he made the world out of nothing? Yours respectfully, A. J.

The "Heavenly Solomon."

VINELAND, N. J., Feb. 7, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: The following is the advertisment of one of Vineland's reverend cranks in the Saturday paper:

"The Heavenly Solomon," will be the subject of Rev. D. H. King's discourse in the Presbyterian church to-morrow morning.

Isn't that rich?

If the Vineland farmers had some substance as full of fertilizing matter for their sandy soil as such a sermon must be of falsehood, their sweet potatoes would weigh twenty pounds apiece. Just think of it, the heavenly Solomon! with seven hundred wives and three hundred concubines, all supported by plunder and fraud, as his father David's wives and concubines were, when he was called a man after God's own heart. If I had not been too deaf for sixty years to hear a public discourse or common conversation I would hav heard that sermon if I had been carried to the church on a wheelbarrow. I am now authorized to pay Mr. King $3 for a copy of his sermon, which will pay him two or three times over for writing it.

Here is what my song says about Solomon:

The Bible calls Solomon wisest of all,
With one thousand women, all slaves to his call,
Supported by him by plunder and fraud,
Yet lying priests call him the wise man of God.
A good man with one good wife will do very well,
But a fool with a thousand is in a live hell.
So much for old Solomon, foolishest fool
Of all that are named in the old Bible school.

No, of Course Putnam is Not "Venerable."

TROY, N. Y., Feb. 15, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: For the inclosed stamps send me a few copies of the cathartic creed. I know I am behind in my dues. I hav had only a little work since the "bloated bond-holders" contracted the money market. I will remit just as soon as I get to work, which, I think, will be very soon. Politics are booming here. The Democrats are divided. The Republicans are confident, and the A. P. A. intend to raise sheol with all hands.

The clergy here are trying to close up the saloons; and they are angry because public opinion is against them. They went to the mayor and asked him to close them up. He told them to go to Albany and get laws passed in their favor. If any "unassigned gentleman," or any other kind of a gentleman, thinks he, she, or it can get the best of Putnam in argument, or our George in logic, he had better take my advice and quit. I am opposed to anyone calling my friend Putnam "venerable Putnam," as I still remember him as a blythe, happy young man, fair-haired and full of life and ambition, pretty much as the cut in THE TRUTH SEEKER represents him I intend to hav one of his books if I hav to pay $5 for it. S. D. JEFFERS.

Without Guidance of Priest or Book.

PROVO CITY, UTAH, Jan. 18, 1894

To Whom it May Concern: As you recognize in the Truth Seeker family of correspondents both learned and unlearned, Christians and non-Christians, saints and sinners, and are no respecters of persons, I will say a little helping to investigate the great question as to whether religion is necessary to make and keep man moral, or whether man can be liberated and go without guidance of priest and book, behaving without being scared with hell or enticed with heaven. Many Freethinkers honestly believe religion a necessary humbug to fool the ignorant into being good; hence so many are luke-warm Freethinkers or acting as Christians. I am inclined to believe mankind can be good without the belief in a God-Son-Ghost-heaven-hell religion. We are civilized and intelligent enough to be good without being paid for it.

It will be a long job to eradicate superstition, as many are constituted to naturally love ceremony, sham, and display. Religion to many is fascinating; it is fashionable. How inconsistent of providence to endow men so that they must differ so widely, causing much contention and strife, because one believes religion to be so beneficial and harmonious and another, just as good and wise, believes it to be detrimental and discordant. If all who believe in religion were good and all who do not were bad, we would know what to do. We know it is possible to be moral and happy without belief in religion. Yours for investigation. ANDREW SWARD.

"Brother George" Can Blush Again.

BARRE, MASS., Feb. 6, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed, please find $8—$3 for renewal of my subscription and $5 for Mr. Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." I could not send the money before. I hope I am not too late for my name in the book. I think it ought to be there, for I took the platform in 1852 agaist Bible and church superstition, and hav been at it ever since with my tongue and pen as my health and circumstances would permit.

I am delighted as ever with THE TRUTH SEEKER, but cannot speak in its praise in detail—of its editor and staff—its numerous supporters and correspondents—its grand, good articles that cheer me in my loneliness and seclusion; of that prince of artists and designers, Watson Heston (to whom I would send a small gift, if I knew his address); to the lecturers, who giv us their experiences; but last of all would I make my glowing "Observations" on "Brother George" and welcome his return to his first love, the little, great, incomparable TRUTH SEEKER I never was reconciled to his departure and straying off into Western fields, and robbing us of his valuable services, and I am more than rejoiced to find him back where he belongs, and hope here he will remain until his head is frosted with fourscore years—long after I will be gone and forgotten as is the decayed mummy in the mausoleum of the past, with no resurrection (in expectation) in kingdom came.

Yours for life, ELLA E. GIBSON.

And Protestants are Fomenting the God-in-the-Constitution Rebellion.

CHICAGO, ILL., Jan. 30, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $4.50 for paper and "Dynamic Theory." Times are so terribly hard in the West we can only by close and careful management and economy keep out of the clutches of the fortunate financial party or parties. My sympathy goes out for you in the struggle to keep your paper before the people. Sympathy does not pay debts, I know; yet every man should first discharge his own obligations, if possible. I shall continue to be a subscriber for your most valuable paper while I liv and in that one particular assist you and the cause of Freethought and religious liberty. It seems to me that with what knowledge you impart concerning the power Catholics are getting in our country you would attempt to show our people why such strides are being made. In principle I am a Democrat, but I hav observed for a long time that every Democratic vote is indirectly assisting the Catholic church. Only one Catholic out of a thousand is a Republican, and in that matter only for the benefit of his church.

The Protestant ministers are all the most contemptible cowards the world could produce, and their followers are no better.

Look at the condition of your own city, Baltimore, and Chicago—all are run and controled by Catholics. I am not particularly opposed to Catholics but for their record.

I am sure if religion was kept entirely out of politics there would be more harmony in it and a better government. By permitting it to take the first place it gives the one denomination the opportunity long sought to get control of our country, and it is on this one point I say the Democrats are assisting them by every vote they cast, and the Protestant ministers are either cowards or fools not to grasp the situation. P. WINEMAN.

The Heaven of Justice and Love on Earth.

WEST TEXAS, Feb. 7, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been waiting until this hour, hoping for one or two new subscribers; hav failed to get them, so I send herewith $6.50 to secure THE TRUTH SEEKER one more year, and S. P. Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." Also please send me your catalog of Liberal books.

By borrowing from the country we boast a population of 1,034, and hav five churches—Catholic, Baptist, Disciple, Methodist, and Presbyterian. Their ways are evidently not God's way, for his must be one way and theirs are five ways. The Catholics are "woman" worshipers, "The virgin mother of Jesus, queen of heaven," the woman that married a man "Joseph," and lost her virginity by having children, sons and daughters, and that, too, after having consorted with a God, ghost, or may be it was after all "Joseph." The Baptists, a mixed lot of predestinarians, free agents, et al. The Disciples, who swim to heaven by way of a duck puddle, frog pond, or may be a river. The Methodists, who get there by sprinkling, pouring, or may be by swimming in company with Baptists and Disciples at a respectful distance. The Presbyterians, ditto the Methodists, with variations.

There is another class I had nearly forgotten: "The Liberals," so-called; they seem to be traveling on a straight line, accepting truth whether found in the Bible or science, rejecting error, wherever found, either in the Bible or out of it. I think they are on the direct road to heaven, and will enter at the broad gate. It seems to me the others are on diverging roads, crooked, will enter at side gates, may be back gates, but I hope all, all will land safe in that golden city, eternal in the heaven of heaven, that is, if there is any heaven to reach. So mote it be.

A Brother Tells His 'Sperience.

SALIDA, COL., Jan. 26, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Thinking perhaps it might be of interest to some of your readers to know the experience of another who has been liberated from the shackles of superstition by Freethought, I will venture a few lines of my own.

Being a child of delicate health and endowed with a vivid imagination and sensitiv nature, it is not strange that I was an easy subject for the operations of the religious fanatics. I professed Christianity at an early age, and also contracted the notion that I must be a preacher. While reason slept superstition fastened its deadly fangs in me. I imagined that Christians were better than other people (I hav been undeceived since), and, as I thought I must liv a perfect life, I would "backslide," because of every slight error, thinking I had committed a terrible sin, and consequently must hav fallen from grace. But having great fear of death and believing that if I should die "out of the Lord" I would be utterly damned, I would seek the Lord again, in order to escape hell and its tortures. I heard a great deal of talk about sanctification, and concluded if a little religion was a good thing it must be better in larger doses; so proceeded to get dosed, and upon being advised to "take it to the Lord," went into a coal-shed and put in the night "seeking," but "found it not." I hav often wondered I did not lose my reason entirely, but consider myself lucky to hav lost only a portion of it. That dose of holiness physic settled me on holiness, for, as Heston puts it, the more I was bored the holier I got. I still held the idea that I should be a "cushion-pounder," and, being advised this time to "study God's word," went to work in dead earnest, with the result that I found it must be, some of it, the fruit of that other fellow's inspiration.

This is the time I got my "foot in it," for the "superior angels" of this world advised me to giv up trying to preach, for they "believed the devil had me body and soul." Encouraging! When I told them I could not believe that there was a hell at all—oh, horrors! When I asked them to give me a straightforward answer and tell me if they believed it, they told me (how true!) if hell was left out the whole system must fall. Then it was I began to doubt their own sincerity. After such interviews as this I might expect to hear a sermon from our "beloved pastor" about "damnable heresies," or something of an equally pacifying nature.

Just as soon as I began to doubt their holy book I was pitched into from all sides, not by the wicked sinner, oh, no! but by the good Christians themselvs. I was on the immediate route to hell, without any "stop-over" on my ticket. How I stood all this shot and shell from so many at once, I don't know, but I didn't let go even to "spit on my hands;" but I was not quite so enthusiastic.

My idea of being an orthodox preacher had dwindled to a hope that I might ease my conscience by taking up some work of moral reform. When Christian science came along and said: "You do not need to believe in hell; it is not necessary to believe there is a devil," it seemed to me that here was my forte. But, after trying that for about three years, I saw that its methods were impracticable, and found myself a dupe again. And so I hav been driven from one indefensible position to another until I hav arrived at Freedom's gaol, Freethought. Good-bye, cowardly superstition, forever! Hail Freethought!

Yours fraternally, ROLLA SMITH.

Aunt Elmina Grows Enthusiastic.

SNOWVILLE, VA., Jan. 27, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: The first of January finds me looking over the various floral catalogs I hav received and trying to decide of which florist I shall order my spring plants and seeds. In comes the mail, and I unroll from its wrappings the one published by John Lewis Childs, Floral Park, N. Y. Ah! I hav no need for further search. One cannot want more than all there is. Leaf after leaf is turned, and on each you find a much-to-be-desired specimen—nice, fine copyright engravings too, some almost as lovely as the real flowers could possibly be. The cover of the book is exquisitly beautiful, and well it may be, as it cost $10,000.

The frontispiece of "Superfine Pansies," with their rich colorings, is distractingly enchanting. Each flower looks right at you, seeming to say, "I'm just the pansy you want," and it really is so too, for you crave them all. The next colored plate is "The Mayflower Premium," and it is just as handsome as it can be. Then comes a plate of "Childs's New Chrysanthemums," three of the handsomest specimens of this popular flower you ever imagined. You will be sure to want all these.

And now we turn to a full-page colored plate of the "New Double Iris Kaempferi." Was there ever a handsomer sight? Such vivid colors and in such variety, and such lovely markings. Well, well; I'm determined to hav them, you mentally exclaim. And what is best of all, they will stand our hardest winters, and once yours they are yours for all time.

I wish I had leisure and space to speak for each flower of the flock:

Heliotropes with meekly lifted brow
Say to me, "Go not yet."

The crimson blossoms of the coral tree
In the warm isles of the sunny sea.

The morning glory "gladly opening to the sun's first ray."

The lily, "white, spotless, clear, and pure."

Then rose, sweet rose, with blush and smile,
And breath in which all sweets are drowned,
Thou com'st to bloom for us awhile,
And with thee is the summer crowned.

The sweet verbena, which, being brushed against,
Will hold us three hours after by the smell
In spite of long walks on the windy hills.

And oh, so many, many more. The very best you can do is to send twenty-five cents to Childs and get the book for yourself; 188 pages of flowers, and directions for planting and rearing. And the beauty of it is you get your twenty-five cents back with your first order and twenty-five cents more in superfine pansy seeds and a premium on the order besides. So you see it is a money-making investment as well as a priceless treasure.

Then there is the vegetable department—trees, shrubs, berries, etc., every one first-class and tip-top.

The "Rose of All Colors," on the cover, we must hav. Such a variety, I am sure, never before grew on one bush.

The wind whispers softly a secret to me—
It has seen the first rose of June kissed by a bee;
And I see its bright splendor flash out on the spray,
A little red world that will last for a day,

Don't say it is too early to think about spring flowers. We must study the catalogs and mark what we want and begin to lay by the pennies, so that when planting time comes we shall be able to get at least a few of the ones we most covet. I wish every TRUTH SEEKER reader would select some special flower and try his or her best with it, and report results to me next fall. I shall try the iris kaempferi, and will tell you my success with it.

I once had a lady friend who said she had never sowed a flower seed nor owned a flower plant. But she had never seen Childs's catalog and had her taste cultivated by its wealth of invitingly arrayed blooms.

'Twas a dainty little flower
That was sleeping in a bower
Underneath the spreading branches of the laurel and the pine;
Where a shadow was in hiding
From her sunlight lover, gliding
In his madly merry seeking for his dusky sweetheart's shrine.

Then the wind came gently drifting
And the leafy portières lifting,
Darted in and touched the sleeping flower with his magic art,
When she ope'd her eyes so tender,
Lighted all the place with splendor,
And the sunlight clasped the shadow to his palpitating heart.

Darwin and After Darwin.

An Exposition of the Darwinian Theory.

By GEORGE J. ROMANES.

A systematic Exposition of what may be termed the Darwinism of Darwin, and intended to be of service to the general reader rather than to professed naturalists.

Mr. Romanes is well known as one of the most interesting of English writers upon evolution, besides ranking with Professor Huxley in scientific knowledge and ability. And this is a part of his conclusion regarding the great subject of Design, to which the church so often refers:

"Thus whether we look to the facts of adaptation or to those of beauty, everywhere throughout organic nature we meet with abundant evidence of natural causation, while nowhere do we meet with any independent evidence of supernatural design. . . . Adaptation and beauty are alike receiving their explanation at the hands of a purely mechanical philosophy. . . All nature has thus been transformed before the view of the present generation in a manner and to an extent that has never before been possible; and inasmuch as the change which has taken place has taken place in the direction of naturalism, and this to the extent of rendering the mechanical interpretation of nature universal, it is no wonder if the religious mind has suddenly awakened to a new and a terrible force in the words of its traditional enemy—Where is now thy God?"

The Mystic Realms.

BY FRANK OLIPHANT.

There seems to be
No force or power that into mortal frame
The breath of life can put when once that vital flame
Has winged its flight, has ceased to light the regions
Of the brain and guide the nervous heart. Not e'en
That power that first gave form a throbbing pulse
Hav we e'er known to rouse the dead
From its protracted sleep; nor hav we in our Harkenings heard the faintest sigh breathed back
Upon our ears from mystic realms
Beyond the dark abyss of death.

Between cold lips
No wagging tongue is heard to speak
Of beauties rich and fair beyond the grave; nor
Do the lips vibrate to tell of gilded halls
And streets of gold beyond the curtain of the night,
When they'v encased death's frozen tongue.
For from that distant, shadowy vale
No one returns to whisper to our souls
Its grandeurs or its solitudes; no eye looks out
Through lashes that hav close'
In this eternal sleep, to drink again
The glances of the loved ones left on earth;
No maiden's silvery laugh rings out
Upon the moon-lit air to haunt the vine-clad paths
Where she so lately with a lover wooed;
No infant-foot returns to stamp its dimpled print
In the honeysuckle glen; no huntsman's calling notes
Are heard to pierce the forest glade, no echo
Of his noisy horn is wafted from the hills;
No traveler returns to drink and bathe
His heated brow in babbling brooks
That wander like a silver thread through copse and woody dale;
No mother's tender words float back to warn
And guard the wayward son; no suffering wife
From her departed half receives sweet guidance
While revels he 'mid beauteous scenes of paradise—
The so-called land beyond the silvery stretch
Of starry lights, where day-light never hangs
Her curtain up—where never falls the sooty kiss
Of midnight's cheerless gloom!

How Jumbo Was Adopted by Betsey.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I hav seen you a great many times in Onset, where I often go in summer days, and I hav read your delightful little book about that pleasant watering place; so I seem to be acquainted with you, and I want to send a letter for the Children's Corner. I hav been a reader of the Children's Corner since you first became its editor. I turn to the letters the first thing after taking up THE TRUTH SEEKER. Papa has taken the paper for years.

I am sixteen years old, and, like most girls, am fond of pets. We hav one, a dog of seal-brown color, that we call "Jum," or "Jumbo." He was named Jumbo. A lady said he ought to hav a name that would suggest bigness, because he was then so very little. Now Jumbo has a history, and I think some of the children would like to hear about him. A lady friend of ours in Onset had a pug dog, who became a mother of three little puppies on July 8, 1891. Our friend told her little girl to drown them at once in a pail of water, as they were "mongrels." The daughter obeyed her, and just as the last was taken out of the pail to be buried in the sand, my mother came along and Lizzie said:

"Oh, Mrs. Stone, you ought to see what pretty puppies Nipsic had!" and she laid the cold, wet, lifeless little puppy in mamma's hand.

Mother said: "It seems too bad to kill such a nice-looking little dog."

"It is no use saying anything now," said Lizzie; "it is surely dead, for it has been under water quite a while."

Just then the little puppy gave a short bark, and mamma said:

"I will take it with me and let our old cat hav it; perhaps she may adopt it in place of one of her week-old kittens that died this morning."

Then the puppy was placed in the cat's box with the kittens. The mother cat adopted it at once. She was very proud of it, too. She seemed to think that while it was quite a common, every-day affair for a cat to hav kittens, it was wonderful for a cat to hav a baby dog. Doggie developed a wonderful appetite, and grew fat and strong, and the kittens one after another died, till only one was left. The mother cat, Betsey, spent the most of her time nursing and licking and caressing the puppy. She didn't care the least for the kitten, and it would hav died only for cow's milk.

When Jum was six months old Betsey died, and since that time he has been rather unhappy; he is always looking for his adopted mother. If he sees a cat when he is looking out the window, he cries till we let him out to go to her; but when they meet the cats never reciprocate his feelings, for they box his ears and sometimes try to scratch his eyes. When we say, "Where is Betsey?" he will run to the chair she used to sit in and whine and cry. Jum does not like music, or else likes it too much, and we always put him in the cellar when we begin to play. He has got so now that, when we say "Jummie" when he cries, he will go to the cellar door and wait till we open it to let him go down. We think him very cute. He loves to watch mice, but doesn't try to catch them. He understands perfectly what we say to him. He doesn't like to mind very well.

I sincerely hope you will be able to print this letter. It is rather long, but I trust it will escape the wastebasket. I would like to correspond with girls or boys from fourteen upwards. I think you hav a lot of bright and intelligent writers, both boys and girls. May the Corner prosper is my wish.

Correspondence.

AVERY, IA., Jan. 20, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I am a young Freethinker, converted to reason and Freethought by reading the TRUTH SEEKER, and noticing other young Freethinkers writing to you, I thought I would send a few lines to help encourage you in your good and noble work of trying to save the young people of this country from priestly dominion and religious superstition.

There is quite a number of Freethinkers in this town. As is usual with this class of people, they are composed of the best, the most honest and intelligent members of the community. I hav suggested to some of them that we hav a Freethought Sunday-school started here where we young people could be instructed in nature's laws and Freethought principles, so as not to be led astray by wily priests and taught to run after strange gods. Perhaps in the near future we will hav one.

I should like to correspond with some of the bright boys and girls of the Corner. If any of them wishes, I will teach them the interesting science of phrenology, or how to read by phrenological, physiognomical and temperamental signs the characters, motivs, and dispositions of strangers or such persons as they may come in contact with.

Should like to know Miss Wixon's opinions of phrenology.

YOURS truly, AXEL PETERSON.

[THE TRUTH SEEKER has reason to be proud of its converts, as the above letter shows. Thanks for kind words of encouragement and appreciation.—ED. C. C.]

COALING, ALA., Jan. 9, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: You asked me to describe cotton. I shall not use the description used in botany, but just as I see it here We bed up our land in three to five-foot rows, then plant the seed with a planter or by hand, by drilling them. Plants come up with two leaves on one stem. In about two weeks it has two more leaves, and in a month it has six or eight leaves and begins to show signs of limbs, and by the first of June shows forms or squares inclosed in a frilled shuck, and by the 20th it blooms. The blossoms are white the first day, turn red the second, and fall off the third. In one month the boll is grown, and opens in about six weeks from the time it shows forms. The main stalk keeps on growing and putting out limbs, which in turn do the same, and grows until frost. Some of it grows twelve feet high, but the most of it is from four to six feet high. Now, this is when everything is equable, seasons and weather; but when the weather is cool, cloudy and rainy, in August the worms come; then cotton evolutes into worms. In two weeks the field looks as if fire had been through it. I send you a lock. Plant it in a hothouse in small paper boxes about the 15th of April, and when the weather gets warm plant it in rows eighteen or twenty inches apart, and you will hav some nice plants.

Yours truly, BRANTLY WARD.

[A good description of the cotton plant. Thanks for fine specimen and for seeds, which will be planted; but probably our season is not warm enough for it to mature.—ED. C. C.]

PORT TOWNSEND, WASH., Dec. 27. 1893.

DEAR MISS WIXON AND THE CORNERITES: We write to tell you that we are trying to form a Sunday club of young Freethinkers, and we hope we will be successful in the attempt; but it is hard work converting the young folks to the good cause. Some folks think it is always good to be on the safe side, in case "it might be so." Our school-mates think it just awful that we are Freethinkers; but in our estimation, "To be a Freethinker is greater than to be a Christian." We hav "The Descent of Man," by Charles Darwin, from which we will read extracts every Sunday, and we will soon hav "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," by Samuel P. Putnam, and then we are sure we will hav a very nice time. As Annie is occupied in writing a letter to one of her Freethinker friends (of the masculin gender), she has thoughts for nothing else, and I will finish composing this letter. We would like very much if some Freethinkers would come and lecture in Port Townsend. We would surely be present at each lecture. Inclosed please find a clipping from the Examiner, which we would like to see in the column entitled "Not For Parsons." Wishing you and the Cornerites all a Happy New Year, We remain,

Your Freethinker friends,
LOUISA IFFLAND,
ANNIE L. BARTHROP.

[A Sunday club is just the thing—a step in the right direction. Do not be discouraged if you make only small headway at first. "Large streams from little fountains flow." Lecturers will please remember Port Townsend when in that vicinity. Thanks for kind wishes, and also for the very beautiful New Year's remembrance from Louisa and Annie.—ED. C. C.]

ST. JOSEPH, MO., Jan. 21, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I hav never succeeded in getting a letter started towards the Atlantic before, but I think I can muster courage enough to drop this one in a letter box.

I take great interest in THE TRUTH SEEKER, being a regular reader of it, and especially the Corner, although I am not what you would call a child, but, as we grow older, strange to say, our childhood clings to us all the more.

This was illustrated yesterday at an entertainment at which I was present. A wax group was the subject, portraying a scene in that well-known German fairy tale entitled, "Snow White." You all can remember it as your mother used to quiet your childish cries with its soothing effects.

The lecturer gave us the story in full detail, and at the close I found myself, as well as many others, turning away with a regretful sigh, as the lecturer smilingly said we had listened to it just as if we were children again.

But I am wandering from my subject. I was going to tell the Cornerites about the place where I live. Just imagin (I hate to ask any more) a dusty or rather smoky city, and on the outskirts a nice little village with a nice little natural park close at hand, where in the summer months the pleasure-seekers lounge among the shady trees on the banks of a small stream, with here and there a footbridge, and farther on a larger one, where the electric cars furnish music as well as transportation to those that like to enjoy the pleasure and beauty of Dame Nature.

If you can imagine such a place as I hav done my best to describe, you will hav my habitation complete.

We hav in our addition, I am sorry to say, four churches—that is, four churches too many. We hav also, I am glad to say, one school-house, but which is not too many.

If it was only the reverse, how fortunate we would be, but such it is all over the world; to one structure of knowledge there is double the number of houses of superstition and ignorance.

But through it all shines the brightness of combined science, reason, intelligence, and liberty, which will, I hope, some day melt into insignificance the church of superstition, by its brightness alone and those brave words, as well as true, of Thomas Paine will be our Bible:

"The world is my country; to do good my religion."

To think of these words, spoken under the circumstances that they were, is enough to make one love the speaker.

With a kind wish and a full-grown hurrah for all of my Liberal friends and coworkers I will close. Any correspondence from Liberal friends will be gladly welcomed. Hoping that this will do a little good at least, I am your Liberal friend,

WM. D TROTTER.

Pleasure and Progress.

AN ATTEMPT TO PROVE THAT

The Pursuit of Pleasure is the Sine Qua Non of Intellectual, Moral, and Social Development, and that The Promotion of Pleasure is the Duty of Philanthropy and Statesmanship.

By Albert M. Lorentz, LL.B.

CONTENTS:

BOOK I.—PLEASURE: Chap. I.—Sources of Pleasure. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures. Chap IV.—Social Pleasures. Chap. V.—Pleasures of the Savage, the Barbarian and the Civilized. Chap. VI.—Genesis of religions. Chap. VII.—Christianity.

BOOK II.—INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Purpose of life. Chap, II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures: Knowledge. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Reason. Chap.—V. Ideal Pleasures: Character. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Pedagogical Despotism.

BOOK III.—MORAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Morality. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures: Prudence. Chap. III.—Material Pleasures: Refinement. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Foresight, Chap. V.—Ideal Pleasures: Civilization. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII,—Vice Caused by Restraint.

BOOK IV.—SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Progress. Chap. II.—Protection, Capitalism, and Socialism: Respectivly an Actual, an Imminent, and a Proposed Violation of Individual Sovereignty. Chap. III.—Condition of Agriculture. Chap. IV. Public Schools, the Mene, Mene, Tekel of Socialism. Chap. V.—Province of Government. Chap. VI.—Our Social Disorder.

Here are some of the verdicts on this remarkable production which have been rendered by men who are in every way qualified as judges of books:

This is a spirited, rattling sort of a book that skates right along over the deepest subject with out much thought whether the ice is thin or not. It answers the greatest question—What is the use, object, motive, purpose, and summum bonum of life, and the real cause and motive of progress? —by one word, Pleasure!—Thaddeus B. Wakeman.

He sharply attacks, also, modern methods of education, and in this he is most abundantly borne out by the facts, and his arraignment is practically unanswerable. His book is altogether a curious and suggestive one.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The man who wrote this book knows how to write a book, and knows what he is writing about. There is not a padded sentence in the volume, not an attempt to fill up with words for lack of knowledge. The author deals hard blows at shams and falsehoods, and hard blows for realities and truth. We do not see how anyone can read this book and disagree with the leading propositions. The work is good; every chapter is worth reading. It is a work of common-sense Socialism. The chapter on public schools ought to be put into a tract and sent to every teacher in the land. Thousands of sentences are worthy of being framed as political maxims and hung up all over the nation. The book deserves a wide reading, not only for its literary style, which is clear and incisive, but for its bold, honest sayings.—L. K. Washburn.

Here we have philosophy up to date, the advance word of the progressive thinker; not a dry, abstruse discourse, but a common-sense essay in plain words upon the conduct of life, and all illustrated with such an abundance of anecdote and metaphor as add real entertainment to solid instruction. This is an important book, striking at superstition and unreasonable tradition, and upholding individual liberty in defiance of governmental law and social custom. After reading this book one feels that the author will never be able to write another, for he has put all his life and knowledge into this one. Every page bristles with points; there is no padding or filling in, no mere literary embellishment; but clean-cut apothegms abound, and every line is dictated by hard-headed common-sense.—Capt. Robt. C. Adams.

After you read this book you will be as enthusiastic in praise of it as are the eloquent editor of the Investigator and the gallant President of the Canadian Secular Union,

"Pleasure and Progress" has 398 pages, is splendidly printed from large, clear type, on excellent paper, and costs, bound in cloth, $1; paper covers, 50 cents.

A most extraordinary publication. We venture the assertion that nothing like it has ever before appeared in this country, and it is very doubtful if another one like it will ever again be published. We must give the Truth Seeker Company the credit of putting the book in the reach of all. At twice the price it would have been a cheap book. Artist Heston as a portrait painter and designer is a wonderful success, and we judge from our own feelings that nearly every Liberal in America will desire a copy of this most wonderful volume.—[Freethinkers' Magazine.

Mr. Heston deserves to be called the artist-hero of Liberalism. He has dedicated his genius to Freethought, and has done faithful and noble work for the cause of right and truth. But the pictures do not make up the whole of this volume. There are nearly two hundred pages of reading matter that serve first as explanations of the illustrations, and secondly as texts to prove the utter falsity of the church's professions and the hypocrisy of those who uphold them. Altogether the book is one of the best weapons against Christianity and the church that has ever been put in the hands of Freethinkers.—[Boston Investigator.

The Bundehesh (a sacred book of the Persians,) states that Ahuramazda after creating the first man and woman, Mashya and Mashyana, bade them "to be humble of heart; to observe the law; to be pure in their thoughts, pure in their speech, pure in their actions." But an evil demon came to them in the form of a Serpent, sent by Ahriman, the prince of devils, and gave them fruit of a wonderful tree, which imparted immortality. Evil inclinations then entered their hearts, and all their moral excellence was destroyed. Consequently they fell, and forfeited the eternal happiness for which they were destined. They killed beasts, and clothed themselves in their skins.

BIBLE MYTHS shows this to be the origin of the Hebrew story.

Gems of Thought.

REFORMATION has always been regarded as treason.—R. G. Ingersoll.

THE mortal who fails to think ahead thinks too late.—Galveston News.

CRUELTY, like every other vice, requires no motiv outside of itself; it requires only opportunity.—George Eliot.

NOBILITY, the nobles say, is an intermediary between the monarch and the people. Yes, as the hound is an intermediary between the sportsman and the hare.—Chamfort and Vauvenargues.

ALTHOUGH the true end of all knowledge is action, and it is only for the sake of action that knowledge is sought by the human race, yet, in order that it may be gained in sufficient breadth and depth, it is necessary that the individual should seek knowledge for its own sake.—W. K. Clifford.

THE God of the Old Testament rewards and punishes visibly and signally here; he terrifies often by his anger; he reforms sometimes. The God of the New Testament makes little difference here between those whom he approves and those he disapproves; so little that he is charged with injustice for it; but he lies in wait to punish the latter hereafter with unrelenting vengeance and eternal torments, when it is too late to terrify because it is too late to reform.—Lord Bolingbroke.

WHAT the world claims to-day is freedom from work. What it should hav is freedom in work. If we contrast the popular misconception and notion of work in the minds of most of our modern workers with the joy and pride that in former ages workmen had in their craft and in their productions we must acknowledge that, to a certain extent, our boasted advance of civilization has been followed by a corresponding deterioration. I am not here to plead for the social organization that prevailed in the Middle Ages. I merely wish to call attention to this one fact—that in the Middle Ages the workman was jealous of the honor of his craft; he had a pride and joy in his work.—Dr. Emil G. Hirsch.

CERTAIN types of religionists believe that they obtain their goodness from religion, and it is doubtless true that some men derive benefit (within the limits of their organization) from systems which other good, if mistaken, men hav devised; nevertheless, no religion contains more of good than men put into it. The goodness existed previous to and independently of the religion. Consider the man who is about to pray perhaps for the first time; some sudden trouble has overtaken him; many emotions are aroused; his latent goodness is awakened. He has been taught that real goodness is to be found only in prayer. But, in truth, goodness comes first; he prays because he is good, he is not good because he prays. He makes his prayer, his prayer does not make him; probably he is comforted by the paroxysm of emotion, for any religion givs, to certain temperaments, the peace which passeth all understanding. Goethe expressed the opinion, which Matthew Arnold indorsed, that religion is needed by those who hav neither poetry nor art.—Furneaux Jordan.

IN Greece and Rome forms of worship infinit in variety were tolerated. . . . The easy-going toleration of Greece and Rome disappeared in presence of Judaism, and the time came when Hebraized Christianity superseded the mythologies as the religion of the state, until, about eight hundred years ago, the rule of uniformity was established. Thereafter, as Gibbon asserts, a spiritual empire acquired by fraud was defended by violence. Universal conformity was exacted, and toleration, becoming a thing extinct, was in process of time forgotten; or worse than forgotten, remembered and loathed as a feature of paganism. The One True Faith knew it not; nor, indeed, could know it. This rule of religious conformity prevailed from the beginning of the eleventh to the beginning of the sixteenth century, and was enforced both then and later by all necessary measures, whether Catholic or Calvinistic, including excommunication, persecution, crusades, the Inquisition, and other agencies, whether civil—numbering the block, the gallows, the wheel, and the fagot—or spiritual, stimulated by terror of the rack in this world and hell-fire in the next. But now, as the nineteenth century is drawing to a close, there are quite as many phases of religious belief in communities not, like Spain, still medieval, as there were altars in Athens; and they are treated with much the same forbearance. Thus in the matter of religious toleration the world has struggled painfully back to where it was when Paul preached on Mars Hill. So, as I said, religious toleration is in a way a revival; not a discovery.—Charles Francis Adams.

RELIGION A CURSE, RELIGION A DISEASE, RELIGION A LIE.

By Samuel P. Putnam.

Dedicated to the American Congress, of 1892, which for the sake of Religion, Stabbed Liberty to the Heart.

A work burning with indignation inspired by the Congressional act closing the World's Fair on Sunday—an act which practically united the government and the Christian church.

To which is added Mr. Putnam's address delivered before the Columbian Exposition Committee of the House of Representatives against Sunday closing.

Also the following Essays and Poems by Mr. Putnam, which have never before been put in book form: Orthodoxy; Freethought; Man, Not God (written for a Paine anniversary); The Statue of Liberty and Thomas Paine; a poem written for the opening exercises of the Silverton, Ore., Freethought Hall; Death and Life; The Golden Age; Shut the Door (a poem on the closing of the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia, in 1876).

The main essay in this work is one of the strongest arraignments ever made of the religion which cramps and fetters the minds of the people of this country. It should be distributed widely. It has been commended in the highest terms as it appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER and we hope every reader will buy a copy to lend his neighbor and arouse thought.

PEN PICTURES OF THE WORLD'S FAIR.

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

It is, besides being a complete Guide-Book, the best description of the Fair yet given—poetic, beautiful, accurate. It describes the inauguration ceremonies, gives the director-general's address, the efforts to close the Fair Sundays and the triumph of the Sunday-openers; describes the various buildings and what they contain, and is, all in all, the very best picture of the Fair that can be painted with a pen.

Not for Parsons.

HERE is a bit of unquestionable metaphysics from a three-year-old boy: "If I'd gone up-stairs, could God make it that I hadn't?"—Overland Monthly.

TEACHER: Who was the first man? First boy: George Washington. Teacher: Next. Second boy: Adam. First boy (indignantly): I didn't know you meant foreigners.—Boston Globe.

"WHAT must precede baptism?" asked the rector, when catechising the Sunday school. "A baby," exclaimed a bright boy, with the air of one stating a self-evident truth.—Tit Bits.

A CENTERVILLE, Ia., deacon made the following announcement at a social recently: "Miss Jones will now sing 'Put Me in My Little Bed' with Mr. Brown, the pastor." The irreverent youths of the congregation hav not ceased to snicker over the remarkable announcement, and hereafter the good deacon will see that a comma is placed right, before going ahead. —Scott County Argus.

WE hav all heard the story of the man who was wrestling with the bear, and prayed, "Lord, if you can't help me, don't help the bear, but stand one side, and you'll see the all-firedest bear fight you ever did see." Well, this is old, too—older than the oldest settler—for away back in the days of the Leshes, their chief once prayed before going into battle: "Be on our side. An' gin ye canna be on our side, aye lay low a bit, an' ye'll see thae carles get a hidin' that must please ye."—Forest and Stream.

As there is neither partridge-shooting nor cub-hunting on Sunday, Lady Di, when in the country, whiles away the Sabbath by taking on a Sunday-school class. This week she undertook to instruct her neophytes by relating the story of Jacob and Esau. She was well in her stride when she was pulled up by a touch on her shoulder. Turning round, she beheld the vicar at her elbow. "For pity's sake, Lady Diana," said that holy man, in agonized tones, "cut it short. You are getting the hair on the wrong man."—London Freethinker.

CONVERSION.

Where the Pacific heaven smiles there lies the darkest isle of isles—
So wrapped in heathen ignorance that 'tis blacker than the blackest hat—
And there, on pious work intent, a first-class missionary went;
A man of most persuading power, who saved a dozen souls an hour.

And then, for many years, no word was from that missionary heard;
And so the missions board sent out five pious men, of courage stout,
To see if aught save moldering bones remained of Reverend William Jones.

And so they sailed the ocean o'er, and duly landed on the shore;
Where they were much surprised to see a man in heathen toggery
Whose face was Jones's at a glance, although a flour-bag formed his pance.

Forward he came with beaming face, and hailed the crowd with unctuous grace:
"My friends, my dear benighted friends,
providence works to curious ends,
And certainly has brought you here to listen to my words of cheer.
You all are on the road to hell—repent, like me, and all is well.

"Cast off the sinful bonds that link you to the pit's hot, sulphurous brink!
A pure and holy heathen be, and know the joys revealed to me.
Ten wives hav I, whose virtues rare incite me with them to compare.

"And if a single woman can be better than the worthiest man,
His soul in goodness must be swimmin' who emulates ten lovely women.
Also we find the plural wife by competition
lessens strife,
And having never one old maid, of gossip
we are not afraid.
Our savings of each year are sunk by all in one grand annual drunk,
Which everybody being in, none taunts his neighbor with his sin.
They join our band and learn at last how happily life may be passed.
And see how kindness, love, and peace attend sweet heathendom's increase.
Come, save your souls and mend your lives, embrace our faith—and fourteen wives!"

What more? Of that we cannot speak.
We only know that, just last week,
Twenty-five missionaries went to where those searching saints were sent,
To send back to the virtuous world some tidings of the saints who hurled Themselvs upon a savage strand to find the leader of their band,
Whose utter disappearance must hav caused much trouble to the just.

THE HOLY CROSS SERIES.

The Popes and Their Doings. Biographical sketches of the most noted of these vicars of Christ and vicegerents of God, showing what they have done, and what kind of men they were. It contains very plain statements, in very unvarnished language, and the unmasking is complete, proving them to have been cruel, intriguing, and licentious men. Considering the rapid growth of Catholicism in this country, this book cannot be too widely disseminated. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Awful Disclosures of Maria Monk, as exhibited in a narrative of her sufferings during her residence of five years as a novice, and two years as a black nun, in the Hotel Dieu Nunnery, at Montreal. Perhaps not any anti-Catholic book published has created more excitement, and had such a circulation as this work. To counteract its effects the Catholics circulated a story that Maria Monk was "no better than she should be," but investigation disclosed that her "child of shame" was none other than the child of her priest-seducer. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth 75 cents.

Auricular Confession and Popish Nunneries. By Wm. Hogan, for twenty-five years a confessing priest. A revelation of the licentious practices of the priests and nuns in these religious brothels. There is no question that Ex-priest Hogan knew the truth of the tales of vice, seduction, and infanticide he gives in this volume, and equally there is no question that if the people generally knew of them, Catholicism would not be given the vast amounts of money now allowed it by our various city governments. Price, paper, 50 cents, cloth. 75 cents.

The Priest in Absolution. A Review of the system of auricular confession, including copious extracts from the "Confessional Unmasked," from the "Master Key to Popery," etc. The work is a protest against and an appeal to every American citizen to examine carefully and thoughtfully a religious system so invasive of privacy, so powerful for evil in licentious hands, so fraught with danger to female modesty, to the ingenuous openness of youth, and to the freedom of thought, speech, and action. Price, paper, 25 cents.

Priestly Celibacy Exposed. A lecture by the Rev. Geo. Townsend Fox, of Durham, England. Revised American edition, showing the result in parishes of the Roman decree that priests shall not mary. Price, paper, 15 cents.

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA IDENTIFIED AS THE CHRISTIAN JESUS.

An important and remarkable revelation concerning the life and times of Apollonius of Tyana, the great sage and philosopher of the first century. It is here claimed that his life and teachings were appropriated and utilized by the formulators of the Christian religion in the interest of so-called Christianity. The plagiarism is made plain in this brief history of Apollonius, especially in view of the historical references and comments thereon. It is quite evident that to conceal the plagiarism, the name of Apollonius was suppressed.

Petition to Congress Asking It to Reject the Proposed God-in-the-Constitution Amendment.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, in Congress Assembled:

We, the undersigned, citizens of the United States, do hereby respectfully pray and memorialize your Honorable Body to reject the proposed Amendment to the Constitution prepared by the National Reform Association and offered in the Senate on Jan. 25th, 1894, by Senator Frye, and in the House on the same day by Representative Morse. The proposed Amendment would change the Preamble to the Constitution by the insertion of the sentences within quotation marks which follow the words "We, the people of the United States," in the paragraph below:

We, the people of the United States, "devoutly acknowledging the supreme authority and just government of Almighty God in all the affairs of men and nations; grateful to him for our civil and religious liberty, and encouraged by the assurances of his Word to invoke his guidance, as a Christian nation, according to his appointed way, through Jesus Christ," etc.

We ask the rejection of this proposed amendment for the following reasons:

1. That the American principle of separation of church and state may be maintained.

2. That the rights of all classes of citizens may be conserved and perpetuated. It is manifest that the adoption of such an Amendment to the Constitution would be, in fact, the incorporation of certain religious and sectarian dogmas in the fundamental law of the land. Such recognition of religious dogmas in the civil law was very carefully guarded against by the wise founders of the Republic, both in the Constitution as originally adopted and in the First Amendment thereto.

3. As the Constitution now stands no discrimination, on the ground of heresy, can be legally made against any citizen. More than one hundred years of experience amply justifies this wide tolerance and forcibly pleads for its continuance. Men of all shades of religious, non-religious, and anti-religious belief can and do render allegiance to and acceptably serve the State, and this without hypocrisy or perjury. Should this proposed Amendment be adopted, it would at once shut out of public life candid and honest men, whose reason, for any cause, cannot accept one or more of the three creedal statements contained in said proposed Amendment, but unscrupulous doubters and rejecters of these creedal affirmations would have no difficulty in taking the oath of allegiance to the Amended Constitution. Hence said proposed Amendment offers a premium for hypocrisy and perjury, and is, consequently, in the highest degree immoral. It is also unjust, in that it deprives a part of our citizens of their equal rights, because of a difference of opinion. Again, it must be hurtful to the State, because, as already shown, it would admit pretenders and timorous men to positions of trust and responsibility, and bar out men of honesty and courage.

4. The experience of all times and nations has shown conclusively that every attempt to force from the citizen a direct or indirect acknowledgment of the truth of any of the dogmas of religion is disastrous. It creates new religious hatreds and intensifies the old; it demoralizes religion and corrupts the state; it tramples the equal rights and liberties of the deserving citizen, and puts into the hands of bad men a dangerous and terrible power over the property, persons, and lives of their fellow-citizens.

5. If Theistic, Trinitarian, and Christian majorities may to-day rightfully force upon Deistic, Atheistic, or Agnostic, and Unitarian and non-Christian minorities their distinctive creeds, what warrant have we that some other day the Catholics, the Methodists, or the Presbyterians will not Amend into the Constitution their distinguishing sectarian dogmas? That step would logically follow the one which your Honorable Body has been asked to take, and against which we respectfully but strongly and unalterably protest.

EMILE HENRY, an Anarchist, exploded a bomb in the café of the Hotel Terminus in Paris. A large number of persons were injured. In resisting arrest Henry severely wounded a policeman and a woman.

THE New Jersey senatorial deadlock continues. The Democratic leaders hav prevailed upon the race-track managers to hav no racing this winter, which could continue, as the deadlock prevents the passage of anti-racing bills.

A FRENCH Anarchist in London was killed by the explosion of some chemicals on his person. The police raided the Autonomie Club and found documents in French which were exact counterparts of some distributed in Paris.

DURING 1893 five Mexicans, seven Indians, thirty whites, and one hundred and fifty negroes, four of them women, were lynched in the United States. The crimes charged were rape fifty-two, murder fifty-seven, arson eight, and the rest miscellaneous crimes.

THE jury returned a verdict of "guilty" in the case of John Y. McKane, the Gravesend boss, accused of conspiracy in last fall's elections. Awaiting sentence, he was held in Raymond Street jail, Brooklyn, as a "gentleman" prisoner. On February 19th Judge Bartlett sentenced him to six years' imprisonment in Sing Sing.

THE Senate has rejected the nomination of Wheeler H. Peckham to be associate justice of the Supreme Court, because of Mr. Peckham's opposition to the candidacy of Judge Maynard in New York last fall. The vote was 41 to 32. On February 19th President Cleveland nominated for the position Senator Edward Douglass White of Louisiana and the Senate at once confirmed him.

The Most Magnificent Work Ever Published by the Freethought Press.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The object of this work is to present the Course of Freethought throughout the Civilized World for the last Four Centuries, from the time of Columbus and Bruno to the time of Ingersoll.

It will be a radical Historic Record of the Greatest Developments of the Human Race.

It will reveal Freethought as an Intellectual, Moral, Literary, Social, Industrial, and Political Movement.

It will show what Freethought is in itself and how manifold are its influences, and with what hope and promise we can hail its future triumph.

"Four Hundred Years of Freethought" will Embrace the most Illustrious Pages of Human History,

adorned with the brightest Genius, radiant with the most splendid Poetry, rich with the greatest Inventions and Discoveries and ennobled with Freedom's most shining advance.

Nothing Can be More Interesting,

more inspiring to the Pioneer Workers of to-day—to those who are still in the van for Human Rights and Progress. The struggle is not ended and what is already won must be carefully guarded. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; and from the Past we must ever learn Great Lessons for the Future.

NO LIBERAL CAN AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THIS BOOK.

It will contain the Greatest Thoughts and the Greatest Deeds of the Greatest Men

In One Harmonious and Magnificent Whole,

a vivid picture of man's sublimest evolution, with the added glory of

WOMAN'S EMANCIPATION

from the chains and slavery of a barbaric creed and church.

THE FIRST PART of the book will deal with Freethought as a Universal Power, as a Spirit, a Method, a prevailing but unorganized Influence in every Department of Human Growth.

THE SECOND PART will deal with Freethought as an Organized Movement, especially in America and Europe; and this history is of equal importance with the first, and should be justly understood and the Pioneers of our work recognized.

The first part will embrace the following Grand Departments:

Philosophy.	Science.	Education and Ethics.	Literature.		Government and Politics.		Woman's Emancipation.
Bruno.	Copernicus.	Bacon.	Boccaccio.	Lessing.	Voltaire.	Gambetta.	Madame Roland.
Spinoza.	Galileo.	Comenius.	Rabelais.	Schiller.	Rousseau.	Castelar.	Mary Wollstoncraft.

THE PORTRAITS OF THESE ILLUSTRIOUS REFORMERS

in every domain of Human Thought and Progress will adorn the pages of this volume.

The Second Part of this volume will be devoted especially to organized Freethought and the Liberal Press in modern times. The Truth Seeker, Investigator, Ironclad Age, Secular Thought, Freethinkers' Magazine, Independent Pulpit, Lucifer, the Freethinker, Agnostic Journal, etc.

It will give a history of the

GREAT INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

at Chicago, the Freethought Federation of America, the American Secular Union, the various state and local organizations, the Canadian Secular Union, the British Secular Union, and other Liberal associations throughout the world.

It will contain the portraits of those who, up to the present time, have been identified with Freethought work—editors, lecturers, officers of societies, and those who, as representative men, have won distinction in other fields of effort. There will be the portraits of

Horace Seaver,	George E. Macdonald,	Capt. R. C. Adams,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Sr.,	Susan H. Wixon,
J. P. Mendum,	E. M. Macdonald,	John R. Charlesworth,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.,	Mrs. Charles Watts,
D. M. Bennett,	L. K. Washburn,	Samuel P. Putnam,	Prof. J. H. Cook,	Mrs. Robert C. Adams,
Parker Pillsbury,	Ernest Mendum,	John E. Remsburg,	E. H. Heywood,	Mrs. M. A. Freeman,
Elizur Wright,	Charles Watts,	Franklin Steiner,	Otto Wettstein,	Katie Kehm Smith,
T. C. Leland,	G. W. Foote,	J. D. Shaw,	Stephen Pearl Andrews,	Lucy N. Colman,
T. B. Wakeman,	Saladin,	E. A. Stevens,	James Parton,	Lillian Leland,
Judge C. B. Waite.	J. R. Monroe,	H. L. Green,	Abner Kneeland,	Amy Post.

and other men and women who have contributed to the advancement of Freethought and whose names should be remembered throughout the Liberal ranks. There will also be about

ONE HUNDRED BIOGRAPHIES,

and in these will be given a picture of Freethought progress which will be most interesting and valuable, for it is in individuals that we find the best interpretations of the age.

The Price of This Superb Book is $5.00,

and not for the same amount of money can there be found such an array of facts, such a survey of history, and such a galaxy of Freethought.

Mr. Putnam is now devoting his whole time to this work and it will be published at the earliest possible moment.

The name of every Subscriber who sends five dollars before the work is on the press will be enrolled in this book. DON'T FAIL TO SUBSCRIBE AT ONCE.

This book will contain

Over Six Hundred Pages of Printed Matter and Over One Hundred Portraits.

It will be elegantly bound. It will be a book for the home and the fireside. It will be a book to give to your friends when they ask, What is Freethought—what has it done and what is it doing in the world?

This is the most universal presentation of Freethought ever given to the public, and no Freethinker can afford to be without it. It is a library in itself.

Putnam and the Christian Amendment.

S. P. Putnam, President of the Freethought Federation of America, goes to Washington to oppose the proposed Christian Amendment to the Constitution. The Judiciary Committee of the House will giv a hearing on March 6th to the promoters and opponents of the amendment. The National Reform Association and the American Sabbath Union will hav several representativs on the ground to argue in favor of this measure, which is intended to destroy the secular character of our national Constitution and make it a Theistic and Christian platform. Rev. A. T. Jones will antagonize the theocrats from the point of view of the Seventh-Day Adventists, while Mr. Putnam will voice the uncompromising opposition of all friends of a government wholly separate from the church, and especially will he represent the Freethinkers of the United States. He is the elected chief of the Freethought party, the eloquent champion of the equal religious liberties of all citizens of the Republic. He must be sustained. He has to do battle against tremendous odds of numbers, wealth, and social prestige; but on his side is the truth; on his side is justice; on his side is freedom of conscience; on his side are the clear thoughts of the fathers as they embodied them in the Constitution which he hastens to the country's capital to save from the withering touch of the priest-politician; on his side are the noblest traditions of this people, and to him we look to do effectiv work for us, our children, and the unborn generations.

Mr. Putnam must hav the sinews of war; he must hav money. His expenses must be paid as they are incurred. You hav never yet failed him and the cause, and we do not believe that you will now in this supreme crisis. Please send contributions at once to the Treasurer of the Federation, E. C. Reichwald, 165 South Water street, Chicago.

There is another way in which you can help Mr. Putnam. Write at once to your member of the House, to your Senators. Telegraph to the House Judiciary Committee, either through its chairman, Mr. Culberson, or some other member, if you prefer. Address, giving the member's name, "Judiciary Committee, House of Representativs, Washington, D. C." Last week we gave the names of all members of both committees. Send money to Mr. Reichwald for Mr. Putnam. Send letters and telegrams to Congressmen, Senators, and especially now to the House Judiciary Committee.

Our Struggle for Existence.

The men and women of the United States who prize religious liberty realize at last that it is a struggle to the death with the church, the political church. No armistice or compromise is now possible. It is surrender or defeat for either the Theocrats or the Secularists. We must chain or break the wheels of the ecclesiastical Juggernaut, or it will roll over and crush us out of existence.

The National Reform Association, the American Sabbath Union, the Women's Christian Temperance Union, the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, and many other "fighting corps" of the churches, are executing well-planned, concerted, and persistent attacks upon the constitutional defenses of our equal religious and civil liberties and rights. We hav temporarily repulsed them in a few instances, but they hav pressed steadily onward, and where we dressed our thin lines yesterday they encamp to-day. On one specious pretext and another the courts hav uniformly decided against us. Constitutional safeguards hav been undermined by judges who were more anxious to serve the church than to protect the weak from the attacks of the powerful. The supreme courts of several states hav sustained the validity of Sunday laws, and a multitude of the lower courts hav done the same. The federal Supreme Court has affirmed in an obiter dictum that this is "a Christian nation." Congress passed and the president signed a bill intended to close the World's Fair on Sunday, and, although the Fair was not kept closed all the time, the legal victory was with the theocrats, for the Appellate Court of Illinois has just decided that Judges Stein and Goggin, whose acts kept it open, did not hav jurisdiction. Besides, none of the decisions which were operativ to prevent the closing of the gates took into consideration the real and vital principles involved. In Montana we hav thus far succeeded in keeping the Bible out of the schools, and in Ohio the hearing of prayers in the lower house of the legislature has been dispensed with this winter. These triumphs are encouraging, but, unfortunately, not decisiv. Nothing will be permanently settled until the theocrats are disastrously defeated on the battlefield of national politics. With God and Jesus and the Bible in the Constitution and the Supreme Court merely the highest tribunal of a state-church, Ohio and Montana will easily be whipped into the ecclesiastical traces.

One of the latest decisions against the religious liberty of the citizen is that of the Appellate Court of Maryland, rendered in the Judefind case. Mr. John W. Judefind is a farmer living in Kent county. He is an Adventist, and husked corn in his field on Sunday. Arrested and taken before a magistrate, he was fined $5. He appealed to the Circuit Court, was tried, and again fined $5. He carried his case to the Court of Appeals on a writ of error, which alleged that the Sunday law of Maryland is void because it is in violation of the first paragraph of the fourteenth article of the Constitution of the United States; because it is in violation of article thirty-six of the Bill of Rights of Maryland; and for several technical reasons, one of which was that the warrant was issued and served on Sunday, and another that the bond was void because it charges "Sabbath-breaking," when no such offense is known to the laws of the state. The court denies that any writ of error lies to it in this case. But, although this disposed of the writ, the court proceeded to deal with the alleged unconstitutionality of the Maryland Sunday law.

The court said that the law in question contravenes neither the federal Constitution nor the Maryland Bill of Rights. Of course "numerous decisions sustain this view." We take this occasion to remark that Freethinkers and other advocates of a free Sunday will hav to make up their minds that the courts will in the future, as they hav in the past and as they do to-day, decide that Sunday laws are constitutional. They will continue to misinterpret the organic law until they are forced to do otherwise by an aroused and aggressiv public sentiment. The church militant is in the saddle. We shall never enjoy the religious liberty contemplated by the fathers and provided for in the Constitution until she is unhorsed. The Maryland court continues:

"Nature, experience, and observation suggest the propriety and necessity of one day of rest, and the day generally adopted is Sunday. There will always be differences as to how the day shall be spent, but the advantage is too apparent to doubt. In interpreting these differences we must not place unreasonable constructions upon them; but a man, if he defies the law of the state, must expect to be punished. If the position of the plaintiff be correct, then the law prohibiting the sale of liquor on Sunday, etc., is unconstitutional, as would be most, if not all, of our laws concerning Sunday. The court says that Sunday has been observed as a day of rest from the foundation of the state, and cites Kilgore vs. Mills et al. (6 G. and J., 274, and 11 Maryland, 313) to prove the position, and it says the laws are looking to a still surer making of the day a day of rest."

But nature, experience, and observation do not suggest the propriety of compelling one to rest in the particular manner favored by a Christian majority. The fact that a man, if he defies the laws of the state, must expect to be punished, answers no question as to the constitutionality and righteousness of the law. There is the real issue always; there is where the line is drawn between the just man and the Sabbatarian. No doubt the early Christians expected to be punished if they disobeyed the laws of Nero, but that did not demonstrate the validity and equity of those laws. When judges talk such twaddle as this uttered by the Court of Appeals of Maryland, what hope is there of a fair administration of law and an orderly and prosperous social state? The court further avers that "Sunday has been observed as a day of rest from the foundation of the state." What of that? It could just as pertinently be said that Monday has been observed as a washday during the same period and that therefore a law to punish a woman for doing her washing on Tuesday would be constitutional and equitable. Maryland has had a "blasphemy" statute for a long time and no doubt these Daniels come to judgment would declare that it is valid because it is old, should an Atheist be prosecuted under it and the case come before them.

We should be grateful to these judicial gentlemen for their comforting assurance that "the laws" of Maryland "are looking to the still surer making of the day a day of rest." Which means, of course, that the Christian lawmakers and adjudicators are determined that the people shall comport themselvs on that day as the church desires them to do.

A national Sunday law is on the program of the Covenanters and their allies. Rev. H. H. George, of the American Sabbath Union, and who is now in Washington lobbying for the God-in-the-Constitution amendment, is reported by an Iowa journal o hav said at a Sunday convention in that state in December last:

"We are living in stirring times. We must cry aloud and put our shoulder to the wheel. We propose to stop this Sunday desecration. The Sunday trains are dependent upon the Sunday mails for support. Stop the trains, and that will stop the Sunday newspapers. All denominations of any note are now united in this movement, Catholic and all, and we hav succeeded in getting the coöperation of all labor unions, temperance associations, and other societies, political and ecclesiastical, to unite in one solid move on the present Congress, to force them to pass a national Sunday law. We are prepared to make Congress understand that this is a Christian nation. We would be a set of fools to giv up the battle now after gaining the victory over Congress in the World's Fair movement. We must hav a Sabbath day as we want it. We hav got to get out on the streets and cry, 'Yet forty days and we shall hav law.' Those who will not be persuaded to keep the Sabbath [Sunday] can be informed that they will be compelled to do so. The states hav Sunday laws, but this is not enough. We are going to hav a national law, and I think I am sure we shall hav it before the first session of this Congress is closed. Measures are now effected to besiege Congress with representativ men from every organized body in the land, and they will not dare refuse us. The church should use the power of Congress to control the sin of the nation, and if she does not do so, blood will be on her garments."

That is the way these men talked before Congress passed the World's Fair Sunday closing bill, and we thought the boast was a vain one, but we were very soon undeceived. Shall we be caught again?

"We must hav a Sabbath day as we want it"! The insolence of it! "We are going to hav a national law"! How do free men and women like this talk? And how will they like the fact?

Referring to the final disposition of the Clingman World's Fair injunction case by the Appellate Court of Illinois, the Christian Reformer says:

"Christian citizens must be blind if they fail to see how this injunction case demonstrates the necessity of an authoritativ and undeniable constitutional basis for Sabbath laws and all such distinctivly Christian institutions of our government. · · · Of all the practical arguments for the Christian amendment of our national Constitution, this Clingman injunction suit is the strongest that can be urged. · · · Let the attitude of the nation in all its courts and laws, toward the Sabbath and the Lord of the Sabbath, be so clearly defined by a constitutional acknowledgment that all such trickery will be hereafter impossible."

In other words, if the Christian amendment, now in committee of Congress, had been a part of the Constitution at the time of the World's Fair, Mr. Clingman could not hav appealed for his rights under that Constitution, and Judge Stein could not hav kept the gates of the Fair open on Sunday. Now, Freethinkers, you can see clearly some of the possibilities of mischief which are wrapped up in this amendment which Mr. Putnam, as your representativ, goes to Washington to oppose, and you will realize the imperativ necessity of holding up his hands. The seeds of crime in that embryo amendment are numberless. Read again these words which we hav quoted from the Christian Reformer, and note particularly that the theocrats are striving to obtain "an authoritativ and undeniable constitutional basis for Sabbath laws and all other such distinctivly Christian institutions of our government." Do you know what that means? If you do not, read the history of any country in which the church controled the state.

Will the theocrats pause in their work when they hav succeeded in incorporating Christian dogmas in the Constitution and the statutes? What are laws worth if not enforced, and who but Christians can properly and remorselessly enforce Christian laws? It is the wish and the intention of the Covenanter party to shut non-Christians out of all public positions, and very probably also to disfranchise them. Does this seem incredible? Nevertheless it is true. Read these excerpts from an editorial in the Christian Statesman of Jan. 6, 1894:

"It is absolutely necessary for the safety and welfare of the nation and the national interests, that the government itself be held to the strictest conformity to the divine law. If it holds and exercises the divine authority over men, it should be required to use that authority, according to the divine direction. · · · The divine powers and prerogativs of civil government are safe and beneficent in the hands of men only when they are directed and controled by the divine law. 4. The importance of vesting with the powers of civil government, such men only as fear God and are true to his law. This follows from the very nature and province of civil government. If it is the ordinance of God's government over men, in their civil capacity, and is clothed with his authority, and exists for the accomplishment of his purposes among men, and can be safely administered only as directed by his law, it certainly follows as a logical necessity that they who administer its powers must be the obedient servants of God, and men who love his law. · · · Will the Christian citizens of the nation learn the lesson? Is it possible to so far remove the film of party prejudice from the eyes of intelligent Christian men, as to enable them to see that what our land needs is not so much the supremacy of any party, or of any mere secular policy of governmental administration, as the elevation to the places of governmental authority and responsibility, of men who are able, and fear God, and honor his holy law?"

These sentences are their own commentary.

What is being done by the theocrats to push the Christian amendment? Meetings in furtherance of the movement hav been held in a number of cities and towns, especially in Pennsylvania; at one meeting $225 was raised for the work in Washington, and $180 more for the same work was reported in one issue of the Christian Reformer, besides more than $400 for the general work of the National Reform Association; a mass meeting was held in Pittsburg on March 2d, and it was expected that a large delegation would go to Washington from that meeting and be present as a moral backing at the hearing on the 6th inst. So many are going that special railway fares and hotel rates in Washington were secured; while the amendment is pending, a monthly, the Constitutional Amendment, will be issued, and also a new weekly series of National Reform documents (the "Christian Amendment Series"); subscriptions are being solicited to send these documents to all the ministers and other influential persons throughout the whole Union; the association wishes to send out each week one hundred thousand copies of the smaller document and the same number each month of the larger one; petitions are being widely circulated; all friends of the treasonable scheme are urged to write letters to their Representativ and Senators, and it is expected that hundreds of telegrams will be received by the members of the House Judiciary Committee from March 5th to 7th. These are some of the measures being taken to "arouse the public conscience" in order to intimidate Congress and so secure a favorable report from the Judiciary Committee. The enemy is splendidly organized, is under perfect disciplin, is fanatically enthusiastic, and in the final struggle at the polls or elsewhere can depend upon the dormant yet powerful superstitions of millions of Christian men and women who may now think that they are opposed to the demands of the National Reform Association, but who will find it impossible to resist the Christian appeal to their early teachings and their fears—"He that is not for me is against me."

Now we know what is before us—a long and stubbornly contested fight to preserve the most important parts of the national Constitution and with them our dearest rights as American citizens and free students in the great world-school of thought. All that our ancestors wrested by the force of brain and the might of the strong right arm from noble and priest and king is at stake. The traitor political church has once more flung herself at the white throat of liberty. Her murderous hand must be wrenched away at whatever cost. She must be thrust back into her place and taught to respect the rights of the people. She says government is from God, by which euphemism she means herself. We say all just government is of the people, and when she attempts to usurp their authority she does so at her peril.

Defeat the Christian amendment.

Do We Want the Bible in the Schools?

Some of our friends seem to be inclined to take exception to our opinion that the American Protectiv Association is antagonizing the Catholic church from the standpoint of the fanatical Protestant, and that, having no clear conception of the basic principles of religious liberty and civil justice, it aims simply to shut Catholics out of office in order to make places for Protestants. To such we respectfully commend the matter which follows.

The American Citizen, of Boston, a paper strongly in sympathy with if not actually an organ of the American Protectiv Association, says:

"We sincerely hope that this great organization—founded on Christian principles—with the Bible as its supreme constitution—will adhere closely to the spirit of the book which has made Protestantism what it is, and without which Rome has degenerated into a corrupt and despised ecclesiastical despotism."

The American Eagle, of Kansas City, Kansas, the official organ of the American Protectiv Association in that state, prints the platform of principles of the state organization. Here is the tenth plank:

"We demand that the Bible, which has been the recognized text-book of our fathers, be maintained in our public schools as the rule and guide of all moral actions."

Do we want the Bible in the schools?

State Superintendent of Schools Prendergast of Minnesota thinks it will not harm any Freethinker to hav a selection from the Bible read in the schools. It is also possible that a selection from Ingersoll or THE TRUTH SEEKER would not harm any Christian if read in the same place, but the chances are that the Christian would say something bad.

The Illinois appellate court has decided that the state court that issued an injunction forbidding the World's fair managers to close the gates on Sunday, had no jurisdiction. Well, the gates were kept open. Practically, the victory was with common sense and liberty. Technically, the Sunday-closers won. Yet it is never to be forgotten that Congress was the first usurper. Following its illegal action comes all the rest. This "battle," so-called, was but a skirmish. The real battles are to come.

"Some of our thoughtless contemporaries think it is very inconsistent to send a cargo of rum and a missionary together to Africa. But what could be more appropriate? The missionary tells the nativs how to die, and the rum kills them. See?"—N. Y. Voice.

Our pious neighbor will find itself outside the church soon if it keeps on telling the truth in this careless way.

"We will engage to make as strong an argument for polygamy out of the Bible as any man can make for the liquor traffic out of the Bible."—Voice.

That is an easy task, Mr. Funk. We will engage to make thrice as strong an argument for either out of the Bible as you can make against either out of the Bible.

District-Attorney Perry notified David Overmyer, counsel of Moses Harman, that he should call up the case of his client and move for sentence at the term of the federal court sitting in Topeka last week. However, the court has adjourned and Mr. Harman is still in undisturbed occupation of the sanctum of Lucifer. It is well.

"The American Sabbath Union, the New York Sabbath Committee, and a number of the other Sabbath associations and unions hav issued a circular reminding the ministers and churches that the first week in April has been for several years observed as a season of united prayer for the Lord's day, and suggesting that, as the first of April comes on Sunday, special attention be given to that topic both in sermons and prayer."—Independent.

April 1st is All Fools' day.

The American Newspaper Publishers' Association, lately in session in this city, adopted a resolution in condemnation of House Bill No. 4,732, now before Congress. This is the proposed new gag law drafted by the Society for the Emolument of Its Officers and is intended to put the control of the advertising and news departments of the daily papers and other periodical publications into the hands of a gentleman temporarily residing in Washington and adorned with the mellifluous title of Postmaster-General. It is very gratifying to observe that the American publishers know this fool law when they see it, even if they do shut their eyes to some others equally inimical to the freedom of the press and to sound morals.

The president of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of California has just written to the secretary of the National Reform Associaton in hearty approval of the present attempt to Christianize the Constitution, and asking for 1,000 blank petitions to circulate for signatures in the only state that has no Sunday laws. Mrs. J. C. Bateham, of Kentucky, orders 200; Mrs. Mary C. Woodbridge, of Chicago, 200; Mrs. Dr. R. J. George, of Beaver Falls, Pa., orders nearly as many, and in addition has had several thousand printed at her own expense. All these are prominent officers of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, Mrs. Bateham and Mrs. George being national officials. Did some one say there is no danger?

Some years ago Colonel Ingersoll, in speaking of Samuel P. Putnam, said:

"Mr. Putnam believes Freethought has a future; that the time is coming when the superstitions of this world will be forgotten or remembered—some of them with smiles, many of them with tears. His abilities are of the highest order. He compels the admiration of everyone who really loves the just and true."

Besides believing that Freethought has a future, Mr. Putnam is doing as much as any other man to hasten it and to make it glorious. The campaign which this soldier of progress is about entering upon is an important one, and we hope that the comrades will rally at his call. Colonel Ingersoll has not overestimated the abilities of Mr. Putnam.

Franklin Steiner delivered his lecture on "The Great Religious Conspiracy" before the Manhattan Liberal Club on Friday evening, February 23d. The lecture was an excellent presentation of the subject, showing that the two great priesthoods, the Catholic and the Protestant, are making a simultaneous assault upon the constitutional guarantees of the religious liberty of the citizen, and that they hav already intrenched themselvs in custom, statute law, and judicial dictums and decisions. The address was well delivered, enthusiastically received, and the few lame criticisms upon it were easily and effectually disposed of by Messrs. Rowley, Wakeman, Ames, Sullivan, Foote, and the lecturer. A young man from the TRUTH SEEKER office sat at a table by the door and very successfully solicited signatures to the petition against the God-in-the-Constitution amendment.

The anthropologists of the Bureau of Ethnology hav received a report embodying the results of a study of the skull of Pizarro, whose mummy was recently disentombed in Peru. It seems somebody has been "startled" by this revelation of the cruel conqueror's character. We are informed that "the skull reveals all the marks of the criminal type as recognized by science to-day." He "was a murderous and blood-thirsty brute." The cranium "has even the so-called 'fossa of Lombroso,' which modern criminologists hav never discovered except in confirmed and habitual enemies of society." And so on. No one familiar with the career of this wholesale murderer will be either "startled" or surprised by these statements. Pizarro was the remorseless and unscrupulous destroyer of a civilization superior in every respect except militarism to that of Spain. He was a devout Catholic, and could neither read nor write.

The London Freethinker, referring to the God-in-the-Constitution amendment, says that the American Secularists hav forestalled the clericals "with a sixteenth amendment to the Constitution, declaring that no state shall pass any law respecting an establishment of religion, or authorize any payment of money to any church, religious society, or undertaking which is wholly, or in part, under sectarian or ecclesiastical control." There are some mistakes in this. The Christian amendment is already under consideration by the Judiciary Committees of the Senate and House. There is a society of Protestants which stands sponsor for such an amendment as the Freethinker outlines. It is aimed at the Catholics. Several of the leaders in this society are workers for Sunday laws and other Christian statutes, and there is not a known Freethinker among them. It is more than probable that the God-in-the-Constitution scheme will find supporters in this society.

It is very difficult to please all the good folks, and it seems to be impossible for them to agree among themselvs as to the moral qualifications that go to the making of a saint. The Christian Statesman is very warm in its praise of the late George W. Childs. He would not publish a Sunday issue of the Public Ledger; he kept all bad advertisments out of its columns; he was a great moral beacon-light for the young, etc. Next comes the Voice with this broadside of denunciation of the same man and paper:

"George W. Childs, who has just died after a life crowned with public respect for his many benefactions and the many noble traits of his character, was nevertheless the proprietor and editor of the Ledger, of Philadelphia, when it sold the columns of its editorial page to the drunkard-makers of Pennsylvania for so much cash, and printed their lies and misstatements in such a way as to lead the average reader to suppose that the editor was responsible for them. For the assistance rendered by his paper in a critical hour to the work of wrecking homes, breaking mothers' hearts, damning bright boys, and filling brothels with fallen girls, a thousand charities cannot atone."

All of which goes to show that men are "poor critters," doubtless made so by God for some inscrutable purpose.

The Cincinnati Catholic Telegraph pours out its wrath upon Puck because of the latter's cartoon "representing the Catholic church as a cat in its various stages of growth until it becomes a fierce and murderous tiger with its claws on the prostrate forms of a public school boy and his mother, who has around her waist a belt on which is inscribed the word 'Liberty.'" From this it appears that at least one Catholic editor accepts the Darwinian principle of development with a quick-time attachment, for he has a common cat change into a tiger. Possibly he will not take kindly our suggestion that the tiger was a tiger all the time, only at first it was a young and small tiger. Another thing: We don't believe the artist intended the Goddess of Liberty to be taken for the school-boy's mother! We are afraid that the Catholic Telegraph's editor is more familiar with representations of the Madonna and child than he is with pictures of the Goddess of Liberty and the school children she guards. In fact, we apprehend that this Catholic, like his church, knows so little of Liberty and its symbolical figure that he is unable to recognize either when placed before him.

Women hav long been the most generous givers to the church and other religious institutions. It seemed that the priest got all the money rich women had to spare during life or leave at death. But a change has begun, let us trust. Here is a list of the bequests of three women, all reported in one week, and not a dollar to a church! Good! The board of managers of the Germantown (Pa.) Hospital hav received a bequest of $100,000, left by the late Mrs. H. Pratt McKean; Mrs. Mary E. Schenley, of London, England, who is a large landowner in Pittsburg, Pa., has given that city the magnificent gift of Schenley Park, the ground for the newsboys' home, the site for the new institute for the blind in Oakland, the historic old block house at the point, $1,000 to the charity fund, and a voluntary reduction of rent to all her tenants. Lately she has contributed $10,000 to the fund for the purchase of another public park. And Phipps Conservatory, Schenley Park, is open on Sunday, right in the city of Pittsburg, the home of the Christian Statesman! Mrs. Charles Brown, Quincy, Ill., by will leaves $300,000 to public charities. She givs $55,000 and her residence and furniture to inaugurate and maintain a home for the aged poor in Quincy; a bequest of $5,000 to the Woodlawn Home for Orphans in Quincy, and $5,000 to the Industrial Home for Girls in Evanston, Ill.; $75,000 to the Illinois Humane Society, $45,000 to the Louisiana State Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, $15,000 to the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, $15,000 to the Quincy Humane Society.

The Way a Lawyer Looks at the Scheme.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Please send me several petitions against the proposed amendment to the Constitution. I can obtain a number of signatures here and will write to one or two of the members of the judiciary committees.

I think it very important to notice that the resolution, as introduced, proposes the amendment for ratification by conventions in the several states instead of by the legislatures of the several states. As provided by Article V. of the Constitution, Congress may propose an amendment either to the legislatures or to be ratified by conventions. Every one of the fifteen amendments to the Constitution has been by Congress proposed to and ratified by the legislatures. Should the resolution be concurred in by two thirds of both houses, the National Reform Association evidently realizes that it must be much more difficult for those who are in favor of a government "of the people, for the people, and by the people" to overcome the ignorance and superstition of the masses and induce them to choose delegates to conventions who would oppose the ratification than it would be to educate a few score members of the legislature in each state, many of whom are already elected. The National Reform Association is well organized to influence the ignorant millions, while the opposition is better prepared to bring convincing arguments to the few. Therefore the ratification by conventions is sought to be proposed by Congress, which Congress may do but which it never has done. You may object to my language, "the ignorant millions," but, as you realize that there are "Congressmen who hav never before heard of this God-in-the-Constitution movement," the sooner we come to realize the ignorance of millions of their constituents the sooner will we be prepared to throw off the chains of superstition with which we are now bound and prevent them from binding us with more. I do not write this for publication, but hope that I hav called your attention to an important feature of the resolution.

A Grand Campaign—The Press and the Platform.

Immediately after the publication of my book, "Four Hundred Years of Freethought," I wish to enter upon a thorough Freethought campaign throughout the country. The times demand it. There was never greater danger than at present. What is needed is agitation and education. On every side there are signs of ecclesiastical aggression. The church powers, through the facilities of corrupt politics, are surely and almost without resistance encroaching upon the liberties of the people. A long and hard battle is before us for human rights. The first thing to be done is to enlighten the people in the principles of American government, of justice and freedom, of humanity and progress The glorious principles of Freethought must be declared in their universal application. The clear light of reason must illuminate the message of science, of equality and fraternity.

This requires a determined effort. It requires perseverance, courage, energy, and generosity. It requires steady work all along the lines, in every locality. Wherever there is a handful of Freethinkers they should do something. They should arrange for at least one lecture, if not more, in their community. Let this be done all over the country, and a great advance will be made. There will be a vast power in such a general and united effort.

The platform and the press must work together in this great enterprise. The word spoken and the word printed each has its own influence. The lecture arouses as the book cannot; but the book educates through silent days and in the depths of thought as the lecture cannot. It is my purpose in the important campaign which I now undertake to combine these two in a method not before adopted, and which I believe will giv new and far greater success to our cause. I am sure that the Liberals of this country will see the immense advantages of the plan proposed, and will do their level best to make it a brilliant triumph in every state in the Union. Of course I must be amply supported by Liberal friends or I cannot carry it through to the great results which certainly can be reached if there is cordial co-operation. What I propose is this: To giv lectures at the usual reasonable rates, and in addition to the lecture to donate a certain amount of books, to be used by the Liberals who pay for the lecture as campaign literature for their own benefit and the education of the community in which the lecture is given. In this way the lecture will leave behind a permanent and extending influence. My terms, therefore, are as follows:

For $12 I will giv one lecture and $4 worth of books; for $30, three lectures and $13 worth of books; for $50, five lectures and $22 worth of books; for $60, six lectures and $30 worth of books; for $100, ten lectures and $60 worth of books. These books are to be publications of the Truth Seeker Publishing Company, Investigator, Freethinkers' Magazine, Independent Pulpit, and other Liberal publishing houses; Ingersoll's works, Washburn's, Watts's, Remsburg's, Shaw's, Putnam's, etc.—Freethought and scientific literature. I shall pay my traveling expenses, but I shall expect board to be provided for me at every lecture point. It would be impossible for me to pay hotel expenses at these rates.

It will be seen that the only way by which I can successfully carry out this method of lecturing is to hav a large number of appointments; at least five hundred—better one thousand. This will probably be the last extensiv campaign that I shall make in this country, and I want to devote at least two solid years to the work. I want to go into every state in the Union and to every place where there is a handful of Liberals. I want to make this a campaign both of agitation and education; I want to create a pervading and growing influence, and this comes by means of the books. If I giv five hundred or a thousand lectures on these terms, thousands of dollars' worth of Liberal books will be distributed all over the land, and this cannot be done in any other way than as I propose. What a tremendous influence this will be for many years to come!

I hope that wherever possible Liberals will arrange for six lectures. In this way they will get $30 worth of books, which will form a splendid nucleus for a Freethought circulating library. Besides, it takes about six lectures to thoroughly arouse a community, and it takes that number of lectures to adequately explain Freethought in its relations to life, philosophy, science, politics, and human happiness and progress.

It is understood that these lectures are to be given consecutivly. I must lecture every night to pay my way, and Sundays must always be counted for two lectures; one in the daytime, and one in the evening. It is only by continuous labor that I can make both ends meet.

When two or three lecture points are a few miles apart, they can join forces for six or ten lectures at the rates above, provided that all my traveling expenses are paid from point to point in this combination.

I shall not be able to enter upon this campaign until the first of June next, on account of business connected with the publication and distribution to subscribers of "Four Hundred Years of Freethought;" but between now and that date I want at least three hundred lecture appointments, and I earnestly ask those Liberals who think of accepting these splendid offers to write me at once, for although I may not be able to visit their field immediately, yet by knowing beforehand what lectures I am to giv throughout the country, I can arrange to do so at the least possible traveling expense, and it is by thus having three or four hundred lectures on my list that I am enabled to make such excellent rates, for what I thus save in travel is put into the books.

It is understood that Liberals who pay for the lectures will make their own selection of books, only they must be strictly Freethought and scientific books. I cannot afford to make these rates for any other kind of literature.

The following are the titles of the ten lectures I shall giv during this campaign:

"Rights of Man."
"The Religious Conspiracy."
"Liberalism and Christianity."
"Freethought and Morality."
"Evolution and Creation."
"The Bible and Modern Thought."
"Spiritualism, Theosophy, and Freethought."
"Liberty and Authority."
"Ethics of Jesus."
"Geology and Genesis."

Now, I hope that the Liberals of America will accept this magnificent method of work and push forward with fresh enthusiasm to larger fields of effort. I set my mark at one thousand lectures for this campaign. That will distribute over $5 000 worth of books. Think of it! Rally. Let there be a memorable advance. Write at the earliest moment to SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Care of THE TRUTH SEEKER, 28 Lafayette place, New York.

Still Searching for Light.

Why writers of ability in one line of thought exhibit analytical powers of a high order when discussing one particular question, and, refusing to accept preconceived notions unsupported by logical reasoning as proof of a doctrin, cling only to that which can be demonstrated with reasonable certainty, abandon reason and logic when they enter the discussion of other subjects requiring exactly the same qualities which make them eminent in their chosen line, is a question which no fellow can answer, while all are forced to admit that that is just what most eminent writers do when they venture out of their accustomed field. Citations without number can be made in proof of this assertion, as for instance the matchless Ingersoll, who, when talking about the tariff, is quite as illogical and dogmatic as he is sound and argumentativ when pointing out the mistakes of Moses. That grand old man, Gladstone, on the other hand, is an Ingersoll in logic when discussing questions of political economy, but degenerates to the intellectual level of that eminent praying machine, Dwight L. Moody, when he defends theology. Descending a little in the scale of eminence, we find that able image-breaker, Samuel P. Putnam, absolutely resistless in his pitiless logic until he runs afoul of the currency question, at which time he utters such absurdities as make the judicious grieve. Look at that wit and poet, "the man with the badge-pin," who with this dual description needs not to be further named in order to be recognized by readers of Freethought papers, who, able and concise on his chosen subject, yet furnishes a spectacle for gods and men when he alludes, even casually, to the question of finance. And last, not least, witness our able coadjutor in iconoclasm, John Peck, whose sledge-hammer blows against theology hav turned churches into theaters and robbed clergymen, without number, of tranquility and sleep, but whose utterances on the currency satisfy the thoughtful that his Agnosticism in the matter of finance is beyond dispute. If Mr. Peck did not claim to be competent to teach others in regard to financial matters, there would be no cause of complaint against him. But as he assumes the role of teacher, it is entirely in order for one who, while acknowledging his need of instruction, refuses to accept mere assertion as conclusiv, to question the preceptor and accept or reject his assertions according as the evidence impresses him. Since, then, school is open, let an inquirer ask Mr. Peck if the fact that the making of fractional currency, such as cents, nickels, and dimes, is a governmental monopoly, taken in conjunction with the fact that one can realize on such assets at the various sub-treasuries, in any other kind of currency one desires, does not sufficiently account for their passing at their face value? If the answer be negativ, the next question which suggests itself is, Does Mr. Peck believe that fractional currency would continue to circulate at its nominal value if the mints were open to the free coinage of cents, nickels, and dimes at ten cents' worth of copper, twenty cents' worth of nickel, and fifty-thee cents' worth of silver to the coined dollar? If the answer be affirmativ, we may ask if the certainty of ultimate redemption in intrinsic value, when required, of any of the currency, fractional or otherwise, is not a large factor in establishing the confidence of the people generally in money which has no intrinsic value, or which has very much less than its face value in intrinsic worth? If yes, is "intrinsic value a fallacy?" If no, why does money which lacks intrinsic worth in any degree ever go to a discount as compared with money of full intrinsic worth? Further, what principle of political economy is ignored when the government "uses a costly material, such as gold, instead of a cheap material, like paper, for money?" When Mr. Peck speaks of an "economic principle" is he entirely clear in his mind regarding the difference between "economic," as applied to the science which treats of the production and distribution of wealth, and "economical," which he here uses as expressing merely the idea of costing less? When Mr. Peck, then, speaks of the government "ignoring an economic principle," does he mean that there has been a violation of the principles which underlie the laws governing production, or does he mean to imply that the laws of frugality hav been disregarded? We are sorry to be obliged to press this point, but it is essential that we should know.

In conclusion let us inquire if, "when a man pays a debt with a paper dollar, the dollar is redeemed," it is not equally true that Mr. Peck's note would be redeemed by the operation of the holder paying it out to some one in exchange for some commodity to the value of its face? Would Mr. Peck despair of ever seeing his note again in consequence of such a transaction, or would he bear in mind the date of its maturity and hustle round for funds to meet it, when it met him, as it surely would? Now, in answer to these questions, let Mr. Peck not attempt to wax sarcastic in regard to the questioner's diet nor ask for a reason for a rainbow not standing upside down, but let him sincerely and honestly answer if he can, or if he cannot let him come off the preceptor's perch. E. O. ROSCOE.

Religions in South America.

The Roman Catholic is the religion of Brazil, as well as of the rest of South America. In the Argentine Republic, Uruguay, and Brazil there are members of other denominations. These denominations are as strong as the foreign element happens to be in that locality, for the only nativ converts are a few servants, dependants or hypocrits for selfish ends, all of whom return to their old allegiance as soon as the foreign influence is removed. In a few cities where the numbers justify a church is built; other, weaker sects hire or borrow the use of halls. The churches as a rule hav their benches far apart, and the hall meetings are sad affairs; in Brazil it is especially so.

Missionaries from America are often to be met in these countries; what good they are doing from a religious point of view is to be found only in their reports to their home church or the society that sends them, for upon the spot itself the good effect is not seen. Their schools may be exceptions, for in many parts these are found in a reasonably flourishing condition; but where these schools are free from these missionary influences they are better still, for often their dogmatic action in regard to religion disgusts their patrons, and many flourishing schools hav been broken up.

The nativ women, even if they hav sufficient education to teach, possess none of those qualities which could enable them to govern a school. The customs of society make them timid and mistrustful of themselvs; the functions of a school-mistress demand more freedom of action than the customs of the country allow the nativ-born, while the foreigners are better educated, possess more self-reliance, and are freer from the hampers that nativ society puts upon its own women. As for being sectarian, this is against them; but, as many are callous on religious subjects, they prefer these schools to those taught by the Catholic priests, especially for their daughters and small boys.

The religious status of South America, so far as I hav had opportunities to observe, can be summed up in this sentence: The nativs are all Catholics, and their priests divide them into two classes, that is, good and bad Catholics. It is an accepted doctrin of their church that all must be received by infant baptism into the church, and ever afterward they are Catholics; and this infant baptism the priest sees is not neglected.

From Protestantism the priests hav no fear, for they know its weakness and their own strength. Besides the truly devout that hav all faith in the pope and the dogmas of their church, there is another large class that sees the great good that they are doing with their schools for the training of the young, houses of refuge for the unfortunate, and hospitals for the sick of all nations, and even many that profess no religion at all or disbelieve in that of the Catholic church hav great respect for them on account of their charities.

In their daily walks of life their religion does not trouble them if they see proper to gamble, drink to an excess, go to the horserace on Sunday, or do any other act which is a sin in the eyes of others. Their spiritual advisers can absolve them from all sin, although in South America such actions as the above are generally recognized as having in them no sin that calls for the aid of the priest or pricks in the least a Catholic conscience.

A few women, and occasionally a man, attend mass and confession regularly. On saints' days of grand display of pomp, glitter, and fireworks the attendance is larger; but the general indifference and apathy on these subjects among the masses I should think would be alarming to Rome, for among these baptized Catholics there is a large per cent that totally disbelieve in the signs and symbols of the church.

The Protestants reap nothing from this, for those who leave Rome approach no nearer to the borders of their belief, but on the contrary go out into Materialism, and the number of these to-day in South America count up into the millions, but so little interest is taken in these subjects that you seldom hear them discussed, yet a direct reference brings a ready response that they are disbelievers.

The last ten years hav brought to the surface the question of government aid to the established church, which has invariably ended in the total severance of church and state, and many even going further, and decreeing that marriages are illegal without the sanction of civil authority. This was a deep stab to the powers of Rome, and disbelief is at the bottom of it all.

From the census of the state of Rio de Janeiro for the year 1892 I take the following figures: Foreign inhabitants, five and three-tenths per cent; twenty per cent of total is school population; all males between seven and fourteen years and females between seven and twelve, inclusiv, are reckoned in the school population; only eighteen per cent of this twenty per cent attend, or three and six-tenths of total population. This is only one state, but for all Brazil the per cent is two and three-tenths of total.

Four persons (two couples) are married yearly for each one thousand inhabitants; sixty-five per cent of the population is unmarried; thirty-two per cent married, and three per cent widowed. (France has fifty-two per cent unmarried, and thirty-nine per cent married.) Seventy-eight out of every one hundred cannot read or write, and ninety-nine per cent are Catholics (nominally).

The men are some two per cent in excess of the women, and the children of illegitimate birth are thirty per cent of total. J. Ross.

At the Front.

On February 7th I began a journey to the Atlantic coast and my first stopping-place was Murray, Ia, a village of five hundred inhabitants. I was to open the way here for Freethought, among people who had never heard an Infidel lecture and who possessed all sorts of forebodings as to what both the lecture and the lecturer would be. Mr. J. S. Banker made the arrangements, and through the kindness of Mr. Decker, who owns the Opera House, we were enabled to hav a hall. The Christians were taken by surprise. The Methodist preacher inquired of all he met, "Who invited this vile Infidel to come here?" My first lecture was given to a full house. No opposition was offered. But the next day the whole town was in an uproar. Although there are three churches, there is but one resident preacher; so the first step was to call in the outside ministers The Methodist sky-pilot, Rev. Mr. Matheny, walked over town the entire day inviting all to go to church, and by evening every church was fired up and lighted. Some said that I ought to be rotten-egged; others that I ought to be ridden on a rail; and, to hear some talk, I was already hung and quartered. Christians are too cowardly to carry their threats into execution. They are prevented from doing so, not by fear of hell, but fear of the jail and the penitentiary.

As on the second night I had three churches to contend against, my audience was not as large as on the previous one. I do not think there are a dozen Liberals in Murray, and the first evening my audience was composed of just the people I wanted —Christians. Everybody was discussing the substance of the lectures and the Christians said something about a debate in the future I told them that I was ready and to bring on their David at any time.

I enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. J. A. Wick, a veteran Freethinker. Mr. and Mrs. R. Jones came up from Osceola. My thanks are due to Messrs. Wick and Banker, who, standing alone in a den of bigotry, bravely hold to the sky the banner of Freethought and progress.

On the morning of February 9th I left Murray for Ottumwa, where Colonel Ingersoll was to lecture in the evening. I had never heard or seen our great champion and no opportunity could be better. The most enjoyable hour of my life was spent with the colonel in his room at the Ballingall Hotel. While there a reporter came up to interview him on the great questions of the day—political and religious. I do not remember one-half of the witty and eloquent words that were spoken while I was in his presence, but I felt that I was in the company of the greatest man now living—a great man in every sense of the word. In reply to a remark I made to him about the discussions he had and the innumerable challenges he receives he said that whenever the churches will unite on a man and indorse him as their representativ he will be ready to meet him, but that he will pay no attention to the little "fly-up-the-creek" parsons who seek a discussion with him to bring themselvs into notoriety. The lecture of the evening was on "Shakspere," and for nearly two hours the audience was charmed by Colonel Ingersoll's eloquent interpretation of the great dramatist. To hear this lecture is to understand Shakspere better, for he has not a more devout student and loving admirer than Ingersoll.

Saturday morning found me in Chicago, and the first friend I greeted there was Geo. Robertson. Soon I saw Mr. Reichwald, and finally Putnam, whom the labor of writing a history of Freethought seems to hav no effect upon, for he is as robust and jolly as ever. Saturday afternoon we called upon Mrs. Freeman, whom illness has prevented from attending the Secular Union's meetings for several weeks. On Sunday morning, accompanied by Mr. Reichwald, we went to hear Professor Mangasarian lecture upon Thomas Paine.

On Sunday evening I lectured before the Secular Union. The hall was full, and a short discussion followed the lecture. The Union seems to be regaining its old prestige. It appointed a committee to call upon the editor of the Times, which journal has been giving false and vituperativ reports of the meetings, written by some bigoted reporter. The editor apologized and said that the thing would not occur again.

The Salvation Army had a trial of the devil at their barracks on last Friday night, and the well-known Freethinker, Jehu Barr, appeared as a witness in his Satanic majesty's defense. The Herald published a report of the trial which was very amusing.

While in Chicago I was the guest of Mr. E. C. Reichwald, the energetic treasurer of the Federation, whose kindness I will not soon forget.

Looking Backward—A Bit of History Reviewed.

During the year 1887, when the McGlynn affair was at its hight, the Catholic Herald of this city published several articles which spoke approvingly of Dr. McGlynn and supported his views. This evidently touched the archbishop in a tender spot, for he immediately proceeded to use his ecclesiastical power to intimidate the publisher. To effect this he wrote the following letter, which, from an ordinary citizen, would be punishable with imprisonment:

452 Madison Ave., New York, Apr. 13, 1887.

To the Editors and Proprietors of the Catholic Herald, Gentlemen: By this note, which is entirely private, and not to be published, I wish to call your attention to the fact that the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore, following the leadership of Pope Leo XIII., has pointed out the duties of the Catholic press, and denounced the abuses of which journals, styling themselvs Catholic, are sometimes guilty. That paper alone, says the council decree (No. 228), is to be regarded as Catholic that is prepared to submit in all things to ecclesiastical authority.

It warns all Catholic writers against presuming to attack publicly the manner in which a bishop rules his diocese.

For some time past the utterances of the Catholic Herald hav been shockingly scandalous. As this newspaper is published in this diocese, I hereby warn you that if you continue in this course of conduct, it will be at your peril.

I am, gentlemen, Yours truly,
M. A. Corrigan, Archbishop of New York.

After reading such a letter as the above, one is inclined to think that the Constitution of these United States, providing for and upholding the liberty of speech and of the press, is, after all, only a pleasant fiction, which existed alone in the brains of our heroic forefathers. The leopard cannot change his spots, nor can the pope's litter change their nature. The Corrigan of seven years ago is the Corrigan of to day; the threat made then holds good now; and were he able, the whole secular press would be muzzled, if not entirely suppressed. Men who speak as they think and write as they think hav ever found an enemy in the church of Rome. She has no use for truth seekers and truth tellers. The lies which she forged to shackle the thought of the Middle Ages would hold reason as tightly now, were it not for the freedom of speech and pen.

The Catholic church is not sleeping, and it is not harmless. It stands to-day a great and powerful menace to our institutions. It threatens everyone as Archbishop Corrigan threatened Daniel O. Laughlin, the publisher of the Catholic Herald, seven years ago. May he never hav us in his clutches, is all we ask. Lindsley Flavel Mines.

Churchly Purpose and Performance.

Josiah W. Leeds, the Quaker associate editor of the Christian Statesman, is making himself very officious in the attempt to bulldoze the news companies into refusing to handle papers which do not come up to the standard of stupidity favored by Mr. Leeds and his confreres. These people seem to think that truth is dangerous, and music and the drama they are sure also need a censorship. Such men and women as these are saved only by their comparativ obscurity from making themselvs as ridiculous as United States Senators hav done over the St. Gaudens medal. ∴ A Christian paper, attacking the cheap theater, says that it attracts those who cannot afford to attend the higher priced ones. It adds: "And there is not much difference between them, after all, in the effects upon the morals of their patrons." This last reveals the real grievance of the church. It hates the theater because the theater is a rival teacher and entertainer. But the time is coming when it will claim all there is good in the work of the theater as its own. Only recently a clergyman declared that the theater was the offspring of the church. ∴ Rev. H. H. George, representing the National Reform Association at Washington, has been informed of a man who will be one of fifty to giv $500 each "to press the acknowledgment of God upon the nation." Mr. George says that $1,000 is wanted at once for "the special work in Washington." There are not less than eight or ten most important questions, such as a National Sabbath law, a uniform marriage and divorce law, the Honduras Lotterv scheme. the sixteenth amendment on the school question, and above all the Christian amendment to the Constitution. These, and others besides that should be pressed before Congress at once, and hav summoned all the influence, and weight, and worth of the Christian sentiment of the country to back them up. ∴ "Christian people are called upon, more loudly to-day than ever before, to speak out, and demand that the law of God be applied to the settlement of the questions so vital to the safety and welfare of our country." "And above all the Christian amendment." Does Mr. George speak unadvisedly? No. Congressman Morse of Massachusetts already has before the House judiciary committee an amendment to the federal Constitution providing for the recognition of God. The mine is ready to be sprung. What are Freethinkers ready to do? ∴ Rev. Mr. George, National Reform agent at Washington, calls loudly for petitions to be sent to the Senate against the admission as states of Utah, New Mexico, and Arizona If these Reform meddlers display their usual dexterity in manipulating "petitions," they will hav twenty million names before the St. Gaudens Senate in a month. ∴ The police at Rome hav discovered a grand swindle perpetrated by some very devout French Catholics of high rank, prominent among whom is the widow of the late Marshal Saint Arnaud. Circulars were distributed in all countries calling for contributions to the "Holy Father," whom the Freemasons kept chained and lying upon straw in a deep cellar of the Vatican. The money was wanted to procure the Pope's liberty, and bring him in safety to France. Quite a number of pious suckers did bite, among them the French bishops Chai and Glenard each gave twenty thousand lires. To those who said that the Pope was all right, it was answered that it was a sham pope (a devil in Leo's person), who occupied the papal chair, and made a fool of men like Chauncy Depew. The Countess Arnaud had in her house a fine altar surmounted by a hollow madonna statue, whose inhabitant, a girl, spoke to the pious visitors and made them put up their cash. "What fools these mortals be!"

THE SUNDAY STRUGGLE.

Sunday closing recently reported from Terre Haute, Ind. ∴ The Holyoke paper mills will hereafter be closed on Sunday. ∴ The new city council of Toronto is opposed to the resubmission of the Sunday car question the coming summer. Of course nothing better could be expected in that city under existing conditions ∴ Almost $2,000 was paid into the Pennsylvania treasury last year as fines for violation of the Sunday laws. How much longer will a self-vaunted free people permit this stealing to continue? ∴ On January 14th all the ministers of St. Louis preached on "the observance of the Lord's day in secular matters." ∴ The Philadelphia fetich-worshipers are trying to secure the enforcement of the Sunday law of 1794 in that city. Of course the priests are pushing the movement.

Freethought Federation of America.

HEADQUARTERS: 165 South Water street, Chicago.

S. P. PUTNAM, President.

JOHN R. CHARLESWORTH, Sec.; E. C. REICHWALD, Treas.

Vice-Presidents:

Franklin Steiner, N. F. Griswold, B. A. Roloson, J. M. Peck, I. J. Porter.

OBJECTS OF FEDERATION:

Keep church and state forever separate.—Grant.

In no sense whatsoever is this government founded upon the Christian religion.—Washington.

It is wicked and tyrannical to compel any man to support a religion in which he does not believe.—Jefferson.

The divorce between church and state should be absolute.—Garfield.

A religion that depends on the state for its support, is for that reason a bad religion.—Franklin.

Religion and the manner of discharging it can be directed only by reason and conviction and not by force or violence.—Madison.

To the Friends and Members of the Freethought Federation of America:

The present dangerous attitude of the Christian church requires immediate and energetic action on the part of Freethinkers. We must meet them in the halls of Congress where they are pushing forward the "God-in-the-Constitution Amendment." I shall be at Washington, March 6th, without fail, to speak before the judiciary committee. I expect to hav a host of clergymen to contend against. But besides the contest before the committee the agitation must be extended throughout the country. The ecclesiastical party are scattering broadcast their pamphlets. We must do the same. I propose at once to publish and distribute by the thousand my lecture delivered before the International Congress, "The Rights of Man." This lecture shows the dangers which are before us and the work which we must do. We must enlighten the people in regard to our platform. They do not understand it. They do not know that the principles of our Constitution are daily violated. Freethinkers do not realize it themselvs. They let things drift. We cannot afford to do this any longer. The issue is now forced upon us. The church has taken a tremendously aggressiv step; and the church is determined to succeed; this is no child's play on its part. It is the logic of its very existence; the spirit that for ages has animated it, and which will not die out; the struggle before us is one of the greatest in human history: the results will be of incalculable importance. We must hav funds to push our work, and I hope that every Liberal will do what he can. We must hav money for the campaign at Washington. The church has its agents there all the time. We must publish "The Rights of Man," and send that forth as widely as possible.

Send all contributions to E. C. Reichwald, 165 South Water street, Chicago. Hereafter all contributions to the treasury will be published weekly in THE TRUTH SEEKER, so that every donor to the fund can see that his money is paid in, and what it is used for. Now is the time for action.

News and Notes.

It might hav been advertised "standing room only" at the hall of the Chicago Secular Union on Sunday night, February 18th. It shows that there are some live Liberals in Chicago, and that the radical element is bound to survive and, more than survive, to be a progressiv force. The pioneers always hav to bear the brunt of the battle; and so it is with the Chicago Secular Union—the only organization in Chicago squarely committed to the Demands of Liberalism. There are Liberal organizations, more or less Freethought, labor, and reform organizations, and Liberal churches, where orthodoxy is so diluted that you can scarcely catch a flavor of it; but the Secular Union is the only one entirely at the front.

After the lecture, the subject of which was "Liberalism and Christianity," there was quite a discussion. There is a Rev. Mr. Morgan, who comes every Sunday, and who poses as a Christian; but, as he rejects most of the Christian doctrins, it is pretty hard to tell exactly what he does believe. He dwells in a cloud of metaphysics and sentimental imaginations. He loves Jesus and thinks the Golden Rule is the supreme thing, and his criticism generally ends in an exhortation. On the whole he liked the lecture, and what I defined as Liberalism he called Christianity, a confusion of terms which is quite common. As I remarked in my lecture, the most important thing in the world to-day is definitions. What do words really mean?

Van Orman, my old army comrade, a devout Anarchist, but of the mild, philosophical sort who reason, but do not fling bombs, said that I did not get at the real Jesus, who was not so much a churchman as a social reformer, and in that respect worthy somewhat of admiration. I replied that in discussing Christianity we must take the Jesus of Christianity, and the Jesus of Christianity is the Jesus of the gospels exactly as they are. The Christian has no right to any other Jesus. To change the gospels in any respect is to dissolve the foundations of the Christian church. It sinks into the quicksands at once. It is all nonsense to talk about the "real Jesus," for there is no real Jesus, as Mr. Betts showed by some extracts from church history. There is no valid record of the existence of a Jesus. And then, as Stuart Beattie said, if you do find him, what's the use? He can't teach us anything. We are away ahead of him, and know a thousand things that he never thought of. But it is manifest that whoever Jesus was, he was not a Christian; for no one could be a Christian until Christianity came into existence, and Christianity was not in existence until years after the death of Jesus. So it is unhistoric to talk of the "Christianity" of Jesus. Jesus hadn't any. But the point is this—the Christian religion is founded upon the Jesus of the gospels, and therefore the Christian religion must hold to what this Jesus says. And if the Jesus of the gospels says, "He that believeth will be saved, and he that believeth not will be damned," then the churches are bound to affirm that saying. It is their creed, no matter whether the "real Jesus" ever said it or not. The "Jesus" of the gospel record did say it, and that is the "Jesus" that the churches must stand by, and it is that "Jesus" who makes their creed.

Mr. Beattie pointed out the great danger that now threatens from the Romish church. Almost all the city officers of Chicago are Catholics. They make a combination that is hard to beat.

Mrs. Sarah E. Ames pointed out a sharp distinction between the Christian and the Liberal in that the one accepted the Bible as of divine authority and the other did not. He who believes a statement merely because it is in the Bible cannot in the very nature of things be a Freethinker.

Mr. Barr, the "devil's defender," put in some few suggestions as to the cruel teachings of Jesus. The Salvation Army recently undertook to try his Satanic majesty. Barr took the witness stand for the defendant. The prosecuting attorney inquired if Mr. Barr had any personal knowledge of the devil. The witness said "No."

"Where do you get your information?" was the next query.

"From the Bible," said Barr.

"But we can't allow such testimony," said the attorney.

"Why not?" said Barr. "You use the Bible against the devil. It's only fair to use the same witness in favor of the devil."

The judge thought so, too. But the devil was convicted nevertheless.

Barr has moved for a new trial.

I lecture next Sunday again on the vital questions of "Liberty and Authority."

The ever-encroaching union of church and state is seen in the following. It crops out even in the tariff question. The churches want free trade in everything that is for the use, benefit, and glory of the church.

The ecclesiastics want exemption from duty on stained or painted glass and works of art when imported for the use of a church. Cardinal Gibbons has interested himself in this matter, and the representativs of various church associations hav joined in the petition.

On this matter the Chicago Times well says:

The frequent exemptions granted to religious organizations in our tax laws, both national and local, are illogical and giv the lie to the basic theory of independence of church and state, which is part of our national code. Under the immunity granted to religious, educational, literary, and philosophical societies a horde of abuses can spring up.

If congress will be logical it will either tax stained glass, regardless of the purpose for which it is imported, or admit it free altogether.

This is a point on which the work of the Federation can come in. If we hav a tariff, let it be impartial

The Young Men's Christian Association for the past few years has been up to the usual orthodox dodge. The association has a large, valuable building which it rents for business purposes, and for the use of its tenants has been stealing the city water. It has just been discovered, and now they must pay tax to the amount of several hundred dollars a year. When the Christian property is not exempted by law, then stealing is resorted to. Wouldn't that make fine baptismal water?—holy water, indeed, stolen from the taxpayers of Chicago.

Mrs. Myra Bradwell, of this city, has recently died. She was editor of Legal News, which has a national reputation. For years she fought to hav her legal personality recognized, which the courts declared was lost in the fact of her marriage. This was in 1869, and was Christian legislation as to the rights of women. Since then she has been admitted to practice in every court in the United States. This is a victory for Freethought. It seems strange that less than thirty years ago woman was debarred from a profession for which she was amply qualified and passed the highest examination, simply because she was a woman. The church law prevailed in this republic until then. The destiny of woman was marriage, said the court, and therefore she can not practice law. The head of the wife is the husband, even though he be a fool and she a genius. But brains hav won, and St. Paul is now laid upon the shelf.

S. P. P.

Observations.

"A highly esteemed friend in New Orleans," remarks the New York Sun, "asks us if we hav observed the fact that Senator White, of Louisiana, is the first Roman Catholic ever appointed to the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States. Our friend is mistaken. Chief Justice Roger Brooke Taney, who presided over the Supreme Court for nearly thirty years, was a Roman Catholic."

Mr. Taney was eminent otherwise than as a Roman Catholic. He is the distinguished blunderbuss who emitted the opinion that the colored race has no rights which white men are bound to respect.

We are often caused to wonder
By the lightning and the thunder,
Which phenomena do faze us by their majesty and might;
But at present it's the twitter
Of another feller-critter
That's permitted to amaze us, beating nature out of sight.

It is Roscoe o'er the river,
Who is posing as the giver
Of intelligence supernal on the subject of finance,
With the casual injection,
Touching tariff and protection,
That the notions of our Colonel are rejected at a glance.

Mr. Peck lacks information;
Putnam causes lamentation,
Says this Prophet of Gowanus, in their economic role;
While the man of witticism,
In the higher criticism
Makes exposure of his manners, like a monkey on a pole.

But the Prophet of Gowanus,
Who has chosen so to scan us,
Better quit the sort of meanness and retire into his hole;
It's a quite improper caper
For to write into the paper
And insinuate a Genius is a monkey on a pole.

Some time last year a sempstress named Emma Goldmann addressed an audience of laboring people in New York. It was evidently a hungry audience, for Miss Goldmann talked on the subject of bread. Her theory, as she developed it, was that since labor is employed in the manufacture of bread, from the farmer in the field to the baker in the hot cellar molding his sweat into his doughy product, therefore laborers hav a right to eat it; and she said to her hearers, "Ask for work; if they do not giv you work, ask for bread; if they do not giv you work or bread, then take bread." This system is not original with Miss Goldmann. Some time before, Cardinal Manning, a distinguished prelate of the Christian church, had written in the Fortnightly Review: "Necessity knows no law, and a starving man has a natural right to his neighbor's bread;" and the lady orator, being struck with the force of the remark, conceived that the present would be an appropriate occasion to repeat it. But Miss Goldmann overlooked the difference between her position and that of the cardinal. She failed to recognize the difference between the extent of liberty accorded the subjects of an effete monarchy like England and that granted in this free republic. She did not know that in England liberty is the prerogativ of clergymen, while in America it is enjoyed by an Irish constabulary, and finds its exercise in clubbing citizens who speak with a German accent. She was also blind to the distinction between Cardinal Manning, who, like the praying man, meant no good, and herself, who, like the blasphemous person, meant no harm, These were fatal oversights. She spoke the words quoted, and disaster followed. Our "institootions" were undermined, the earth was rent, the firmament cracked, and several policemen within the sound of her voice were immediately sobered. Confidence was restored by sending Miss Goldmann to jail.

The circumstances of the foregoing crisis are recalled by the receipt of a pamphlet containing a defense of Miss Goldmann by Voltairine de Cleyre. Voltairine does not repeat Emma's and the cardinal's sentiments, not because she has any respect for legal authorities, but because she does not think the advice is good. She is none the less severe, though, upon the exploiters of industry, and intimates that were she Emma and Emma Voltairine, there would be a Voltairine would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue in every wound of Labor's, that should move the stones of Rome to rise and mutiny.

The Defense is published in a five-cent pamphlet and Miss de Cleyre's address is 3515 Wallace street, Philadelphia.

The priestless funeral, which causes so much comment in localities where clergymen hav enjoyed a long and undisturbed monopoly of the last sad rites, does not excite any wonder in the rural precincts of the new Northwest. I hav even known people to be buried there without any ceremonies at all, for the reason that no one but a minister could be found to officiate; and only the ministers protested.

Near the little village of Edmonds, in Snohomish county, Washington, the funeral of a wife occurred not long ago that would hav had something humorous in it except for the respect in which she and her husband were held. An aged couple of the name of Plato lived there. They were both unbelievers and did not attempt to conceal it. The town had two rival church organizations—Congregational and Episcopal, the members of the one being known as "Congregationals" and of the other as "Episcopals." Both the pastors were tenderfeet, but the Congregational proved himself the best rustler and the balance of trade in marrying and burying came his way. The Episcopal said much and sawed the air, but he had no calls outside the pulpit. When Mrs. Plato neared her end the Congregational minister offered to pray at her bedside, but his services were declined on grounds of unbelief in their utility. For the same reason his proffer of a funeral sermon was not accepted. The Episcopal minister, learning that his rival would not officiate, and not knowing why, thought it a good opportunity for himself to show what he could do on such occasions, and resolved to improve it. Those acquainted with Mr. Plato's mental attitude toward religion said nothing, preferring to let matters take their natural course.

Meanwhile, Mr. Plato made arrangements with a neighbor to read a service from "The Truth Seeker Collection" or some other book of secular forms, and went seriously about the work of setting his house in order for the funeral. The place was at some distance from the clergyman's residence, but with his surplice and prayer-book in a satchel, he arrived there before the services began. Members of his flock were present to witness his triumph. The Congregationals were on hand, as they admitted, to see the fun. The husband, busied with the preparations, had not observed the clergyman's arrival. Everything was ready. The neighbor had cleared his throat for the reading of his part, and the hush that always attends such events had fallen upon the assemblage, when the Episcopal priest emerged from an adjoining room, "frock on and book in hand," as a relator described him. The Episcopals present looked jubilant, and the Congregationals gazed at one another and winked. But old man Plato soon attracted their notice. He was equal to the demands of the occasion. When the minister had reached the head of the coffin, the widower got up and faced him, running his keen old eye up and down the clerical garment, and then bringing it to bear on the preacher's face. When he had completed his scrutiny, he remarked, "Who be ye?" The minister was plainly and painfully surprised, but he found tongue to explain in a confidential whisper that he was a clergyman. "What's them togs ye hav on?" continued the old man. "A surplice," replied the other, and opened his book. "But say," interrupted the bereaved one, "be you a-runnin' this 'ere funeral?" The minister said he supposed so. "Well, I don't," said Plato; "I don't suppose anything of the kind. 'Twon't do. The old lady wouldn't hav it. I don't know who sent for ye, mister; I know I didn't, and I'm damned sure I don't want ye nor yer book, nor any of yer wawa. Young man, if ye intend to be present on this solemn occasion, ye'd better roll that surplus and set down amongst the congergation."

The clergyman could not say a word. He snapped his book shut, "jerked" his robe, as the removing of a garment is sometimes described; jammed both of them into his satchel, and hit the trail away from that house as though bears were after him. The widower's visage relaxed as he watched the intruder out of the clearing; then he smoothed his face back to its former condition of rigid solemnity, resumed his seat as chief mourner, and nodded to the neighbor to go on with the reading. And so the simple services proceeded.

Anyone with a keen perception for the humorous might smile at reading a description of this funeral; but I am told by a person who was present that no levity was exhibited, and that a more sedate procession was never seen than this which followed old lady Plato's remains to their grave in the woods.

A Western contemporary published in a district which last winter sustained an epidemic of smallpox, and which is now in the febrile stage of a religious revival, soliloquizes thus:

To think that the result of two long years of labor by George E. Macdonald in the cause of "intellectual emancipation" has been undone in two short weeks.

I think it took about the same length of time for variola to put the community under quarantine. Nevertheless, there are signs of returning health, for the same contemporary makes this rather stimulating remark: "Evangelist Cairns says that a wise Infidel keeps his mouth shut. What a wide difference there is between a wise Infidel and a wise evangelist!"

Ex-Mayor Hewitt of New York was at a banquet of the Southern Club given in this city on Washington's birthday, and being permitted to speak showed his appreciation of that privilege by calling the Southern statesmen fools. "I know your Southerners in Washington," he said, "and I know them to be ignorant. That is the only word that fits; blank, crass ignorance. Almost in a solid body, with a few honorable exceptions, they gave their votes to the Silver bill. That is the work of your South of to-day. That is the Southern statesmanship at the end of the nineteenth century. That is ignorance; that's what it is, ignorance, that goes forward with the dangerous strength of its own convictions. There is no fool like the fool who rushes in where angels fear to tread." He spoke of Calhoun and Clay and Benton and others as statesmen after whom the more modern representativs and senators should pattern, which might hav been improving advice if some of the Southerners had not hastened to point out that these great characters were silver men like themselvs. In fact, they go further and tell him that no great statesman has ever put himself on record against silver. Mr. Hewitt's grudge against Southerners dates back to the time when he was a member of Congress and some of them refused to vote for free pig-iron, off which Mr. Hewitt, who is an iron manufacturer, desired to hav the duty lifted in order that he might compete with Carnegie, whose factories are located nearer the source of the nativ product. The temper of some Northern and Eastern gentlemen indicates that if the whites of the South had been the slaves, there would not hav been much enthusiasm hereabouts for their emancipation.

GEO. E. MACDONALD.

Talmage, Don't Go!

Dear Talmage, don't desert the church,
And leave the trustees in the lurch;
For should the pastor go away,
The sheep forlorn would go astray
And mingle with the sinful crowd,
And then Old Nick would cry aloud—
While o'er that pile his eyes he cast—
"Ah, ah! the game's played out at last."
Should you go away 'twould pain us,
For who beside could entertain us,
With such bathos, flights, and kicks,
And lots of other funny tricks?
But shall—for want of sordid cash—
Our Tabernacle go to smash,
Amid the giant's organ's groans,
And the blushing holy stones,
Brought from famed Mount Sinai,
Where sacred thunders rent the sky,
While sullen walls look down in gloom
As conscious of impending doom?
And as if by demons sent
A hand writes "Twenty-three Per Cent!"
Oh, shall our sacred temple sink—
Be turned into a skating rink?—
A hippodrome—a concert hall—
A stock exchange, or, worse than all,
A rendezvous for city knaves
Called politicians, and their slaves;
A boxing ring, or, who can tell?
It may become a gambling hell—
A Brooklyn Monte Carlo—where
All hell might meet in conclave there;
Or perhaps a wild beast show;
O dear De Witt, pray do not go.
Tal' winked, then whispered low, "Don't fret,
I play this dodge to raise that debt;
I've tried the bold bluff game before,
Perhaps the trick may work once more;
If so, why then we'll happy be,
And sing the old Doxology."

The Vaccination Question.

509 E. Locust street, DES MOINES, IA., Feb. 15, 1894.

The state board of health has ordered compulsory vaccination here, and a large number of our best Freethinkers are entirely opposed to it, and we want your grand paper to turn on its modern searchlight of investigation, giving your views of it. We think it is useless and dangerous. What do you think of it? We hope you will giv it hell.

W. CALDBECK.

For documents treating of vaccination we respectfully refer our correspondent to Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 120 Lexington avenue, New York City, and to Colby & Rich, 9 Bosworth street, Boston, Mass. They are fully in accord with the views of Mr. Caldbeck. We should be glad to canvass many other reform questions, but our Freethought and religious liberty specialties fill our pages to overflowing.

Lectures and Meetings.

S. P. PUTNAM has given up his lecture appointments at Toronto in order to be at Washington March 6th.

JOHN E. REMSBURG will speak for the Manhattan Liberal Club, Friday evening, March 2d. Sunday afternoon Mr. Remsburg lectures on "Bible Morals," at the Newark Liberal League, 177 Halsey street, Newark, N. J.

THE Milwaukee Liberal Club meets at Severance Hall, 421 Milwaukee street, every Sunday at 7.30 P.M.

THE Radical Library meets in Skerrett's Hall, Ridge avenue and Green street, Philadelphia. Open on Tuesday, 7.30 to 10 P.M.

THE Pittsburg Secular Society meets in Curry University Hall, Sixth street, near Penn avenue, every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

THE Ohio Liberal Society meets in College Hall, 168½ Walnut street, Cincinnati, Sunday evenings at 7:45, prompt. Admission is free.

THE WOMEN'S LIBERAL LEAGUE, of Philadelphia, meets in the Skerrett Building, Ridge avenue and Green street, Tuesday evenings at 8 o'clock. Admission free. All are welcome.

THE First Secular Church of Portland, Ore., meets in Central Labor Council Hall, 170½ Second street near Yamhill, every Sunday at 7.30 P. M. Katie Kehm Smith, lecturer. Sunday-school in same place at 12:30 P.M.

PROF. W. F. JAMIESON lectured at Illinois Hall, Los Angeles, Cal., recently. The large hall was well filled with attentiv listeners. The lecture lasted for about two hours and was warmly applauded. Mr. Jamieson sends us the good news that Dr. J. E. Clark, who has just opened a Freethought bookstore in Los Angeles, will hav THE TRUTH SEEKER constantly on hand, and will doubtless sell many copies every week.

THE Brooklyn Philosophical Association holds meetings every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in Long Island Business College, South Eighth street, between Bedford and Driggs avenues. Program of lectures for March:

March 4th—"The Future Civilization," Jas. A. Skilton.
March 11th—"Locomotion as Related to Life and Survival," Dr. M. L. Holbrook.
March 18th—"A Sermon to Liberals on Religion and Church," Dr. J. H. Duren Ward.
March 25th—"Moral Philosophy," Henry Rowley.

FRANKLIN STEINER'S lecture engagements are as follows:

Mar.	4, Philadelphia, Pa.	Mar.	25, Newark, N. J.
"	8, Norwalk, Conn.	April	1, Alliance, O.
"	9, Meriden, Conn.	"	3-6, Eaton, O.
"	11, Boston, Mass.	"	8, Dayton, O.
"	12, 13, Harwich, Mass.	"	8, Cincinnati. O.
"	14, Cotuit, Mass.	"	9, New Ross, Ind.
"	15, Osterville, Mass.	"	10, 11, West Point, Ind
"	18, Boston, Mass.	"	13, 14, Toledo, O.
"	21-23, Northport. N.Y.	"	15, Detroit, Mich.

Mr. Steiner has some open dates for his return trip. Address him in care of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

J. E. REMSBURG'S appointments for March are as follows:

Mar.	2, New York City.	Mar.	13, Marietta, O.
"	3. Northport, N. Y.	"	14, Alliance, O.
"	4, Newark. N. J.	"	15, Canton. O.

"	11, Zelienople, Pa.	"	22, Jerseyville, Ill.
"	11, Butler, Pa.	"	13, Union, Mo.
"	12, Bellaire, O.

THE Brooklyn Philosophical Association last Sunday had the pleasure of listening to Franklin Steiner on "Morality Without Christianity." It was an able lecture and the audience were very attentiv throughout, and showed their appreciation by frequent applause. It was an attempt to show that Christian morality is to-day inadequate, and that a morality founded on Secular principles, resulting from observation and experience, and conforming to natural laws, would be all that could be desired in place of Christian morality.

The many admirers of Mr. Otto Wettstein's writings, which are of the unsophisticated materialistic variety, will be glad to learn that his Congress address on the "Giant Delusion" is now obtainable as a pamphlet for 10 cents.

Letters of Friends.

Has a Big Thing for Only $3.50.

HARRISBURG, PA., Feb. 12, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I received the book, "Old Testament Stories," and I consider I hav a big thing—THE TRUTH SEEKER and book all for $3.50. You will oblige me by sending sample copies of the paper to the names inclosed. J. L. KNOX.

Freethought on the Boom at Delphos.

DELPHOS, O , Feb. 9, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose two money orders for $4 each, $8 in all, to pay the subscription for new subscribers to the paper for one year each.

Freethought is on the boom here. Charlesworth, Putnam, and Remsburg hav been here and Steiner will be here next week.

Vive la TRUTH SEEKER!

B. A. ROLOSON.

A Very Welcome Billet Doux.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., Feb. 14, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Here is another love letter for you to the tune of $7, for which please renew my subscription and send your good paper to two more new subscribers. This makes six within six weeks, but if I had the time and a little money to spare I would increase the number to six times six within the next six months. Under constraining circumstances, I am doing the best I can, and hope to send some more recruits later on. ERWIN AUFFURTH.

A Note from Heston.

MORRISTOWN, TENN., Feb. 10, 1894.

LIBERAL FRIENDS: Some of you will be surprised that I should leave the sunny clime, Sunday freedom, and Liberal associates of Southern California for old East Tennessee, with its Sabbatarian tyranny, sloth, and religious bigotry, but I am here because I can add a few shekels to my income and thus get out of debt sooner. I shall remain here twelve months or perhaps longer, and may settle down here permanently provided I can endure the puritanical piety and hypocrisy of the people. This would be a delightful country to liv in if the people had the thrift, energy, and mental freedom of the North or West. Yours for Freethought and the destruction of Christianity. WATSON HESTON.

Successful in Spite of Priests.

MURRAY, IA., Feb. 14, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Franklin Steiner delivered two lectures in our city February 7th and 8th to a reasonably well-filled house, considering the amount of opposition and prejudice engendered by some of our light-weight priests. When the people saw this young and courageous man, the very image of perfection in mental and physical endowments; when they heard him speak with every sentence filled with sparkling gems of truth; with every thought landing one step higher in the scale of human reason and morality; when they saw that nobility in man was his highest ambition; that liberty and truth are our friends and reason our guide—it was then that those priests, seeing the sky cleared by the sunshine of truth, received a just reprimand. Mr. Steiner made a very good impression upon most thoughtful people, which will in time ripen into a benefit to our fellow-man.

J. S. BANKER.

An Editor with a Mind of His Own.

PORT ANGELES, WASH., Feb. 17, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Thinking some of our friends would like to hear from Port Angeles again, I write a few lines. The snow has been only about four inches deep this winter, and then it remained only three days. The ground is covered with growing grass, and the weather is almost like summer. The Liberals are not doing very much for Liberalism here at present, as they hav about all they can do to make their living; many of them ask me to giv them copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I always giv mine away as soon as I hav read it. There is a newspaper here—the People—that is brushing away the cobwebs of superstition. The editor's name is E. M. Bohall. He has been rebuked by some of his subscribers for the reckless way in which he asks questions in his paper about our heavenly father, where he is, and what he is doing to help his children. Sometimes he defends himself by quoting a lot of scripture and then asking them how they like their own medicin; but last week he replied to one by saying, "If you hav any kick to make against this paper, just wait until the next issue, and see what you get and do your kicking then." I will send you some of the contents of the issue mentioned.

Yours for truth and justice,

FRANK MORSE.

Wholly Sarcastic.

WORCESTER, MASS., Feb. 3, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Since my first attempt at literary work was favored with an excellent editorial from your pen, I think a small contribution on my part will not be out of place, therefore I inclose $1 with this missiv.

Not being able to lay claim to all knowledge, is it so surprising that the question should be raised by me whether it was possible to demonstrate that there is no overruling power? And since I did not see THE TRUTH SEEKER of last year and hav not read the pamphlet, "Design Argument Fallacies," it could not hav been an intentional slight to the "exhaustiv examination of the God theory," as furnished by the Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, but simply a reaching out for more light, and an expression of my ignorance on the subject, with a hope that the man who said he could prove there is no God would enlighten me and giv proof for his assertion. I hav not believed in the God of the Bible for ten years, but did not know that a process had been discovered whereby it is possible to prove the non-existence of a supreme being.

While there is no doubt that the belief in the God pictured in the Bible has caused more suffering than can be told, I am not out of the mist far enough at present to see how proving that death ends all will tend to make the world a better place to liv in; and, since you hav the proof wrapped up in pamphlets and sell them for fifteen cents each, I inclose $1 and ask you to send me a copy of the "Design Argument Fallacies" and such other books to the value of $1 as you think would most benefit one in my ignorant state and tend most to my edification.

J. A. FORSYTHE.

Man's Knowledge and Its Limitations.

FALMOUTH, N. S., Feb. 9, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Will you allow me to add a few words to what Mr. J. A. Forsythe has said in THE TRUTH SEEKER for February 3d? Concerning the existence or non-existence of a God, I will say nothing. The question is beyond my intellectual grasp, but I should like to express an opinion on the knowledge of man and the limitations thereto.

The chemist finds bounds set to his knowledge. He cannot explain why chemical affinity should exist in nature or why of all elements fluorin alone should refuse a union with oxygen. The geologist cannot tell why one species of rock should be found in one country and not in another. The botanist will trace the growth of the oak from embryo to the full-blown monarch of the forest, but the silent cause of these blind motions will ever remain a mystery to him. Who can tell us why consciousness should exist in one arrangement of organic atoms and not in another? Dip into whatever science you will, there is always one point beyond which the human mind cannot penetrate. Can the mortal understand the immortal or the finite comprehend the infinit?

A knowledge of the first cause of nature I conceive to be the climax of all learning. When this is fully understood, science may fold her arms, for there is nothing more to learn; but until then there is work to be done. There are superstitions to be uprooted, which is of more importance to us at the present day than the existence or non-existence of a deity.

Nevertheless, Mr. Connor has a proof which will satisfy all except fools or bigots. It must be a recent discovery, for Paine, Voltaire, Hume, and Gibbon were unconvinced, and I do not think they can be counted under either of the above titles.

In conversing with a Christian not long since, he made the remark that it wasn't well to be too certain about these things. I replied that I knew of no one quite as positiv as the apostle Paul, for he "knew and was persuaded that neither hight nor depth," nor board fences nor bulldogs, etc.; and I know and am persuaded that when any nineteenth century Infidel claims to know positivly that there is no God, he reduces himself to the level of the above-mentioned arch-hypocrit. For my own part, I would like to be certain that this religious bugbear does not exist. Also I would like to be certain that I was coming into a future some time; but one seems to be as doubtful as the other.

Yourself hav said that all gods stand or fall together; but I see no more reason for plunging into Atheism, because we hav shaken off the clutches of superstition than the American colonies had for plunging into anarchy when they had freed themselvs from the grasp of tyranny.

Still, I am open to conviction, as every true Infidel is, and will inclose stamps for "Design Argument Fallacies."

But, admitting for a moment the existence of a deity, I know of no stronger argument against the inspiration of so-called holy writ than the fact that it is in itself a libel on the character and majesty of God.

Yours for truth, W. P. LAWRENCE.

[Why is the Bible a "libel on the character and majesty of God?" Because it says that he committed or ordered the commission of atrocious crimes? But suppose you had never seen the Bible, and had read in other books of similar atrocious crimes committed by or at the command of a devil; would not such allegations just as certainly constitute a "libel on the character and majesty of" the devil? If not, why not? For, in the last analysis, what do you know of the character and majesty of either God or devil except what you learn by the observation and study of the works of this God or this devil? All the crimes—and millions more—laid at the door of God by the Bible are actually committed, and to them are to be added all the horrible convulsions of nature, all the torments of animal existence. An omnipotent God does or does not exist. If he exists, the Bible has not libeled him. The truth is never libelous. Puzzle our brains as we may with nice distinctions and metaphysical subtleties, we shall never find it possible to reconcile God's alleged omnipotence with his alleged goodness. The moral sense which impeaches the God of the Bible impeaches likewise the God of nature.—ED T. S.]

Ingersoll—Shakspere.

PEORIA, ILL., Feb. 6, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: The writer of this brief letter had the pleasure and honor of sitting for two hours at an intellectual feast in Peoria—"The Genius of Shakspere," by Col. R. G. Ingersoll, the greatest word-painter, I believe, in the world. "We hav met to-night to listen and to pay a tribute to the greatest genius the world has ever known, and both his father and mother lived on earth," was the starting-point, which was received with repeated applause.

The painter, the artist, the sculptor, the teacher, the philosopher, the doctor, the druggist, and even the preacher, listened to his eloquent lines with pleasure and benefit. He said that "Shakspere was the only intellectual spendthrift the world has ever known." He should hav said Shakspere was the intellectual spendthrift of his time, for sixty-one years ago another was born; Ingersoll began where Shakspere left off. His peroration was beautiful beyond description—hardly reached by imagination. He carried his twenty-five hundred listeners as it were up a picturesque mountain, strewn with flowers and intellectual gems, bedecked on either side by as fine paintings as were seen in the art bnilding at the World's Fair; step by step they ascended until they stood upon the topmost peak. Casting a backward glance, they beheld the picture, varied and beautiful, perfected by the eloquent touch of silver and gold. Bursting from this soft, fertil picture an artist could see the lily in all its purity, the rose in all its beauty, and love in all its sweetness (and those who looked backward are not pillars of salt).

Oh, for the time when every pulpit throughout the world shall be filled with such orators! How great would be the change. How beneficial to man! The poison of superstition that has saturated the brain of fear for ages would be transformed into paints of the rarest hue, and by retouching the dark and frowning daubs of fear that bow to stupidity they would stand erect, and, like the statues on the peristyle, out in bold relief, holding in either hand a search-light revealing in every land the Goddess of Liberty holding in her hand the torch of reason. This would be so fatal to the miraculous that those who hav for ages sought to rule by fear and blind faith would pull the dark curtain down to hide their deceptiv faces from view for a short time only; then they will come forth equipped with truth, bearing the torch of reason. Colonel Ingersoll is the intellectual search-light of the world, and it is gratifying to know that the good seed sown in good ground is bringing forth gems of thought in every land. Peace must reign; optimists and patriots must rule; justice must decide. Then pessimists and traitors will hide their ugly visages from the god of truth.

Yours truly, C. S. RANDOLPH.

A Few Samples of Evangelicism.

WATSONTOWN, PA., Feb. 9, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: It don't take a newspaperman long to become acquainted with the fact when a newsaper changes hands—that is, changes editorial management. Grit, of Williamsport, is a progressiv Sunday journal, but its present editor, Mr. Watson I believe, must be suffering from a hard dose of "love of God," if I may judge from the article in a recent number about the Williamsport woman cured of some disease or other by the use of a dose of the Evangelical religion. It is easy for me to see that my old friend Geo. W. Rienhard is no longer at the helm of that paper, which talks to over one hundred thousand people every week. He never would pollute the columns of that journal with such damnable trash and lies.

But this throws me into reminiscences. I know something about the Evangelical folks myself. Their religion generally cures or kills. One night several years ago I was sitting at my desk writing when I heard a noise outside. It sounded just as if some farmer's calf had got fast under a fence and was giving forth its doleful sounds. I opened the door and saw two men leading a fellow to his home. I asked a passer-by what was up, and he told me the man had been to the Evangelical church down the road and the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ was working in him. I thought if J. Christ was so severe with all his subjects I would not want to come under his personal notice, especially around the Evangelical woodpile. The next day I took the liberty to look after the man's personal character. I found that he had got an Evangelical preacher's daughter into trouble some time before. He married the girl, but her parents would not allow them to liv together. She died (in childbirth, I believe) and her parents had her cremated. The husband never knew of it, but when he found it out he went to Jesus with his trouble.

Just one more instance and I will stop talking on the subject of the Evangelical people. This week the following report is going the rounds of the press:

The master at Harrisburg has just completed his report in the Williamstown Evangelical church case. He decides that the Indianapolis conference was the lawful one. and that its findings and decision in the East Pennsylvania annual conference of 1891 are binding on the civil courts. This is considered a Bowman-Esher victory.

The above has reference to the church where the young man got his dose of religion. Two years ago the different factions of the church had a fight for the property. One faction had secured the church and a constable was placed within to watch it. The constable was decoyed away and members of the other faction entered with revolvers and shotguns and defended what they claimed as their property. Even the constable was afraid to enter, and had he attempted he would hav been shot.

Oh, this beautiful Evangelical religion beats hell a mile and seven-eighths.

An Infidel Editor.

Some Sane and Timely Words.

NEW YORK, N. Y., Feb. 21, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I was witness to a pathetic scene last Saturday night. The stage was the sidewalk in front of the Fifth Avenue Hotel on the Fifth avenue side, and was lighted by the glare of many electric lights. The principal scenery was the million dollar hotel. The principal actress was a poor old woman, with a placid, gentle face, a bowed form, and clad in a plain, mud-bespattered dress. She carried in her hands a small pasteboard box, in which were pieces of candy and a few trinkets. Men, comparativly overflowing with wealth and ease, as evidenced by silk hats, piccadilly shoes, canes and cigars, stood about on this stage, and looked with electiv eyes upon gaudy prostitutes as they passed up and down the street on review. Painted faces, flowing furs, and crowning plumes they could see far up and down the sidewalk, but for this helpless, innocent, and consequently unfortunate woman, they could not spare more than one fleeting glance. I handed her a small coin and at the same time another man was hunting about in his pockets for a coin small enough to giv her, to somewhat relieve his conscience. Together on the same stage, in every-day life, are wealth, poverty, and prosperous debauchery.

I had to wonder how many of those men professed to love God. Perhaps all, perhaps some, and, very improbably, none; but regardless of professions, they hav been unconsciously trained in their belief by the prevalent Christian sentiment. I wondered if ever such a scene was presented in a country overrun by the Mohammedan religion, or in China, where many souls are supposed to be going to perdition on account of the absence of the gospel of Jesus Christ. And then I thought how much we need to be taught to love man more and God less; not a hypocritical, pretentious love, but a genuin, self-sacrificing, heartfelt, and helpful regard for others. Contributions may temporarily relieve individual cases, but the point is, hav not we, as well as our forefathers, been following a wrong leadership, that scenes like this one are repeatedly coming before our eyes? Society has looked to the teachings of the church for guidance, but has not the church failed absolutely to make even its members moral, according to its own standard, and hav its teachings affected society in the manner it intends they should? Is not the church compelled to seek to do through civil legislation what its thousands of pulpits hav tried to do, but failed to accomplish by the teaching of dogma and precept? Is it not time that honesty and justice should be the standards of society, and not hypocrisy? Should not the young be taught to regard the Bible as what it really is and to seek the source of all reforms in human reason? Is there not something fundamentally wrong about our social and economical systems, when young men and young women, with normal bodies, are obliged to pass to advanced age, without being mated for life, one man to one woman, and a home-life established, instead of seeking each other on the streets in a sly manner, which, in in its very method, dulls the conscience? And is it not a worse evil still, as long as the earth yields us her products in abundance, for an aged woman to be on the streets begging from unresponding men to escape starvation? L. D. CRINE.

Paine Memorial.

CORVALLIS, OR., Feb. 6, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Paine's birthday was celebrated in Portland in the grandest style this year that I hav ever witnessed, and entirely by the home talent of the flourishing metropolis of our Oregon. It consisted of three grand lectures, one by a Spiritualist, one by our most worthy secretary, and one by our fourth vice-president. Each lecture seemed to be so grand and comprehensiv that it left nothing for the others to say. Then the literary exercises, consisting of the reading of poems composed especially for the occasion, interspersed with music, dialogs, singing, declamations, and regular theater plays taken from real life and adapted to the occasion, were admirable. So, although it cost me several days' time, one hundred miles' travel each way, together with other expenses, I feel that it was the best speculation of the year, with results so superior to money that there is no comparison. Then to think of the crowds unable to obtain standing room within ear-shot! But then comes the thought: A whole year must elaps before another such opportunity can be granted; I scarcely know how to employ the time.

On January 28th, as the time for the Paine memorial services was drawing near, I attended the Sunday-school and Bible class of the First Secular Church of Portland, and in the Bible Class "Immortality" was the word for discussion. A Spiritualist stated that the universe was composed of material and spirit, and we really love the Spiritualists when they strike these solid facts. Then soul, spirit, motion, all immaterialities, appear always with materialities, and on this planet, at the bottom of the air and the surface of the water and soil, soul, spirit, and motion hav been at work producing animals minute and immense, working the materials over and over until myriads hav become extinct and given place to the more refined, until the human animals hav become so refined that they wear clothes and handle tools. Yes, and one hundred and fifty-seven years ago they produced Thomas Paine, and now a member of the Portland Secular Church produced a free-hand drawing of Thomas Paine so natural that it could almost talk, while more animate material that eyed that lovely picture actually did talk as fluently or more so than himself; and all this material that has been collected at Portland of course was already there, but was growing wild in the Christian forest and very isolated, so that great men of wisdom and sagacity hav looked the timber through and through and could find only here and there at long intervals a stick that looked as though it possibly might be worked into a Freethinker, for the peculiarity of Freethinkers is that they must be born honest—conversion is no good—for on the first trial trip they break for the Christian woods. Now the first Secular church of Portland is composed of over one hundred specimens of this extraordinary timber, fitted and bolted with silver bolts so that they neither rip, ravel, or cut in the eye, and cannot be affected either by floods of heavenly grace or flames of hellish lies.

Yes, all who know anything of this wonderful piece of mechanism ask, "Who was the architect? Show me the master mechanic." At Castle Kehm, on the bank of the Willamette, in one of the wildest and most picturesque locations in Oregon, can be found the inventor, architect, contractor, master mechanic, and the full force of builders, all concentrated into one hundred pounds of material dominated by a vast amount of indomitable spirit, aided by soul, force, and motion, and all named Katie Kehm Smith, who wields the twenty-five pound sledge in forging those silver bolts with as much ease and dexterity as an archbishop or cardinal can manipulate a tack-hammer. B. F. HYLAND.

New Convert Willing to Put Up Money.

February 10, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I hav read pro and con on the subject of Spiritism in THE TRUTH SEEKER and other periodicals and in books, and hav always been a regular "doubting Thomas," believing there could be no life outside of matter; that the so-called spirit manifestations were simply the reflex of my own brain, or perhaps the result of certain psychic conditions that we are as yet unacquainted with, but I hav of late been investigating the subject for myself; hav been in circles and lectures where tests were given; hav taken private sittings from Maine to California, and while I hav detected fraud, yet I hav often had given me the names in full and a perfect description of deceased relativs and friends (as well as some living ones), many of whom I hav not thought of for years; in fact, some young children that I never knew of until making inquiries since. I am frequently told where I will be on certain days, which comes true and is the least expected.

In a dark circle in Fort Worth, Tex., where the best of all mediums of my acquaintance officiated (Mrs. Maud Lord Drake), there were three or more spirits talking in audible whisper at one time, and one of those in Spanish to Spanish relativs sitting in the circle, all of them being recognized by friends, who held quite a conversation with them without the aid of the medium, who sat in the center of the circle patting her hands gently, and who kept up such a continuous talking that none should think she did the talking attributed to spirits.

While this is but a small part of what I hav witnessed, yet it is enough to make many of your readers sneer at the "nonsense" and think me a "deluded crank."

While this may be true and I will accept the compliment, yet I ask some one of good sense, who knows all about science and who is such a fine mathematical expert as to know there can be no room in space for spirits of all the deceased of earth, to explain how or by what fraud I was so deluded.

At another time I arranged for a light materializing circle to be held in my room at the hotel, and, as I assisted in hanging the curtain (cabinet), I know there could hav been no fraud connected with the cabinet. The room was but partially lighted when the medium was tied, and at the instant she entered the cabinet a hand appeared from between the curtains high above the medium's head, and, as there was no assistant or other than the medium inside the cabinet, I wish the phenomena explained. Please follow me a little further until I was called to the cabinet by supposed deceased friends, and as I put one hand in between the curtains, holding the curtains together with the other, I felt my hand within the cabinet patted rather hard, and at the same time a seemingly human hand reached far out of the cabinet and patted me on the head, in full sight and hearing of the twenty or more who sat in the room. At the very instant I was being so dealt with I reached into the cabinet and drew the medium forth and found her tied as when she entered the cabinet, and the curtains being thrown open, no one was visible, neither possible to be inside of the cabinet. At the close of the seance the medium requested that as many as could and so wished would enter the cabinet with her and see that no one untied her. This they did, and almost immediately they all returned with the medium untied. These are the facts as I saw them in my own private room, with but a borrowed curtain stretched across the corner of the room, where there could be no trap-door or other vehicle by which the medium could obtain assistance.

I hav seen tricks performed on the stage and off; hav seen Professor Hermann and others do what looked mysterious; but I fail to see how what I hav described could hav been a trick or delusion, and ask that some one explain.

Should there be any among your readers who hav lost relations and who think it impossible for any medium, an entire stranger to them, to tell them of their deceased friends—telling their names, when they died, how long they were sick, and many other things connected with their lives impossible for strangers to know, and who care to take the trouble and expense to test the subject, and find that what I hav written is untrue—I will forfeit $50, on condition they giv me the same amount, should they find what I hav said true.

No International Lines in Liberalism.

PERTH CENTER, N. B., Feb. 2, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I hav thought it may help the cause of Liberalism to let your readers know how the cause is progressing in this section of the country. In Liberalism there are no national lines, so the headquarters of Liberalism in this section of the world is Fort Fairfield, Me., eight miles distant from where I liv. The village of Fort Fairfield is one and a half miles from the line dividing the state of Maine from New Brunswick. It is beautifully situated on the Aroostook river, and being the center of a fine agricultural country, it does a large trade in buying and shipping potatoes, besides supplying two large starch factories during the starch-making season. The town has a good water supply and electric lights. The different kinds of business usually found in a country village are well represented, including a bank and a newspaper office from which a weekly paper is issued. It has a goodly number of very fine stores and some handsome residences. The Roman Catholics, the Methodists, the Congregationalists, and the Episcopalians hav each imposing church buildings. They are, of course, exempt from taxation. But the building that I want to bring particularly to the attention of your readers is "Liberty Hall," which was built for the Salvation Army, but the army failed, and the building fell into the hands of Brother R. S. Baker, an old-time Liberal, who furnished the building with a bell and christened it "Liberty Hall." It is the headquarters of the Fort Fairfield Liberal League, which preaches in it the gospel of Liberalism. Of course it pays taxes. Fourteen years ago, when I moved into this section of the country, I heard of a dreadful Infidel that lived at the fort, who would go fishing on Sunday and did not believe in God, man, nor the devil. I lost no time in finding this man, who proved to be R. S. Baker, and after a little conversation I saw that we could shake hands on our religious beliefs. He was then a reader of the Index, THE TRUTH SEEKER, and Investigator, and was a life member of the National Liberal League. I found him a well-informed, genial, and hospitable gentleman, a strong Democrat, and at that time high sheriff of the county of Aroostook. He has since been custom-house officer under Cleveland's first administration, and has been selectman for a great many years. He is an intense lover of children; although he has none of his own, his home has never been without the patter of little feet; children belonging to the town were there tenderly sheltered until they could be provided for otherwise. Although he is now well up in the sixties a little boy climbs upon his knee, and puts his little arms around his neck and lovingly calls him papa. This little boy, when a mere infant, came upon the town, and Brother Baker, like good old Simeon of old, thought he was a child of promis, so he called him Percy Baker. Shortly after I became acquainted with Mr. Baker he arranged that I should giv a lecture at the Fort. The audience was composed principally of Liberals, who enjoyed the novelty of hearing their sentiments spoken right out in meeting. One gentleman, Mr. Gilman, walked twelve miles to attend the lecture. Although I occasionally visited Brother Baker, no attempt was made to organize nor hav lectures until last January, when the Fort Fairfield Liberal League was organized, and "Liberty Hall" placed at the disposal of the League. Soon after the League was organized a debate between Mr. Geo. Eastman, of the League, and Mr. French, of the Advent Society, and a citizen of the town, attracted a good deal of local interest and aroused a desire on the part of the public for more, which resulted in arranging a debate between Mr. Putnam and Rev. Mr. Wheeler, of New Hampshire, the report of which was published in your paper at the time. The editor of Secular Thought, Mr. Ellis, gave us two lectures. Mrs. Wentworth, of Knox county, Maine, a Spiritualist, spent four Sundays with us last fall, and drew good audiences. Mr. Joseph Connet, a member of the League, visited Chicago to attend the Freethought convention and came home enthusiastic. Mr. Connet is a good reader and has read several lectures before the League.

Last Sunday we held a Paine memorial service, which was pronounced a success. Brother Baker gave an interesting outline of Paine's services to the country during the Revolutionary war, and indicated the obligations the citizens of the United States were under to respect his memory. Brother Geo. Eastman showed the influence the "Rights of Man" had in giving to the citizens of America the liberty they enjoy, and of which they are so justly proud. I called attention to that immortal work, the "Age of Reason." Brother Gilman was present, and his white head was a benediction of hope and cheer. We hold our annual meeting on the 11th inst. We propose to celebrate Easter. The League has done good work so far, because the great motiv-power that has insured success has been the energy and perseverance of Brother Baker. I hope the movement may become strong enough to liv after he dies. GEO. E. BAXTER.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

A Soldier I Am Longing To Be.

A soldier! a soldier!
I am longing to be:
To take up my arms
In the ranks of the free;

With my sword to strike down,
That which oppresses me.
To cut the chains of serfs
And to set the slaves free;

To drive from the world
The bigots and their creed;
To giv humanity
Everything that they need;

To dispel from the world,
Slavery of every kind,
To enlighten and free
The cramped human mind.

Haunted.

I am haunted, gentle reader, but in such a pleasant way
I do not fear the "specter" one iota.
In fact, I would consider it a dreary sort of day
In which I was unable to devote a
Good portion of the fleeting hours unto my cheerful "phantom,"
And I'm "awful sorry" for the folks who hav no "ghost" to "haunt" 'em!

My little "spook" came down the stair to "haunt" me t'other night
As late I labored o'er a dreary matter.
Through the grim shadows of the hall I caught a glimps of white
And heard a tiny slipper's gentle patter,
And presently a baby voice came through the door to greet me.
"Say, popper, did you fink I wuz a goblun come to eat ye?"

The Course of a Life.

Born amid the splendors of an aristocracy, cradled in luxury, nursed by a mother whose brows the breath of infamy had not touched, attaining manhood under the most enlightened and ennobling conditions, it was the fate of my friend, Percy Walton, to die in a manner befitting a beast of prey. The story is a simple one, and if you will bear patiently with me, dear reader, I will relate it.

In the early part of our careers, now sixty years ago, Percy and I resolved to stand by one another despite anything that might happen. We were both then destined to follow the somewhat monotonous profession of clergymen, and in our studies were thrown into each other's company very often. Our parents being very religious, we were enthusiastic in studying for a calling supposed to be sacred, and at that time we thought it was.

Time passed; we had been graduated and each had received and accepted a call. Our two places were near each other, so we were not to be parted, even in pursuing our profession. They were what may be called "fat livings," and our "flocks" were easy-going, good-natured people, and so free with their money that if we wanted anytbing, and cared not to pay for it ourselvs, we could appeal to them with good results.

We had been preaching for a year, when one day my friend came to me with a very serious look. I shall never forget his face nor the day; for they were in contrast to each other. The day was bright with summer beauty. The sun was shedding its warm rays around, and the birds were warbling their songs, an abundance of beautiful flowers decorated the bosom of the earth, and a gentle breeze hardly disturbed the leaves on the trees. Such was the day. But his face! What a troubled look he had! His brows were knitted together, and as he came up the lane, I noticed he was in deep meditation. So deep was his abstraction that if I had not called his name he would hav passed the house.

"Excuse me," he said, in his pleasant way. "I am troubled with a few vexed questions, and if I cannot solve them any better than I hav so far been able to do, I shall be obliged to resign my charge, as I do not want to be a hypocrit for a moment."

I was surprised at the words, and, inviting him into the house, asked if I could be of any service.

"Look here, Reginald," he said, "you do not know how many perplexing questions we ministers can be asked that we cannot answer. There is an Atheist in our town, and he and I hav had a good-natured argument, but, to be candid, he certainly had the best of it."

"You fool!" I exclaimed, angrily, "don't you know we hav no business to talk to such people, and don't you know the harm they are doing?"

"Reginald," he replied, laughing, "do not be bigoted. Surely, if by our argument we can arrive at the facts, sound things to their depth and test their truth, we hav a natural right to do so. It is a right that is born with us, and no person can lawfully take it away. Of course I know these people whom you despise are ostracized from all good society, but I always remember that whatever a man believes he is a man for all that; and though he may differ with me, I will make him my friend, if he is my friend, and so long as he is a good and respectable citizen, I shall not ask anything more of him."

"You are too just for a minister," I replied suddenly, sorry I said so a minute later.

"On the contrary," he exclaimed, "if I am to preach the truth to others, I must know the truth myself. If I am to preach justice to mankind, I must be just, not to one class only, but to all classes. As broad as this I recognize religion."

"If you persist in believing so, you will surely be driven out of your profession, providing the authorities hear of it."

"Nonsense!" and then, becoming more serious, he went on: "I hav a few questions to ask, Reginald; will you hear them and see what you can do with them?"

"Yes," I replied.

"Very well. I hav been studying what is called science. It has proven a very interesting study; but it has set me thinking. We are supposed to believe in a heaven and a hell, are we not?"

I nodded assent.

"Then, this science, or a branch called astronomy, says that space is infinit, and that we might travel hundreds of years, at a high rate of speed, and yet never reach the nearest star, which is millions of miles away. Very well, if this be true, as I conceive it is, after thinking and reasoning to myself, then our heaven, with it angels, must be a myth—a delusion."

"Percy," I exclaimed angrily, "if you speak like this, why, you would drive me and the whole earth crazy. It is a lie, whoever said it."

"Nay, nay," he remonstrated. "Meet me fair. You promised to hear my questions and try to answer them, not avoid them."

"Very well," I replied resignedly.

"Then, another branch, called geology, says that this earth was once a molten mass, and that by a slow process it cooled down and became fitted for vegetable and animal life. Then, according to this theory, there can be no hell—aud for this I am very thankful, if it be true."

"Percy, you are becoming hopeless."

"Never mind, if it is the truth, we should not hesitate to proclaim it. What I am now going to say will indeed sound blasphemous."

[CONCLUSION NEXT WEEK.]

What the Little Folks Are Saying.

The little daughter of a friend had just mastered the art of expressing herself in intelligent sentences. One day her mamma had to reprove her, and, after giving her a sound lecture, told her to go upstairs to her room alone and ask God to forgiv her for her error. In a few minutes the little one surprised her mother by appearing in the sitting-room with a serious face. "Well, did you go upstairs and do as I told you?" "Yes," replied the child, "and God said, 'Great Scott! Elsie Murray, I'v known a great many worser than you!'"

A certain little girl from whom the Listener sometimes hears is evidently going to be a great logician. When she was called upon at school the other day to recite a verse from the beatitudes, she responded with, "Blessed are the dressmakers, for they shall see God." "But, my dear girl," exclaimed the teacher, "it is not 'dressmakers,' it's 'peacemakers.'" "Well," the child answered, stoutly, "my mother has a dressmaker, and she makes dresses out of pieces!"

"Mamma," said Mabel, "if people eat up all the toadstools what will the toads do when they want to sit down?"—Truth.

A Fifth ward mother tells the following story about her nine-year-old son. She was sick a-bed, and when the little fellow went into the room to bid her good-night, she said: "Johnnie, would you feel bad if mamma should die now, and go to heaven without you?" "Oh! mamma," quickly replied the youngster, "if you can go to heaven right off, go on, don't mind me."—Lowell Sun.

"Mamma," said Willie, looking up from the letter upon which he had been industriously at work, "how do you make an X? I want to write the word vaccinate."

Correspondence.

YONCALLA, OR., Jan. 24, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my first letter to the Corner. I enjoy reading it very much. My father takes THE TRUTH SEEKER and says he couldn't do without it. There are lots of church members in our little city, and they are always in a row. I went to church last Sunday, just for the fun of the thing, and to see the pretty girls. The preacher was just in the middle of a sermon when he was taken with cramps, and had to break off. I will tell the Corner friends where I liv. It is a little town 166 miles south of Portland on the P. C. Railroad. This is one of the best countries I ever lived in. Hoping this will escape the waste basket I will close for this time. Please correct mistakes.

FRANK BRUMMETTE.

[Please be careful about making mistakes. A good letter.—ED. T. S.]

WATERTOWN, MINN., Jan. 26, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would let you know that there is one girl in Minnesota seeking after the truth.

Watertown is a small village on the banks of Crow river. It contains five churches costing about $20.000, one schoolhouse and two teachers. The village contains about four hundred inhabitants.

There were no real Freethinkers in town until Mr. Thornquest came here. He circulated his papers and books and now there are a good many Freethinkers in tbe place.

We liv one-half mile from town on the banks of the Crow river. Our farm contains about one hundred and twenty-five acres. There are trees all around our house. Your Liberal friend,

AGNES D. EDWARDS.

[We are glad to hear from Agnes, and hope she will come again.—ED. C. C.]

AUSTIN, NEV., Jan. 17, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Owing to much study both at school and at home, I hav been unable to write to the Corner for a long time. I hav seen no letters from Nevada, and, in order to let the Liberal world know that the Silver state has at least one juvenil Freethinker who is awake and aware of the fact that Christianity is not tbe only standby, I will write.

I hav read but very few Liberal works. Since the demonetization of silver times hav been dull in Nevada, and for tbat reason I could not get a better stock of books, but hope to in the future. There are about a dozen Liberals in Austin, but none of them except our family take THE TRUTH SEEKER. We hav tbree churches, but only two are going, the Episcopal having shut down about four years ago on account of a deficiency of members (and funds also).

The other day a band of Sunday-school pupils, after coming from church, set a trap to catch their teacher, but his wife was the one who was caught. He went and had them taken to court and put under $100 bonds, but to-day let them off because they apologized to his wife. The ringleader of this flock of saints takes care of the church. This shows the size of modern Christianity.

I will tell you something of the town in which I liv. Austin is situated in a canyon about seven miles from Reese river. On the eastern side of the canyon all the mines are situated, about a hundred in number. All are closed down now except one. The company in charge now is running a tunnel. which, when finished, will be nearly a mile in length. Besides the mines, sagebrush is all the scenery here.

I wish some of the boys and girls of the Corner would write to me. Hoping this will escape the waste-basket, I will close.

HARRY MOSS.

[Thank you, Harry, for the above interesting letter. Those Liberals who omit to provide themselvs with THE TRUTH SEEKER do not know the good they are missing.—ED. C. C.]

Darwin and After Darwin.

An Exposition of the Darwinian Theory.

By GEORGE J. ROMANES.

A systematic Exposition of what may be termed the Darwinism of Darwin, and intended to be of service to the general reader rather than to professed naturalists.

Mr. Romanes is well known as one of the most interesting of English writers upon evolution, besides ranking with Professor Huxley in scientific knowledge and ability. And this is a part of his conclusion regarding the great subject of Design, to which the church so often refers:

"Thus whether we look to the facts of adaptation or to those of beauty, everywhere throughout organic nature we meet with abundant evidence of natural causation, while nowhere do we meet with any independent evidence of supernatural design. . . . Adaptation and beauty are alike receiving their explanation at the hands of a purely mechanical philosophy. . . . All nature has thus been transformed before the view of the present generation in a manner and to an extent that has never before been possible; and inasmuch as the change which has taken place has taken place in the direction of naturalism, and this to the extent of rendering the mechanical interpretation of nature universal, it is no wonder if the religious mind has suddenly awakened to a new and a terrible force in the words of its traditional enemy—Where is now thy God?"

Pleasure and Progress.

AN ATTEMPT TO PROVE THAT

The Pursuit of Pleasure is the Sine Qua Non of Intellectual, Moral, and Social Development, and that The Promotion of Pleasure is the Duty of Philanthropy and Statesmanship.

By Albert M. Lorentz, LL.B.

CONTENTS:

Book I.—Pleasure: Chap. I.—Sources of Pleasure. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures. Chap IV.—Social Pleasures. Chap. V.—Pleasures of the Savage, the Barbarian and the Civilized. Chap. VI.—Genesis of religions. Chap. VII.—Christianity.

Book II.—Intellectual Development: Chap. I.—Purpose of life. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures: Knowledge. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Beason. Chap.—V. Ideal Pleasures: Character. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Pedagogical Despotism.

Book III.—Moral Development: Chap. I.—Morality. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures: Prudence. Chap. III.—Material Pleasures: Refinement. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Foresight, Chap. V.—Ideal Pleasures: Civilization. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Vice Caused by Restraint.

Book IV.—Social Development: Chap. I.—Progress. Chap. II.—Protection, Capitalism, and Socialism: Respectivly an Actual, an Imminent, and a Proposed Violation of Individual Sovereignty. Chap. III.—Condition of Agriculture. Chap. IV. Public Schools, the Mene, Mene, Tekel of Socialism. Chap. V.—Province of Government. Chap. VI.—Our Social Disorder.

Here are some of the verdicts on this remarkable production which have been rend ered b men who are in every way qualified as judges of books:

This is a spirited, rattling sort of a book that skates right along over the deepest subject with out much thought whether the ice is thin or not. It answers the greatest question—What is the use, object, motive, purpose, and summum bonum of life, and the real cause and motive of progress? —by one word, Pleasure!—Thaddeus B. Wakeman,

He sharply attacks, also, modern methods of education, and in this he is most abundantly borne out by the facts, and his arraignment is practically unanswerable. His book is altogether a curious and suggestive one.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The man who wrote this book knows how to write a book, and knows what he is writing about. There is not a padded sentence in the volume, not an attempt to fill up with words for lack of knowledge. The author deals hard blows at shams and falsehoods, and hard blows for realities and truth. We do not see how anyone can read this book and disagree with the leading propositions. The work is good; every chapter is worth reading. It is a work of common-sense Socialism. The chapter on public schools ought to be put into a tract and sent to every teacher in the land. Thousands of sentences are worthy of being framed as political maxims and hung up all over the nation. The book deserves a wide reading, not only for its literary style, which is clear and incisive, but for its bold, honest sayings.—L. K. Washburn.

Here we have philosophy up to date, the advance word of the progressive thinker; not a dry, abstruse discourse, but a common-sense essay in plain words upon the conduct of life, and all illustrated with such an abundance of anecdote and metaphor as add real entertainment to solid instruction. This is an important book, striking at superstition and unreasonable tradition, and upholding individual liberty in defiance of governmental law and social custom. After reading this book one feels that the author will never be able to write another, for he has put all his life and knowledge into this one. Every page bristles with points; there is no padding or filling in, no mere literary embellishment; but clean-cut apothegms abound, and every line is dictated by hard head d common-sense.—Capt. Robt. O. Adams.

After you read this book you will be as enthusiastic in praise of it as are the eloquent editor of the Investigator and the gallant President of the Canadian Secular Union,

"Pleasure and Progress" has 398 pages, is splendidly printed from large, clear type, on excellent paper, and costs, bound in cloth, $1; paper covers, 50 cents.

A most extraordinary publication. We venture the assertion that nothing like it has ever before appeared in this country, and it is very doubtful if another one like it will ever again be published. We must give the Truth Seeker Company the credit of putting the book in the reach of all. At twice the price it would have been a cheap book. Artist Heston as a portrait painter and designer is a wonderful success, and we judge from our own feelings that nearly every Liberal in America will desire a copy of this most wonderful volume.—[Freethinkers' Magazine.

Mr. Heston deserves to be called the artist-hero of Liberalism. He has dedicated his genius to Freethought, and has done faithful and noble work for the cause of right and truth. But the pictures do not make up the whole of this volume. There are nearly two hundred pages of reading matter that serve first as explanations of the illustrations, and secondly as texts to prove the utter falsity of the church's professions and the hypocrisy of those who uphold them. Altogether the book is one of the best weapons against Christianity and the church that has ever been put in the hands of Freethinkers.—[Boston Investigator.

PEN PICTURES OF THE WORLD'S FAIR.

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

It is, besides being a complete Guide-Book, the best description of the Fair yet given—poetic, beautiful, accurate. It describes the inauguration ceremonies, gives the director-general's address, the efforts to close the Fair Sundays and the triumph of the Sunday-openers; describes the various buildings and what they contain, and is, all in all, the very best picture of the Fair that can be painted with a pen.

Comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of Heathen Nations of Antiquity,

CONSIDERING ALSO THEIR ORIGIN AND MEANING.

WITH NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS.

[Heathen Illustration of the Temptation.]

The Bundehesh (a sacred book of the Persians,) states that Ahuramazda after creating the first man and woman, Mashya and Mashyana, bade them "to be humble of heart; to observe the law; to be pure in their thoughts, pure in their speech, pure in their actions." But an evil demon came to them in the form of a Serpent, sent by Ahriman, the prince of devils, and gave them fruit of a wonderful tree, which imparted immortality. Evil inclinations then entered their hearts, and all their moral excellence was destroyed. Consequently they fell, and forfeited the eternal happiness for which they were destined. They killed beasts, and clothed themselves in their skins.

BIBLE MYTHS shows this to be the origin of the Hebrew story.

A few days ago I received from the office of THE TRUTH SEEKER a package of tracts which call for acknowledgment; and at the same time, with your permission, I would like to giv my opinion of the value of the contents. First in the list is the "Thumbscrew and Rack," by George E. Macdonald. It is enough to congeal the blood in one's veins to look on the instruments of torture in picture, knowing them to be exact representations of the real articles used by the "holy church" to convert heretics. We talk of the wicked Indian who scalps his victim, and we are very apt to describe scalping as in consequence of the lack of the knowledge of the Christian religion. Who has not sung the hymn beginning

From Greenland's icy mountains,
From India's coral strand, with all the fervor produced by the feeling that we were to help to convert all heathen to the knowledge of the Christian's God?

I am sure this pamphlet, written by Mr. Macdonald, must be one of the best eye-openers that has ever been written; if only we could get it into our school libraries, Sunday school particularly, we should be able to contrast it with the descriptions of pagan torture found in most libraries. I wish we could circulate the tract by the thousands.

"The Giant Delusion" is a powerful argument, convincing, to anyone who will listen to argument, that death is really death, not continued life, and much more desirable than the imaginary life of the Christian. Mr. Wettstein is a forcible writer, and 'tis a pleasure to read his works.

"The Bible Inquirer, a Key to Bible Investigation," should be in every Freethinker's pocket; and its contents contrasted with the pages of Lucifer, the publishing of which paper sent its editor to prison. Oh, shame! shame! To shut up in prison such a man as Moses Harman!

Next comes "Woman: Four Centuries of Progress." Fifty years ago I began to speak for woman's emancipation. Since that time I hav heard or read everything for her cause, and nearly everything against it, and I am free to say I hav never seen or heard anything upon the subject surpassing this lecture. If I were young, instead of being old and broken down, I would take these tracts and go from house to house, as I used to do in the antislavery times, and beg people to read them; but alas! my work is done. Let me say to all your readers we need the activ work of all. Help THE TRUTH SEEKER; that is activ and needed work.

With love to all I am now and always,
Yours for the right.
LUCY N. COLMAN.

PLEASURE AND PROGRESS. By Albert M. Lorentz, LL.B. Cloth, $1; paper, 50 cents.

This book, published by The Truth Seeker Company, at the ridiculously low price of 50 cents, is a very interesting work. It is full of wise sayings and is suggestiv of much thought. The author believes that the pursuit of pleasure is man's unconscious aim through life; that all altruism is but the result of man's desire for pleasure; that charity is not a sacrifice but a felicity. The book comprises 398 pages of solid matter. You can scarcely turn a single page that does not contain some gem of thought.

The volume is divided into four parts or heads, treating of pleasure and its various sources, pleasures intellectually considered, moral pleasures, and pleasures social.

Under the latter head the author treats of protection, capital, labor questions, public schools, Socialism, province of government, and other kindred topics. He believes fully and firmly in the law of individual sovereignity, and in summing up shows the cause of our social disarrangement and points the remedy as it appears to him in carrying out the law of the sovereignty of the individual.

The perusal of this book has given me much pleasure. Its short, pithy sentences hav been written by a careful student and a close observer of human life and its environments.

The reader may take some exceptions to his doctrin, but the author will most adroitly lead him to acknowledge his reasoning as very sensible in the main.

SUSAN H. WIXON.

"Abraham Lincoln: Was He a Christian?" by John E. Remsburg. A work of 336 pages, neatly printed. The Truth Seeker Company, publishers, 28 Lafayette place, New York. Price in cloth, $1; in paper, 50 cents. Mr. Remsburg has given all the data from every accessible source as to the religious opinions of Mr. Lincoln, who, though evidently an unbeliever in orthodox religion, was too shrewd a politician to let the general public know just what he did believe. That he was not a Christian is quite evident, but his Infidelity was not of a character to be emulated by a true Liberal. To those who hav any care about what he was, this book will be quite interesting. Like all Mr. Remsburg writes, it is carefully written and in every way trustworthy.—Independent Pulpit.

RELIGION A CURSE, RELIGION A DISEASE, RELIGION A LIE.

By Samuel P. Putnam.

Dedicated to the American Congress, of 1892, which for the sake of Religion, Stabbed Liberty to the Heart.

A work burning with indignation inspired by the Congressional act closing the World's Fair on Sunday—an act which practically united the government and the Christian church.

To which is added Mr. Putnam's address delivered before the Columbian Exposition Committee of the House of Representatives against Sunday closing.

Also the following Essays and Poems by Mr. Putnam, which have never before been put in book form: Orthodoxy; Freethought; Man, Not God (written for a Paine anniversary); The Statue of Liberty and Thomas Paine; a poem written for the opening exercises of the Silverton, Ore., Freethought Hall; Death and Life; The Golden Age; Shut the Door (a poem on the closing of the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia, in 1876).

The main essay in this work is one of the strongest arraignments ever made of the religion which cramps and fetters the minds of the people of this country. It should be distributed widely. It has been commended in the highest terms as it appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER and we hope every reader will buy a copy to lend his neighbor and arouse thought.

By GEORGE W. BROWN, M.D.

Fourth Edition.

Part I.—Researches in Jewish History; ten chapters.
Part II.—Researches in Zoroastrianism; thirteen chapters.
Part III.—Derivation of Christianity; twenty chapters.
Part IV.—Whence Came the Aryans? Five chapters.

Press Notices.

The style is forcible and terse, the reasoning good, and as the facts upon which the argument is based are largely Christian, our theological friends will have some hard nuts to crack if they attempt to answer them.—Boston Investigator.

This book is one of the most thorough and learned of the Freethought works that have come across the Atlantic.—The Freethinker, London.

TOMMY: "I owe Freddy Jones a licking." Mother: "How's that?" Tommy: "He knew his Sunday-school lesson better than I did yesterday."—Truth.

"WELL, little boy, what's your name?" asked the Sunday-school teacher, opening her Catechism. "Shadrach Nebuchadnezzar Jones." "Who gave you that name?" "I don't know. But if I find out whin I gets me growth they'll be sorry for it!"—London Freethinker.

TAKES Work Nowadays: "You niggers," says Uncle Mose, "dat t'inks you is gwine to git up dem golden stairs widout climbin', and climbin' hahd, is mighty much mistakened. I des want to tell you right now dat de yellervator is stopped runnin' eber since de days ob ole 'Lijah." Indianapolis Journal.

"BE not afraid of sin, if you pay well,
There are no wealthy men in the Roman Papist hell;
God opens him the gate, and lets him in,
The want of funds to pay, is far the greater sin;
For all things else on earth, you settle when in heaven,
So count your beads again and keep the tally even." —John Dryden.

"MAMMA, do you believe that God can see everything?" His mother assured him that God was omniscient, explaining to him what the term meant. "But I know, mamma there is something that God can not see." The mother, naturally, was shocked at the little skeptic's asseveration. "But I know he can't see everything!" "What can't he see?" "Why, mamma, he can't see the top of his own head."—London Freethinker.

AT the Revival Meeting.—Stranger: "I should like to say a few words to-night" Leader: "I don't know; hav you had a career of crime, been a drunkard, or anything of that sort?" Stranger: "No, indeed; I can truly say I hav always led a correct life." Leader: "All very well, no doubt; but the people won't care to listen to you. You'd better stay, however, and hear Bruiserboy, the reformed pugilist, and Mole, the saved sneak-thief. Both of 'em are rattlers." - Boston Transcript.

A THIEF AT THE BAPTIZING.

"If you please, sah," said a well dressed young negro to the lieutenant of police at headquarters last night, "while Ah was a-being baptized dis mawnin' somebody stole mah watch and mah money out of mah clothes which Ah had left in de basement, sah."

"What is your name, and where and how did it happen?" asked the officer.

"Mah name, sah, is Henry D. Bernwell, Jr., and it was dis hyar very mawnin', sah, at church. You see, dey had a big batizing up dere, sah. They was twenty-five culled persons baptized, sah, and I was one of 'em, if you will 'scuse me for sayin' it. We took offen our clothes, sah—that is our outside clothes, sah—down in de basemen', an' left 'em dere. Den we went up to be soused in de big basin, and while de preacher was a-sousin' us, some one of dem over at de end of de line furderest from de preacher slipped down into dat cellar and done went frew our clothes, sah.

"Dey took mah silver watch and chain, worth $10 any day, and mah money."

"How much money?"

"Only 35 cents from me, sah, but dat represents a pretty powerful sum dese hard times. Den dey took a good gold watch from another man, sah, and 75 cents. An' dey took 30 cents from mah cousin, sah, a young lady, and she feels mighty bad about it, 'cause she done had to walk home in de rain after a-bein' baptized. An' dey took some jewelry from anudder fella, sah, and I reckon if de thief had time he would hav gone frew all of de clothes, exceptin' his own, of course."

"Where is that church?"

"It am de Baptist church at Nineteenth and I streets northwest, sah, and it is a wonderful strong church. Dere was a fine crowd dere dis mawnin', and de service was powe'ful strong."

"Well, we will put a detectiv on the case, and try and recover the stolen property."

"Ah weesh you would, sah. Ah'll tell you one thing. Ah shorely doan' think dat dat thief's baptizin' dis mawnin' done him much good, do you?"

"No, I don't," acquiesced the lieutenant, repressing a smile.

"An' dere's one thing mo'. I done got religion dis mawnin', but ef I meets dat nigga' what stole dem things, it won't take mah mor'n a minute to get mah fightin' clothes on. No, indeed. Ump-um-m."

And, with a shake of his head, Henry sorrowfully went out of the door into the snow, to be alone with his thoughts of baptizing and fighting.—Washington Post.

Gems of Thought.

THE freedom of thought and utterance, the foundations of social civilization, are tampered with by all laws that cannot be equally applied.—Moncure D. Conway.

MOST social institutions appear to hav the object of maintaining men in a mediocrity of ideas and sentiments, which renders them easy to be governed.—Chamfort and Vauvenargues.

THOUGHTFUL people who are devoted to republican institutions, to government of the people, by the people, for the people, do not stop to inquire whether special governmental favoritism pays in dollars and cents or not. They see the growing danger of any sort of governmental control of private business and understand that such usurpation, if tolerated, will result in the overthrow of free government and in the most unbearable tyranny.—Galveston News.

THE language of the Materialist must always be preferred by science, because (as Huxley has judiciously observed) connecting the phenomenon of life with other phenomena, it invites the thinker to make researches into the physical conditions which accompany life, contributes to the progress of positiv knowledge, and tends to make us exercise over the moral world a control analogous to that which we exercise over everything which is in relation to the physical world.—London Freethinker.

SOME amiable and heterodox sects retain heaven and abolish hell. A kingdom in the clouds may, of course, be portioned off according to pleasure. The doctrin, however, is interesting in an intellectual point of view only, as illustrating in the naivest fashion the common fallacy of confounding our wishes with our beliefs. The argument that because evil and good are mixed wherever we can observe, therefore there is elsewhere unmixed good, does not obey any recognized canons of induction.—Leslie Stephen.

THESE old fairy tales hav lost their power to charm, as the tales of the gods and kings went down before. They hav lost their charm; for as we read them now they awake no answering chord born of the experiences that make up what we know of human life. When the beauty of realism shall be truly known, we shall read the book, or look upon the work of art, and, in the light of all we know of life, shall ask our beings whether the image the author or the painter creates for us is like the one that is born of the consciousness which moves our souls, and the experiences that life has made us know.—C. S. Darrow.

I HAV lately been reading some of the investigations made by the Anti-Vivisection Society. The descriptions of experiments are given not in the words of the anti-vivisectionists themselvs, who might be led by the intensity of their feelings into an extravagant use of adjectivs, but in the unprejudiced scientific language of the physiological journals or the monographs of the investigators. To giv the details of these operations would be almost as great an act of cruelty to the reader as the original operation was to its victims. Thousands of vertebrate animals are yearly sacrificed not to original scientific research, but in cruel class demonstrations of facts already firmly established.—Kate Field.

IN the study of history there should be but one law for all. Patriotism, piety, and filial duty hav nothing to do with it—they are, indeed, mere snares and sources of delusion. The rules and canons of criticism applied in one case and to one character, must be sternly and scrupulously applied in all other similar cases and to all other characters; and while surrounding circumstances should, and, indeed, must be, taken into careful consideration, they must be taken into equal consideration, no matter who is concerned. Patriotism in the study of history is but another name for provincialism. To see history truly and correctly, it must be viewed as a whole.—Charles Francis Adams.

LET Americans understand that underneath the velvet gloves are the same talons; beneath the brilliant vestments is the same lust of domination; under the honeyed accents are the same chords whose vibrations filled the souls of men with terror; under the acquiescence to public sentiment when the incomplete purpose is prematurely brought to light, is the never-weakening, ever-strengthening will to regain the temporal and spiritual power which the souls of the reformers threw off at the risk, and many of them at the sacrifice, of life itself. The boast of the Roman church that it never changes, is true. To draw a figure from its idea of transubstantiation in the reverse order—its accidents may change; its substance never.—J. M. Buckley.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF MENTAL HEALING.

A Practical Exposition of Natural Restorative Power.

Price, $2.50. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE HOLY CROSS SERIES.

The Popes and Their Doings. Biographical sketches of the most noted of these vicars of Christ and vicegerents of God, showing what they have done, and what kind of men they were. It contains very plain statements, in very unvarnished language, and the unmasking is complete, proving them to have been cruel, intriguing, and licentious men. Considering the rapid growth of Catholicism in this country, this book cannot be too widely disseminated. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Awful Disclosures of Maria Monk, as exhibited in a narrative of her sufferings during her residence of five years as a novice, and two years as a black nun, in the Hotel Dieu Nunnery, at Montreal. Perhaps not any anti-Catholic book published has created more excitement, and had such a circulation as this work. To counteract its effects the Catholics circulated a story that Maria Monk was "no better than she should be," but investigation disclosed that her "child of shame" was none other than the child of her priest-seducer. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth 75 cents.

Auricular Confession and Popish Nunneries. By Wm. Hogan, for twenty-five years a confessing priest. A revelation of the licentious practices of the priests and nuns in these religious brothels. There is no question that Ex-priest Hogan knew the truth of the tales of vice, seduction, and infanticide he gives in this volume, and equally there is no question that if the people generally knew of them, Catholicism would not be given the vast amounts of money now allowed it by our various city governments. Price, paper, 50 cents, cloth 75 cents.

The Priest in Absolution. A Review of the system of auricular confession, including copious extracts from the "Confessional Unmasked," from the "Master Key to Popery," etc. The work is a protest against and an appeal to every American citizen to examine carefully and thoughtfully a religious system so invasive of privacy, so powerful for evil in licentious hands, so fraught with danger to female modesty, to the ingenuous openness of youth, and to the freedom of thought, speech, and action. Price, paper, 25 cents.

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA IDENTIFIED AS THE CHRISTIAN JESUS.

An important and remarkable revelation concerning the life and times of Apollonius of Tyana, the great sage and philosopher of the first century. It is here claimed that his life and teachings were appropriated and utilized by the formulators of the Christian religion in the interest of so-called Christianity. The plagiarism is made plain in this brief history of Apollonius, especailly in view of the historical references and comments thereon. It is quite evident that to conceal the plagiarism, the name of Apollonius was suppressed.

Petition to Congress Asking It to Reject the Proposed God-in-the-Constitution Amendment.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, in Congress Assembled:

We, the undersigned, citizens of the United States, do hereby respectfully pray and memorialize your Honorable Body to reject the proposed Amendment to the Constitution prepared by the National Reform Association and offered in the Senate on Jan. 25th, 1894, by Senator Frye, and in the House on the same day by Representative Morse. The proposed Amendment would change the Preamble to the Constitution by the insertion of the sentences within quotation marks which follow the words "We, the people of the United States," in the paragraph below:

We, the people of the United States, "devoutly acknowledging the supreme authority and just government of Almighty God in all the affairs of men and nations; grateful to him for our civil and religious liberty, and encouraged by the assurances of his Word to invoke his guidance, as a Christian nation, according to his appointed way, through Jesus Christ," etc.

We ask the rejection of this proposed amendment for the following reasons:

1. That the American principle of separation of church and state may be maintained.

2. That the rights of all classes of citizens may be conserved and perpetuated. It is manifest that the adoption of such an Amendment to the Constitution would be, in fact, the incorporation of certain religious and sectarian dogmas in the fundamental law of the land. Such recognition of religious dogmas in the civil law was very carefully guarded against by the wise founders of the Republic, both in the Constitution as originally adopted and in the First Amendment thereto.

3. As the Constitution now stands no discrimination, on the ground of heresy, can be legally made against any citizen. More than one hundred years of experience amply justifies this wide tolerance and forcibly pleads for its continuance. Men of all shades of religious, non-religious, and anti-religious belief can and do render allegiance to and acceptably serve the State, and this without hypocrisy or perjury. Should this proposed Amendment be adopted, it would at once shut out of public life candid and honest men, whose reason, for any cause, cannot accept one or more of the three creedal statements contained in said proposed Amendment, but unscrupulous doubters and rejecters of these creedal affirmations would have no difficulty in taking the oath of allegiance to the Amended Constitution. Hence said proposed Amendment offers a premium for hypocrisy and perjury, and is, consequently, in the highest degree immoral. It is also unjust, in that it deprives a part of our citizens of their equal rights, because of a difference of opinion. Again, it must be hurtful to the State, because, as already shown, it would admit pretenders and timorous men to positions of trust and responsibility, and bar out men of honesty and courage.

4. The experience of all times and nations has shown conclusively that every attempt to force from the citizen a direct or indirect acknowledgment of the truth of any of the dogmas of religion is disastrous. It creates new religious hatreds and intensifies the old; it demoralizes religion and corrupts the state; it tramples the equal rights and liberties of the deserving citizen, and puts into the hands of bad men a dangerous and terrible power over the property, persons, and lives of their fellow-citizens.

5. If Theistic, Trinitarian, and Christian majorities may to-day rightfully force upon Deistic, Atheistic, or Agnostic, and Unitarian and non-Christian minorities their distinctive creeds, what warrant have we that some other day the Catholics, the Methodists, or the Presbyterians will not Amend into the Constitution their distinguishing sectarian dogmas? That step would logically follow the one which your Honorable Body has been asked to take, and against which we respectfully but strongly and unalterably protest.

A new edition of that splendid prose poem, "Life," by "the prince of orators," Col. R. G. Ingersoll. It is larger and better than the old edition, and can be framed or placed upon the table as an ornament. In the center of the card appear the portraits of the Colonel and the baby, surrounded by the prose poem, which has been truthfully described as, "one of the masterpieces of the orator and poet, who now, as far as we know, stands alone in the living world." It will make a delightful present, and will be a souvenir not only of intellectual greatness, but of artistic workmanship. It is printed on heavy board, gilt boveled edge. The size is 12x16 inches, and the price only 75 cents, post-paid.

How To Preserve Health.

By LOUIS BARKAN, M.D.

Fordyce Barker, M.D., Professor Bellevue Medical College says of it, writing to the author: "I regard your book as the most sound, sensible, and useful book on the topics which it discusses that I hav met with. I wish it could be in the hands of every intelligent head of a family. I am particucularly pleased with one feature of it that it does not profess to teach dosing and drugging. I congratulate you on the wisdom and success of this effort."

Other noted physicians recommen it just as highly.

The Most Magnificent Work Ever Published by the Freethought Press.

Four Hundred Years of Freethought.

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The object of this work is to present the Course of Freethought throughout the Civilized World for the last Four Centuries, from the time of Columbus and Bruno to the time of Ingersoll.

It will be a radical Historic Record of the Greatest Developments of the Human Race.

It will reveal Freethought as an Intellectual, Moral, Literary, Social, Industrial, and Political Movement.

It will show what Freethought is in itself and how manifold are its influences, and with what hope and promise we can hail its future triumph.

"Four Hundred Years of Freethought" will Embrace the most Illustrious Pages of Human History,

adorned with the brightest Genius, radiant with the most splendid Poetry, rich with the greatest Inventions and Discoveries and ennobled with Freedom's most shining advance.

Nothing Can be More Interesting,

more inspiring to the Pioneer Workers of to-day—to those who are still in the van for Human Rights and Progress. The struggle is not ended and what is already won must be carefully guarded. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; and from the Past we must ever learn Great Lessons for the Future.

NO LIBERAL CAN AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT THIS BOOK.

It will contain the Greatest Thoughts and the Greatest Deeds of the Greatest Men

In One Harmonious and Magnificent Whole,

a vivid picture of man's sublimest evolution, with the added glory of

WOMAN'S EMANCIPATION

from the chains and slavery of a barbaric creed and church.

THE FIRST PART of the book will deal with Freethought as a Universal Power, as a Spirit, a Method, a prevailing but unorganized Influence in every Department of Human Growth.

THE SECOND PART will deal with Freethought as an Organized Movement, especially in America and Europe; and this history is of equal importance with the first, and should be justly understood and the Pioneers of our work recognized.

The first part will embrace the following Grand Departments:

Philosophy.	Science.	Education and Ethics.	Literature.		Government and Politics.		Woman's Emancipation.
Bruno.	Copernicus.	Bacon.	Boccaccio.	Lessing.	Voltaire.	Gambetta.	Madame Roland.
Spinoza.	Galileo.	Comenius.	Rabelais.	Schiller.	Rousseau.	Castelar.	Mary Wollstoncraft.

							Annie Besant.

THE PORTRAITS OF THESE ILLUSTRIOUS REFORMERS

in every domain of Human Thought and Progress will adorn the pages of this volume.

The Second Part of this volume will be devoted especially to organized Freethought and the Liberal Press in modern times. The Truth Seeker, Investigator, Ironclad Age, Secular Thought, Freethinkers' Magazine, Independent Pulpit, Lucifer, the Freethinker, Agnostic Journal, etc.

It will give a history of the

GREAT INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

at Chicago, the Freethought Federation of America, the American Secular Union, the various state and local organizations, the Canadian Secular Union, the British Secnlar Union, and other Liberal associations throughout the world.

It will contain the portraits of those who, up to the present time, have been identified with Freethought work—editors, lecturers, officers of societies, and those who, as representative men, have won distinction in other fields of effort. There will be the portraits of

Horace Seaver,	George E. Macdonald,	Capt. R. C. Adams,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Sr.,	Susan H. Wixon,
J. P. Mendum,	E. M. Macdonald,	John R. Charlesworth,	Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.,	Mrs. Charles Watts,
D. M. Bennett,	L. K. Washburn,	Samuel P. Putnam,	Prof. J. H. Cook,	Mrs. Robert C. Adams,
Parker Pillsbury,	Ernest Mendum,	John E. Remsburg,	E. H. Heywood,	Mrs. M. A. Freeman,
Elizur Wright,	Charles Watts,	Franklin Steiner,	Otto Wettstein,	Katie Kehm Smith,
T. C. Leland,	G. W. Foote,	J. D. Shaw,	Stephen Pearl Andrews,	Lucy N. Colman,
T. B. Wakeman,	Saladin,	E. A. Stevens,	James Parton,	Lillian Leland,
Judge C. B. Waite.	J. R. Monroe,	H. L. Green,	Abner Kneeland,	Amy Post.

and other men and women who have contributed to the advancement of Freethought and whose names should be remembered throughout the Liberal ranks. There will also be about

ONE HUNDRED BIOGRAPHIES,

and in these will be given a picture of Freethought progress which will be most interesting and valuable, for it is in individuals that we find the best interpretations of the age.

The Price of This Superb Book is $5.00,

and not for the same amount of money can there be found such an array of facts, such a survey of history, and such a galaxy of Freethought.

Mr. Putnam is now devoting his whole time to this work and it will be published at the earliest possible moment.

The name of every Subscriber who sends five dollars before the work is on the press will be enrolled in this book. DON'T FAIL TO SUBSCRIBE AT ONCE.

This book will contain

Over Six Hundred Pages of Printed Matter and Over One Hundred Portraits.

It will be elegantly bound. It will be a book for the home and the fireside. It will be a book to give to your friends when they ask, What is Freethought—what has it done and what is it doing in the world?

This is the most universal presentation of Freethought ever given to the public, and no Freethinker can afford to be without it. It is a library in itself.

What Does It Involve?

What does the proposed Christian amendment to the Constitution contain? That is, what can be legitimately, logically, and legally deduced from it? Would it commit the nation to the acceptance of any fundamental dogma or dogmas of the Christian religion? What effect would it hav upon legislators, judges, and executiv officers in the performance of their respectiv duties? Should it be adopted, would the religious liberties of the citizen be more, or less, respected and secure than they are at present? Would it enable Christian, or pretended Christian, lawmakers and officials to oppress dissenters under the pretext of enforcing "moral" laws based, or asserted to be based, upon the Bible?

In attempting to answer these questions we shall go for information and exegesis directly to the official representativs of the National Reform Association. We shall let them tell our readers what this proposed amendment means and what they hope to secure for the church by its adoption. Out of their mouths we shall judge and condemn it.

In the first place, is the form of the amendment satisfactory to the Covenanter church and its executiv, the National Reform Association? The Christian Reformer, whose senior editor is David McAllister, treasurer of the Association, says:

"We are fully persuaded that no form of amendment has ever been proposed that includes so comprehensivly all the relations of a nation to God and Christ and the Bible. This form of amendment will bear study; and the more carefully it is examined in the light of God's word and the principles of political science, the more clearly will its greater fullness and accuracy of statement be seen."

Rev. R. C. Wylie, a corresponding secretary of the National Reform Association, fills nearly two pages of the Christian Reformer of February 24 with an analysis and exposition of the amendment. We will see what he says.

Mr. Wylie is unusually frank. Generally the defenders of the existing connection between church and state and the advocates of new bonds of union claim that all they want is an association of religion and the state; they do not wish, they aver, to hav the law recognize any particular church; they will be satisfied, they contend, if the fundamentals of religion are made parts of the organic law and respected in legislation. To this the opponents of Sunday laws, Bible in the schools, and Christian amendments hav always answered that any recognition by the state of a Christian dogma is to that extent a union of church and state; that all affirmations concerning sacred books, holy days, gods, and saviors are essentially theological and can be made nothing else, no matter how ingenious and ingenuous the arguments of their advocates. Now comes Mr. Wylie and candidly admits that theology and religion are one and inseparable, and that it is as much a theological as a religious amendment that he and his associates are striving to make a part of the Constitution. He is about to show us what this Christian amendment contains and involves, and in a preliminary way he writes the first paragraph below:

"The question for us to decide is, does it suitably express the Christian principles of civil government? In determining this matter let us consider, first of all, the theology of it. We find in this proposed form the following theological truths:

"1. The supreme authority of God in all the affairs of men and nations. . . .

"2. The just government of God in the affairs of men and nations. Whatever calamities come upon nations, they come under God's government and they come justly. National judgments fall not only upon the nation as a body, but also upon individuals and families. Hence the individual as well as the social aspect of divine providences is here taught. The righteous often suffer because of their connection with a sinful nation. The righteous character of God's government, when he sends prosperity, is also involved in the language of this amendment.

"3. The mediatorial authority of the Lord Jesus Christ. The expression 'encouraged by the assurances of his word to invoke his guidance as a Christian nation, according to his appointed way, by Jesus Christ,' is exceeding rich. [Yes, it is!] Having already acknowledged God's supreme authority, the next thing to do is to put the nation in right relation to that authority. This part of the amendment teaches that God guides, governs, controls nations in an appointed way by Jesus Christ. . . . The bare acknowledgment of Christ's authority is not sufficient. He is most highly honored when he is recognized as the appointed One.

"4. The undivided Christ is recognized in this amendment. It is a mistake to divide the mediatorial offices, and to assign the kingly office to the nation to the exclusion of the prophetic and priestly offices. He is the Prophet of the nation, not only in giving law, but also in giving encouragements and warnings. He is the nation's Priest. If not, there is no forgivness for national sin. He is undivided in his mediatorial office, and this amendment so regards him.

"5. The Divine Word is recognized in its entire relation to the nation. The Bible is law, and it is more. This amendment says, 'encouraged by the assurances of his word to invoke his guidance,' etc. It is true that the word 'assurance' means neither law, admonition, nor warning. But whatever it assures the nation of that would be of use in its guidance, is certainly involved in this expression. The nation is here speaking. It is invoking divine guidance. It is encouraged so to do by what it finds in the word. What is assured to the nation in the word that has anything to do with its guidance? Surely the idea of law, as well as promis and warning, is here involved. The Bible in its whole bearing on the nation is here recognized."

We make these lengthy quotations because it is necessary that all lovers of liberty should understand fully what the theocratic conspirators aim to accomplish. All these theological tenets will enter into and form a part of the organic law if the amendment is accepted by three-fourths of the states, and will be enforced through statute law by the federal and local governments. As we proceed in our examination of Rev. Mr. Wylie's exposition of the Morse-Frye amendment, we shall find that it is the intention and expectation of the National Reformers that these basic dogmas of the Trinitarian Christian church be accepted and enforced by all having anything to do with the creation, adjudication, and administration of civil law. This means that the Bible—or, rather, the Christian majority's interpretation of it—will be the real organic law of this nation. This means the control of the state by the church. This means the persecution of dissenters of all classes. This means the suppression of free speech, the gagging of the press, the blocking of the wheels of progress, the stagnation of thought, the return of the Millennium of Ignorance, when

> "Earth groaned beneath religion's iron age,
> And priests dared babble of a God of peace,
> E'en while their hands were red with guiltless blood,
> Murdering the while, uprooting every germ
> Of truth, exterminating, spoiling all,
> Making the earth a slaughter-house."

Mr. Wylie considers next the political philosophy of the amendment. He says:

"1. It teaches the moral personality of the nation. . . .

"2. It teaches that the authority exercised in ordaining a constitution of government is derived from God. It should be carefully noted that the people, according to this amendment, acknowledge God's authority in all the affairs of nations, while in the act of ordaining a constitution. Manifestly they acknowledge that they ordain the Constitution by virtue of a delegated power.

"3. There is here an acknowledgment that the nation is subject to God in Christ. A Christian nation is represented in this amendment as invoking divine guidance by Jesus Christ. This is the recognition, by the nation, acting wholly in the political sphere, of the important and profound theological truth, that God deals with nations through the Mediator.

"4. We hav here a covenant relation established between the nation and God. The expression 'to invoke his guidance,' etc., places the nation in precisely the right relation to God in Christ. It is far more than a bare acknowledgment of Christ. Acknowledgment is not enough. When applicants for membership in the church are examined, we demand more than an acknowledgment of truth. We require an acceptance of truth, and of THE TRUTH, JESUS CHRIST. When the Christian nation is here represented as invoking divine guidance by Jesus Christ, it is represented as doing far more than merely acknowledging him as King. There is here a formal acceptance of him as the Mediatorial Prophet, Priest, and King of the nation. The language means, not only that the nation invokes through Christ, but also that it invokes guidance through or by Christ.

"5. The fact that moral issues arise in the sphere of national life and are to be settled by the Word of God, is here recognized. This thought will be presently considered more fully."

Yes, this amendment involves far more than the mere acknowledgment of Jesus. It "demands" the ACCEPTANCE of Jesus Christ as "Prophet, Priest, and King," and woe be to the doubter who cannot accept him as such. For this doubter the pains and penalties of civil law, aye, even the tortures of the Inquisition, if less appalling terrors do not suffice to prevent the expression of heretical opinions.

"The amendment from a practical point of view" next receives Secretary Wylie's attention. He asks:

"1. How would it be regarded by legislators? Suppose a moral issue were before the national legislature. Let it be the Sabbath, the saloon, the divorce, or any other moral issue. During the discussion, let some one read from the preamble of the Constitution the words, 'encouraged by the assurances of his Word to invoke his guidance as a Christian nation, according to his appointed way by Jesus Christ, our Lord.' Would any member of Congress be so obtuse as to fail to see the propriety and the duty of appealing to the Bible to settle the question? If it should be maintained that this form of amendment does not make it obligatory to appeal to the Bible to settle the question, it should be remembered that the preamble is not the place for a statement of an obligatory character.

"2. How would the judiciary regard this amendment? If they should take the oath sincerely they would regard themselvs as bound to seek God's guidance through Christ in all their judicial proceedings. It would be impossible for a court to declare, with a good conscience, a moral statute, framed in harmony with the morals of the Bible, to be unconstitutional.

"3. How would it be regarded by the executiv department? As bound to be guided by God in Christ in all official duties, and to enforce all moral statutes framed in harmony with it."

Undoubtedly the member of Congress would "see the propriety" of "appealing to the Bible" to settle vexing political questions if the clause quoted by Mr. Wylie were in the Constitution, and a vigilant priesthood were busying itself in giving "advice" and "counsel" to the law-makers. And be sure the priesthood would never fail to do its part. All it needs now is more legal rope with which to bind and strangle religious freedom. Giv it the amendment and it will very quickly compel the legislativ rope-walks to manufacture all the cords and cables it wants. The thoughtful reader will not hav failed to note that Mr. Wylie more than hints all this when he says that if it is asserted that this form of amendment does not make obligatory an appeal to the Bible by the lawmakers, "it should be remembered that the preamble is not the place for a statement of an obligatory character." Of course we understand what this means: Incorporate into the preamble of the Constitution the National Reformers' amendment, and Congress and the legislatures will soon be cajoled or bullied into putting into the statute-books all the "statements of an obligatory character" that the Covenanters desire. Think of it, free men and women of the United States! Here are large and powerful organizations purposing to so change the fundamental and statute laws of our country that Congress and the state legislativ bodies will be compelled to appeal to the Bible for authority for their acts! And these men—most of them—hav the audacity to claim that this would not be a union of church and state!

This Christian authoritativ interpreter of the pending amendment continues:

"There can be no question that the great mass of the people, Christians, Jews, and Infidels, would regard this amendment as making the nation, by profession, distinctivly Christian."

Yes, that is so. And with the nation "distinctivly Christian," what becomes of our boasted liberty of conscience? Of what worth to us are the struggles and sacrifices and martyrdoms of the past? What hope for the future? This monster of Theocracy must be choked to death by us, or it will destroy our every remaining free institution and enslave our children and children's children.

Mr. Wylie concludes his exposition with these words: "No form of amendment has ever been proposed that is so full, and so completely in harmony with the Bible as this." We are free to admit that it is a very carefully constructed series of affirmations, and it could not easily be so drafted as to contain more potentialities of evil than it does now.

Dr. McAllister follows Mr. Wylie's article with a few laudatory sentences and then adds:

"Of course it is possible that if the proposed amendment were in the preamble of the Constitution to-day, a judge might be found who would interpret it with a scale and scope of vision like that of an inverted microscope rather than with 'eminent historical and philosophical comprehension,' and through the medium of the discolored and distorted lenses of prejudice rather than through the translucent and symmetrical glasses of 'serene candor.' But after the years of discussion that must elapse before this amendment can become part of the Constitution, its whole meaning and force will be so clearly understood as to render impossible any interpretation that would strip it of even a part of its thorough-going national Christian character."

That is to say: It might now be possible to find a judge who is more or less influenced by the nobler traditions of the Republic and who yet holds with some degree of tenacity to the Fathers' ideas of religious equality and civil liberty, and who therefore would be unlikely to construe such an amendment to the Constitution in harmony with the wishes of the theocrats, but that, after the passage of the years which must precede the contemplated change in the Constitution, the courts of the nation would be so completely in the hands and indoctrinated with the reactionary principles of the ecclesiastical party that no judge would hav sufficient ability, honesty, or courage to so interpret the poisoned Constitution as to "strip it of even a part of its thoroughgoing national Christian character." We believe that Dr. McAllister will be proved to be a true prophet if the coming "years of discussion" so miseducate the people that they accept the proposed amendment, but we suggest to the reverend gentleman and his fellow-conspirators that it is just possible that when the "whole meaning and force" of this treasonable scheme are "clearly understood" it will be buried in the grave of disgrace by an enlightened and indignant people. And we assure these apostles of the reaction that they will hav our earnest co-operation in the work of making "clearly understood" the meaning, purpose, and scope of their wretched plot for the overthrow of this republic.

Christian Amendment Lobbyists Packing Committees.

Rev. H. H. George, chief of the National Reform Association and American Sabbath Union representativ in Washington, has a letter headed, "Stirring News from Washington," in the Christian Reformer of March 3d. And the "news" is indeed "stirring." He makes some statements that are simply astounding.

He begins his report of a day's labor with, "Well, I hav gotten in some splendid work to-day." What this preacher calls "splendid" work an ordinary politician would designate wire-pulling, and the world would add that it was wire-pulling of the most unscrupulous sort. He says that he first met Judge Culberson, chairman of the House Committee on the Judiciary, who said he would do all he could to secure the Reformers a prompt and full meeting of the Committee. Then he saw Representativ Stone of Pennsylvania, who "is most cordial and hearty, and says he will do everything he can to get the Committee together, and will help us in every way he can." Mr. Stone is surprised that some members of the Committee are opposed to the amendment; he does "not see how they can be, for it is right." Mr. Wolverton of Pennsylvania is seen; he is "quite as cordial and hearty," "will help all he can," and "volunteered to gather the Committee."

Then Mr. George went over to the other end of the capitol, and got in some of his ward caucus thimble-rigging. He saw Judge Pugh, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and found that gentleman "most cordial." Mr. George asked him if he would appoint his sub-committee for Wednesday. Why, certainly he would; "glad to accommodate us." Rev. Mr. George continues his charmingly frank narrativ. "And after a little very pleasant conversation, I said, 'Judge, would it be improper, as I am acquainted with Senator Wilson, of Iowa, to suggest that he be one of the sub-committee?'" Instead of telling the clerical lobbyist that such a request was highly improper, and that he could not for a moment think of packing the sub-committee in the interest of any combination, Chairman Pugh responded with alacrity, "He shall be so appointed, at your request." We do not believe that Senator Pugh will thank Mr. George for telling the whole country about this little game. The most hardened Tammanyite would blush to make such a confession. Packing a jury is morally and legally a crime, and packing a committee is the same morally, even if it is not legally. Is this a sample of the "purification of politics" that the "reign of Christ over the nation" is to giv us? If so, release McKane from Sing Sing at once; he will be a capital heeler for the National Reformers.

Mr. George went from Senator Pugh to Senator Wilson, whom he apprised of his assignment to the sub-committee. The Iowa Senator "accepted it kindly; will be very willing to serve, and his heart is right on all such questions." Mr. Elijah Morse, of Massachusetts, was the next friend of the amendment seen, and was found "brimful of interest." He at once called his stenographer, and dictated a letter to each member of the committee, insisting (he is not a member of the committee) that each one should be there on Tuesday morning.

"He also sent word to Culberson saying that the two hours of that day would be for the friends of the cause; and if there should be opponents present, they might look out for another time. [Does Mr. Morse run all the committees in that way?—ED. T. S.] I said: 'Would it not be better for us to divide the time with them and meet them?' 'No,' he said, 'you hav the grip on the subject; hold to it, and put in all your force. If they should get another time, we can perhaps be heard again. You must come that week prepared to stay all week.'"

What do you think of all this, Freethinkers and honest Christians who love religious liberty and believe in fair play in politics?

We gave in our issue of February 17th a list of the members of the Judiciary Committees of the two Houses. We reproduce them here.

Senate: James L. Pugh, Alabama (chairman); Richard Coke, Texas; James Z. George, Mississippi; William F. Vilas, Wisconsin; David B. Hill, New York; William Lindsay, Kentucky; George F. Hoar, Massachusetts; James F. Wilson, Iowa; Henry M. Teller, Colorado; Orville H. Platt, Connecticut; John H. Mitchell, Oregon.

Address letters, petitions, and telegrams to (giving name of Senator) "Senate Judiciary Committee, Washington, D. C."

House: David B. Culberson, Texas (chairman); William C. Oates, Alabama; Thomas R. Stockdale, Mississippi; Isaac H. Goodnight, Kentucky; Charles J. Boatner, Louisiana; Fernando C. Layton, Ohio; Simon P. Wolverton, Pennsylvania; Edward Lane, Illinois; Joseph W. Bailey, Texas; William L. Terry, Arkansas; David A. De Armond, Missouri; George W. Ray, New York; H. Henry Powers, Vermont; Case Broderick, Kansas; William A. Stone, Pennsylvania; Thomas Updegraff, Iowa; Robert A. Childs, Illinois.

Address letters, petitions, and telegrams to (giving name of Representativ) "House Judiciary Committee, Washington, D. C."

The Congressional Record shows that petitions in favor of the amendment are pouring into Congress. Checkmate them with counter-petitions!

Sabbatarianism Rampant in State and Nation.

Another state supreme court has swung into line in the ranks of Sunday despotism. That of Michigan has affirmed the constitutionality of the barbers' Sunday-closing act of the last legislature. No wonder the Sabbatarians are exultant and insolent. They hav not sustained a defeat for years. They hav won an uninterrupted series of victories over the friends of equal human rights. When will the tide turn?

On February 15th Senator Gallinger of New Hampshire introduced the following bill in the United States Senate:

"A bill to protect the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, as a day of rest and worship in the District of Columbia.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representativs of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That on the first day of the week, known as the Lord's day, set apart by general consent in accordance with divine appointment as a day of rest and worship, it shall be unlawful to perform any labor, except works of necessity and mercy and work by those who religiously observe Saturday, if performed in such a way as not to involve or disturb others; also to open places of business or traffic, except in the case of drug stores for the dispensing of medicins; also to make contracts or transact other commercial business; also to engage in noisy amusements or amusements for gain, or entertainments for which admittance fees are charged; also to join in public processions, except funerals, which last shall not use music; also to perform any court service, except in connection with arrests of criminals and service of process to prevent fraud.

"Sec. 2. That the penalty for violating any provision of this act shall be a fine of not less than $10 for the first offense; for second or subsequent offenses, a fine not exceeding $50, and imprisonment for not less than ten nor more than thirty days, and one year's forfeiture of license, if any is held by the offender or his employer."

This was read twice and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. It is Senate bill No. 1628. The information reaches us that the notorious Henry W. Blair, of New Hampshire, is to introduce the same bill in the House. He will also introduce a national Sunday law.

It will be noticed that the bill for the District of Columbia excepts the Seventh-Day Adventists from its burdens and penalties. This is intended, undoubtedly, to purchase their silence, but it is certain that it will do nothing of the sort. The American Sentinel says that "Congress has no right to pass such a bill either with or without an exemption. The principle is wrong and no amount of exemption can make it right." This is the only position resting on the solid bedrock of justice and constitutional religious liberty.

The bill is an iniquitous thing from beginning to end. But it has one thing to commend it: It frankly says that it is in the interest of the churches. To be sure, the word "rest" is introduced, both in the title and body, but that signifies nothing more than the desire of its writer and promoters to throw dust in the eyes of the people who are called "laborers," and thus secure their assistance. We should know, of course, that it is meant to bolster up religion even if the word "worship" were entirely absent, but its presence says to all the nation that the bill is a religious one. The "Sabbath" worshipers are growing bolder and bolder year by year. They are greatly encouraged by their late success in Congress and their swiftly-recurring triumphs in the courts, and think they do not need to protest so much against the charge of wishing and promoting legislation directly in the interest of the church.

The forthcoming bill for national punishment of Sunday work (and presumably recreation) will probably include provisions forbidding the carrying and distribution of mails, and the running of trains, boats, etc., on Sunday. What else will be included in its inhibitions we can only guess, but we may be sure the Sunday autocrats will not be modest in their demands. All these actual and prospectiv bills for the curtailment of our natural and constitution-guaranteed rights admonish us that we must not go to sleep on duty. It is a time for stern and unremitting work rather than words, but words must precede action as thought should precede words. Watch the Christian amendment! Watch the Gallinger and Blair bills! Write and telegraph to Congressmen and Senators.

The Senate Committee on Education and Labor, to which has been referred the Gallinger District of Columbia bill, consists of James H. Kyle, South Dakota (chairman); James Z. George, Mississippi; Eppa Hunton, Virginia; Donelson Caffery, Louisiana; Edward Murphy, Jr., New York; Joseph M. Carey, Wyoming; William D. Washburn, Minnesota; Henry Cabot Lodge, Massachusetts; George C. Perkins, California.

This week's paper is dated March 10, but as we go to press Tuesday night (March 6), we hav no report from the hearing on the Christian amendment before the House Committee on the Judiciary.

The National Reform Association is receiving plenty of money these days. Week before last the treasurer reported the receipt of about $370, of which more than $160 was for amendment work in Washington. The enemy will be able to distribute hundreds of thousands of documents each week.

A meeting in the interest of the Covenanters' amendment was held in Boston, February 27th. Joseph Cook, Rev. Dr. Plumb, Rev. A. J. Gordon, D.D., were some of the speakers. "It is expected that Boston will speak out emphatically at the hearing at Washington, March 6th," quotes the Christian Statesman of March 3d. The enemy is alive and aggressiv.

The East Grand Forks Courier says that the people of that town and Grand Forks hav united in a call to the people of the two cities to join in prayer to God that he will "direct the physicians and nurses and restore the sick and comfort the bereaved, that the present epidemic may be stayed." The Courier thinks the advice is timely, and adds: "But for the love of God and humanity, boil the water, too." Boil the water first, and then pray, if you must.

It is significant that such Christian papers as the Independent and Christian Advocate do not say a word about the Morse-Frye amendment. They favor Sunday laws, and know that the amendment would make such laws constitutional, but not a sign do they giv of their attitude toward the amendment. Why? Are they waiting to see if the Covenanters are going to make substantial headway, before they commit themselvs to the treasonable movement? They cannot consistently oppose the amendment and yet fend Sunday laws. Are they frightened by the ogic of their position? If not, why do they not speak out frankly?

A large number of extremely pious people object to the selection of March 23d ("Good Friday") by Judge Brentano for the execution of Prendergast, assassin of Carter Harrison, because this day is "reverenced almost universally for its one preordained execution!" It would not seem to be necessary to suggest to these unduly sensitiv folk that if Prendergast is hanged on Good Friday it will simply prove that there were at least two "preordained" executions billed for that day, and so no harm would result, as it is fairly to be presumed that what God preordains he wishes to hav come to pass. Let the sheriff of Cook county proceed; if Prendergast was preordained to be hanged on March 23d he certainly will be, and if he was preordained not to be hanged on that day, the sheriff will be notified in due time. We'll warrant this to be good theology.

Next week (March 17) our readers will hav the pleasure of perusing another installment of Charles Watts's "Freethought and Secular Notes." He tells us something more about "The Atheist Shoemaker," enabling all to see how completely Mr. George W. Foote has exposed Hugh Price Hughes's tergiversations; and there is much else in his letter of living interest to all Freethinkers. Week after next (March 24) we shall begin the publication of a series of articles on "Church Property," giving the reasons why it should not be exempt from taxation, tables showing the wealth of all denominations in the United States and in the several states and territories and all cities having more than twenty-five thousand inhabitants, and various other items of information in connection with the great question of equality of taxation. Subsequently these articles on church taxation are to be put into a pamphlet which we intend shall be a hand-book for all who are working for the abolition of theological deadheadism.

Dr. Atwood in the Christian Leader (Universalist) takes issue with the Outlook in its contention that religion can be taught in the schools without inculcating dogma. The Outlook says that Jesus did not teach theology, to which Dr. Atwood replies that Jesus was a teacher; that "a teacher teaches something, doctrins; if they are religious doctrins they are theology. It is quite time that the nonsense about Jesus not being a teacher of theology were remanded to the intellectual owls and bats — i. e., the unalloyed sentimentalists." Amen! And now, Dr. Atwood, please take hold and help us banish this theology from the common schools.

The Christian Reformer compliments the Investigator and THE TRUTH SEEKER very highly in this paragraph:

"Who are the legitimate enemies of the Christian amendment? This is not a difficult question to answer. For example, the organs of Atheism and Infidelity hav promptly shown their dark colors in most bitter opposition. The Investigator, of Boston, indulges in a most blasphemous attack, not only upon the proposed amendment, but upon the God of the Bible. And THE TRUTH SEEKER, of New York, a kindred sheet, is all aflame in the intensity of its anti-Christian and Atheistic hostility. These sheets are filled, week after week, with advertisments and cartoons and brief notes and longer articles, assailing the Bible, vilifying its most exalted characters, calumniating its inspired writers, libeling and defaming its code of morals, and blaspheming in the most horrifying manner the divine author of revelation and man's salvation. We shall not defile our columns with quotations from these blasphemous sheets. It is enough simply to indicate their character, in order that it may be known just what kind of company other opponents of the Christian amendment will hav. Is it not one of the best reasons why all respectable citizens, of whatever name or creed they may be, should pause before joining in any cause that will make them the associates and helpers of such a host as the Boston Investigator and the New York TRUTH SEEKER will lead into the conflict? These will be the chief opponents of the Christian amendment at the hearing before the Judiciary Committee of the House on March 6th. Who will be their helpers? We wait with no little interest for the answer to this inquiry."

Of course the latter part of this is intended to scare off the Christian and indifferentist opponents of the amendment. And no doubt it will hav its effect upon some well-meaning but timid believers in the Bible. The Infidel bête noire will be exploited more and more as the conflict deepens in intensity and bitterness. This will be an advantage to the cause of Freethought ultimately, for fair-minded Christians will not be slow to see that while Christian organizations and papers are doing all that lies in their power to convert a once free republic into a theological despotism the Freethought societies and papers are in the front battling for equality of opportunities, for the freedom of conscience, for the right of private judgment.

FROM Jan. 28th to Feb. 28th, J. E. Remsburg delivered thirty-five lectures. While in the east Mr. Remsburg was invited to speak in Boston, Philadelphia, and Brooklyn, but owing to previous engagements at other points was unable to visit those cities.

THE Brooklyn Philosophical Association holds meetings every Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in Long Island Business College, South Eighth street, between Bedford and Driggs avenues. Program of lectures for March:

March 4th—"The Future Civilization," Jas. A. Skilton.
March 11th—"Locomotion as Related to Life and Survival," Dr. M. L. Holbrook.
March 18th—"A Sermon to Liberals on Religion and Church," Dr. J. H. Duren Ward.
March 25th—"Moral Philosophy," Henry Rowley.

MR. SKILTON was the speaker at the Brooklyn Philosophical Association last Sunday afternoon. He read a paper on "The Future Civilization;" also a paper written by Herbert Spencer and read before the Congress of Evolutionists at Chicago. The association is able to report favorably concerning the mid-week classes. Ten members are now engaged in the study of logic, and it is expected to take up shortly the study of comparativ religions, origin of Christianity, morality, and philosophy. All Freethought societies permanently organized might do the same, and thus train the young minds for effectiv work in the cause of Liberalism.

Noted by the Editor.

The witchcraft delusion is not yet dead in this country. Right here in this city, the Age, the leading organ of the colored people, and an ably-edited paper, has two or more columns each week of advertisments of witch doctors. And such advertisments may be found in journals published in the other cities of the Union.

The new Parish Councils bill, passed by the House of Commons, contained a provision that the councils should never meet in a public-house (saloon). In the Lords this clause was stricken out, every bishop present voting for the amendment. We should like to know what Rev. Mr. Funk, of the Voice, thinks of this action of the English bishops.

The Christian Advocate, speaking of the numerous deaths caused by the sudden and unexpected shutting up of folding beds, advises its readers to "sell them, giv them away, reconstruct them, or, at least prop them up." It is quite evident that Dr. Buckley is obedient to the orders of his God, for the first two clauses in which his advice is embodied are an almost exact echo of the Biblical command relating to the disposition of spoiled meat.

"The teachings, the procedure, the forms, the structure of the Catholic church are identically what they were when the first Catholic priest raised the cross on American soil."—Cardinal Gibbons.

If this is so the Catholic church is in the highest degree dangerous. It is a menace to the happiness, liberty, and life of every non-Catholic citizen of the republic. No enemy of that church could by any possibility say of it anything more severe than Cardinal Gibbons has in the words quoted. What it was when Columbus landed in America the world knows, and if it is the same to-day it is the cruel, unscrupulous enemy of light and liberty. All its fine professions of love for free institutions are then the veriest falsehoods.

Compare these two statements and tell us which authority you think is better qualified to speak advisedly of the actual position and the real intentions of the Catholic church:

"Those who will compare the present attitude of the Catholic church, as manifested by the bishops and by its organs, with that of a century ago, cannot but be sensible of a very great change in its position."—New York Independent (Protestant).

"You must remember that the Catholich church is the oldest institution in this country. Here, as in the Old World, with the passage of time, everything else has changed. Her organization, her principles, her doctrins, her rites, are precisely the same to-day as they were when Columbus first landed."—Cardinal Gibbons (Catholic).

"Atheism is a flowerless and leafless tree. The white bird of hope never lights upon it."—Rev. M. M. Mangasarian.

That is merely your opinion. There are those who see the very things—the flowers and the leaves, with the white bird of Hope in the midst thereof—which you declare do not exist. Doubtless for you they are non-existent, but do not forget that people are not organized alike, and that the conception of the cosmos which to one seems barren and dreary is to another fruitful of splendid aspirations and lights the way of life with a radiance soft and glowing. We may some day find what will seem to us a truer and more acceptable philosophy than Atheism, but so far we hav received no evidence of its existence.

"Really speaking, there are no Atheists, for there is no life without a purpose, without hope and faith and love."—Rev. M. M. Mangasarian.

This is a fair sample of the logic of the "Liberal" minister. As though one must believe in a God in order to hav a purpose in life, or to hav hope for the morrow of himself and of humanity, or faith in justice and mercy, or love for the lovable. What of Charles Bradlaugh? Who that believed in God worked more determinedly than this Atheist to destroy injustice, to establish liberty, to educate and elevate the people of England? What of W. Kingdon Clifford? What of Ludwig Büchner? What of Ernst Haeckel? What of the hundreds and thousands less distinguished but not less devoted and tender and steadfast?

"We hav long failed to understand why it is that a man who goes about the country lecturing against Catholicism should be in danger of being mobbed, while Colonel Ingersoll can go about the country lecturing against Christianity of all sorts and be treated with indifference."—N. Y. Independent.

Probably this is partly explainable by each of two facts: Colonel Ingersoll confines himself to attacks upon the fundamental principles of all religions, while most of those who lecture against Catholicism only are "ex"-something or other, whose stock in trade is "exposure," and whose language can be compared with that used by Colonel Ingersoll under the law of contrast alone. Then most of those criticised by the anti-Catholic lecturers belong to a race which has never been noted for its willingness to amicably discuss differences.

We wish to commend the observance of "Museum Sunday" in England to the thoughtful attention of Wilbur F. Crafts, Herrick Johnson, T. P. Stevenson, and other clerical gentlemen who are so fearful that God will smite this country with the besom of destruction if parks, museums, libraries, and other places of recreation and instruction are open on Sunday. The movement was inaugurated by the Sunday Society in 1892, the object being to help secure the Sunday opening of the national museums and art galleries in London. Then nineteen sermons were preached in aid of this object. On the second occasion of the observance of the custom forty-three sermons were preached, and it was announced that eighty art galleries and museums in the metropolis and in the smaller cities are now open regularly on the first day of the week. Rev. Jas. C. Street said at Birmingham that "the Sabbatic spirit which closed the great libraries, galleries, and museums was hostil to the spirit of true religion." We should like to see the commentary upon this of Congressman Morse, of Massachusetts.

There was recently a gathering of orthodox ministers in San Francisco. There does not appear to be anything wonderful in this, but when we add that these ministers invited Prof. Joseph Le Conte to present his views on evolution it will be seen that the assembly was something out of the ordinary. That clergyman should listen respectfully and without protest in their own meeting to the advocacy of such heretical views indicates that somebody has received a new revelation. Dr. Jacob Voorsanger, a prominent Jewish rabbi, applauded the arguments of Professor Le Conte, and stated that he accepted the theory of evolution. Prof. David Starr Jordan, who, as the Oakland Times remarks, "has recently admitted the monkey into fellowship and kinship with the human family," was also present. The Times further observes: "True, there is nothing incendiary in the theory of evolution, only it disturbs many musty doctrins, and, without being aggressiv or obtrusiv, wipes the whole book of Genesis off the slate of both Christianity and Judaism." No, this is not incendiary, but it burns up a lot of rubbish.

We hav previously noted some of the utterances of Rev. Compton Reade, and now we will quote him once more. He thinks that "the last and most fatal error of all" in the defense of religion in England, "concerns primary education." He has observed "that the school-board [public] system gave an enormous impetus to Nonconformity in London and elsewhere; hence the whole energy of Nonconformists has been directed toward" the extension of this system. "What is the result?" he dramatically inquires, and answers: "In some board schools the Bible tabooed; in others, the holy volume read, minus comment; in others, with what is termed undenominational teaching. Education, by a startling paradox, is being slowly divorced from religion, and this at the instance of the teachers and preachers of Christianity!" This is certainly a pleasing report, but we should say that the paradox is found in the fact that Christians are helping to do this good work, not merely in the fact that it is being done, as Mr. Reade phrases it. The divorce of primary education from religious instruction is not at all paradoxical, but it is very necessary.

The American Sentinel, quoting with words of commendation the greater part of our editorial, "the Cloven Hoof of the 'Sabbath' Satan," mildly says:

"In this article THE TRUTH SEEKER errs only in applying the name 'Christian' to things essentially antichristian. There are, properly speaking, no 'Christian persecutors;' and Sunday, instead of being Christian, is essentially pagan and papal."

We cheerfully admit that Sunday was a "pagan" holiday or holy day, and that Constantine initiated its observance by law among Christians. There is nothing in the New Testament which in terms warrants the Christian in observing it himself or compelling others to observe it as a Sabbath. So far we are fully in accord with the Adventists. But it must be remembered that Christianity is not to be judged by the Bible alone. It has a history, a continuous life through many centuries. The name "Christian" is to be interpreted not so much by the personality and teachings of the Nazarene as by the whole body of doctrins and the acts of the churches which hav borne the name until now. So interpreted, we cannot escape the conclusion that Sunday is a Christian institution. "We are confronted with a condition, not a theory." We sympathize with the efforts of our Adventist contemporary to bring its fellow Christians to the point of admitting that Sunday is not sanctioned by New Testament precepts and teachings, but nevertheless we cannot deny to tl em the name of Christian, for they are historically justified in claiming and wearing it. Messrs. Jones, McKee, and Bollman must bear in mind that, measured by the rule of faith in the promises and obedience to the commands of Jesus, they are themselvs no more Christians than the members of any other sect. Yet we willingly call them Christians, for if they and the others who lay claim to it are not entitled to the appellation there are no Christians in the world.

The logic of a gospel of exclusiv salvation leads inevitably to the Inquisition, as we hav shown very recently in these columns. When Mr. Bollman avers that there are, "properly speaking, no 'Christian persecutors,'" he seemingly forgets that the whole bloody business of witchcraft torture and murder flowed as naturally and inevitably from the Bible as water runs downhill. And what is true of the witchcraft delusion is equally true of other horrible fruits of the Bible conception of man's relation to supernatural powers. Christianity, built upon the Bible, was the inspiration; Christians did the bloody work.

Sparks from the Lecture Field.

The warm, soft climate of southern Kansas seems to be very conduciv to the development of Freethought, for I hav received several invitations to lecture in different parts of the state, and also a "call" from El Reno, Okla. This "call," however, was not from the Lord, but from a man of sterling worth, Mr. J. L. Cooper. Until quite recently he was a resident of Wichita. Up to the time of his advent into El Reno the preachers had things pretty much their own way. They had even gone so far as to condemn card-playing and dancing by the members of their respectiv churches, and had passed resolutions to this effect at the meetings of their association. But the moment "Jake" got there trouble commenced for the parsons. He talked Freethought to the boys; these readily fell into line, and after a brief consultation it was unanimously decided to send for me. I responded with alacrity, and soon found myself in the new territory. Mr. Cooper was on hand to meet me with a span of fine horses and an elegant sleigh.

El Reno is scarcely four years of age, yet it has a population of as many thousands. In a country so young, the spirit of American enterprise and pluck may be seen at its best. I found that the town possessed several large buildings of brick and stone, including first-class hotels. It has a number of wholesale houses, which command a good trade from the interior. Its greatest beauty consists in the grand fact that it is full of Freethinkers. Its city council, its judges and attorneys, bankers and business men contribute their full quota to the ranks of Liberal thought. I gave three lectures here on the 14th, 15th, and 16th of February. Our first meeting well-nigh filled the little opera house, but on each succeeding night standing room was at a premium. At the lowest computation there were between six and seven hundred people present. The audiences were enthusiastic to a degree. Very few of them had heard a Freethought lecture before, and the common expression was, "Those are exactly the ideas that suit me." Two of the preachers were present, but although I had given them a pressing invitation to take the platform in opposition to what I had said, and had challenged them all to a joint debate, they remained silent. Their silence, however, will last just long enough for me to get away, and then I shall doubtless be consigned to a very warm place. The clergy generally prefer to fight an absent foe. They find it much easier and the victory more sure.

During this campaign I secured about forty new members for the Federation, and those who signed the constitution very speedily organized themselvs into a local Freethought society. I read to the audience our platform and principles, and as each new sentiment was uttered it was greeted with applause. At the head of those who are valuable lieutenants in the hosts of Freethought in El Reno are Jacob Cooper and his comrade in arms, Charles Geck. The latter is also one of the "city fathers." Besides these I might mention Al. Jennings, the county attorney; Gustav Thelen, president of the Stock Exchange bank, and his trustworthy cashier, M. Eichoff. Then we hav S. E. Clute and his brother Frank, A. F. Martin, E. E. Wallace, J. L. Stoneman, A. W. Cottey, W. P. Gaskell, G. W.

Keller, and F. A. Newell, with many others. These were the first Freethought lectures ever given in El Reno, but now, like Oliver Twist, the Liberals call for "more." The Freethought lecturer passing through the territory will always receive a warm welcome here. I got the local newsagent to take some copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator, and also obtained six new yearly subscribers for the former. I sold out my stock of pamphlets, and arranged for another supply to be sent to the town. This trip gave me new courage, new hope, new life.

On Friday morning, in company with Sid Clute, I rode over the plains to see the Indian schools at Darlington. We visited the schools and observed the methods by which the red-skinned children of the plains are taught the English language. Mr. I. W. Divier, the superintendent, took great pains to show us around the institution, and we found that the United States government is expending large sums upon the education and for the ultimate civilization of the Indian tribes. The children are for the most part of the Arapahoe tribe, with a small sprinkling of Comanches. The school was orderly throughout, and every command of the teacher met with prompt obedience. The children are taught to read, write, and sing, and also instructed in all branches of agricultural industry. Sewing machines are used, and the girls are taught to make the clothing worn by the younger children. The dining-room, laundry, and the domitories were visited, and the orderly neatness of the place indicates that in a few generations the Indians will lose their distinctiv tribal characteristics and be brought into closer touch with civilized methods of living. The roll of pupils is one hundred and eleven, and from the reports we learned that the average nearly equaled the enrolment. As a rule the tribes do not favor this educational system. They regard it as a departure from their ancestral habits. In some instances the parents hav refused to send their children to the schools, but when they apply to the agency for their supplies, they get none unless they hav conformed to the rule. In this way education is made compulsory. When I left El Reno for Wichita it was with the promis to return whenever an opportunity came.

Watch and Pray.

[If the above-named injunction, so frequently impressed upon Christians, had been reversed, and made to read thus, "Pray and watch—the result;" things might hav been different].

And so —— thou prayest softly. Thou
Hast asked the infinit to bow
And hear thee babble!
Could the brain
Of mortal man conceive a train
Of thought more impudently vain
Than this? That one poor grain of sand
From life's wide surface, lifts his hand,
And calls on the immutable
To shift his purpose, change his will.
With calm assurance!
Will yon sky,
Against whose brazen arch the cry
Of billions, cursed by every pain,
Has hammered ceaselessly and vain,
Be softened, that thy plaintiv plea,
Thus offered up on bended knee,
May gain admittance?
Will thy god,
Who heard the moan of nations, trod
By tyrant masters; saw the slaves
Sink manacled to countless graves;
And war's red ravage heap its slain
On every hill and every plain,
And nothing said—hav aught to say
To thee, because thou deign'st to pray?
. . . . . .
Can'st thou suppose that he who rends
The cities' hearts with earthquakes; sends
The cyclone fraught with ruin's breath;
The plague and famin white with death;
The storm, which hurls with one fell shock
A hundred ships on shore and rock,
While shrieks and groans and terror's prayer
Rise wild, but useless, on the air;
Can'st thou suppose a god like this
Is troubled by thy woe or bliss?
. . . . . .
Alas! my brother:—This belief
Was dangled in the arms of grief
And nurtured at the breast of fear!
And priesthoods hummed it in the ear
Of trusting ignorance and hope,
Still striving fretfully to grope
For things unseen. And when at last
The breath of reason blew her blast
On learning's trumpet—tore the tale
Of mystic fable like a veil
From dogma's dominance—What said
Earth's cowled and mitred? Ask the dead?
The dead whose tortured bodies fell
As thick as rain-drops from that hell,
The Inquisition. Question well
Those fair brave women who, in shame
That men would shudder but to name
Were torn and broken, till their breath
Grew mercifully hushed in death.
And when thou hearest what they say
Of what they suffered at the spleen
Of those who bade their fellows pray
And think, "these things had never been Had God so willed it."—Think again!
And ask thyself if all the shame
And woe accomplished in his name
Were impotent to move him; vain
To rouse his pity or his power
In that foul time, that awful hour,
When streams of blood and tears ran red
Between their banks of ghastly dead!
What hope, or thought, or chance can'st thou
For one mad moment entertain
Of luring him to lull thy pain,
Or hear thy supplication now?

COTTONOPOLIS, in London Freethinker.

Superstition's Favoritism.

Of all the unjust acts of government, that of exempting property, held by one sect or class, from taxation, is among the most prominent. This exemption can be upheld in no other way than by boldly asserting the favor of a few.

There is no difference between the recipients of this favor and the consequently imposed upon. They are all men, women, and children. Because a man believes in a creed makes him no different from any other man, and there is a variation between the silent believer and the paid preacher only in the way of business. Looking at exemption clearly, seeing it in a true light, is very different from viewing it from a point taken by bigotry, satisfaction, or benefit. From those positions wrong will appear right and what is truly correct will seem a perfect outrage. The moment a voice is raised in dispute, creed, coward, and credulity will uphold, hate, and defend. The one who dares to express his honest thought, or suggest for the benefit of the people, will be despised and slandered; will be hated and maligned. The probability is that sentiment will be expressed which, "in the last analysis, will say 'you should not tell what you think,' 'never mind your fellow-men,' 'work for us.'" Such a demand, of course, cannot be satisfied. We must work for our fellow-men, and can secure the greatest good to them by instituting the most honest government.

The particular division of exemption to which I refer is that of church property and clerical ownerships. The question is, is this property any different from any other property? The property is held, in one case, by a combination. Can this alter the property? It is held for the purpose of "getting money," and an alleged diffusion of what some are pleased to accept as the truth, and describe as coming from and teaching of a supreme being. This is in dispute. If it is left to argument, if it is left to reason, the deniers of this assumption undoubtedly hav the greatest amount of evidence in their favor. But laying aside all difference on the supposed truth of religion, it is only necessary to note that all do not agree; that there are many classes; that each class has its particular church.

The church has an object. It is a business affair, and each minister, priest, and so forth, is a business man in his (small) capacity. It is simply organized to accomplish a purpose. What difference is there between this and any other establishment to confer on it a legislativ favor? If the argument is taken on the stand of education, then why not exempt private schools, printers of "dailies," publishers of books, pamphlets, and writings of all kinds? If this is allowable we might continue the following into the exemption of paper mills and type foundries as necessaries to the printing trade; and still continuing with as much justification, travel through all the great divisions and sections of civilization. This argument from benefit is wholly inapt for the occasion. We cannot excuse exemption on these grounds. They are absurd.

It may be claimed as right, on the poor principle that it is desired by the people. So are goods, so is land, so are savings banks, and all commercial houses. There are greater desires for food than creed; a roof and clothing are a thousand times more necessary and useful than a church. If such a plea can be advanced it must relate to everything. Perfect dealings are demanded. We must follow the absolute.

The question is, hav we a right to exempt property from taxation, and if we hav, on what is the decision to hang, who will decide what property is to be exempt and why it should be? Who will decide belief? Is not the creed of one sect as precious to them as that of another? Why are not Freethought teachers exempt, and why not their property? Why are not Theosophists exempt, and why not their property? There are creeds, truer one than the other, but who will decide? Each one believes he is right, and each one believes the other wrong; yet we see no exemption in either case. Real reason, on the same lines, would compel the exemption of all taxation. Why should preference be given to Christianity? A garb, creed, or a little hypocrisy exempts. Is this a glory for the American people? Is it not apparent that this is partiality? These exemptions for the benefit of a few are detrimental to another many. Just in proportion as "benefit" is allowed to one set imposition rests on the other. The church property is of great value; the value should be returned to society. The recipients of this favor put the burden on the backs of those who labor hard through week and month, through days of weary work, and hours of tedious application. They would rather take from those who are struggling hard for it the value thus devoted to their selfishness.

It can be understood very easily why government institutions go untaxed. There is no sense in taxing what we raise taxes to support. But where there is no relation whatever to government, on what grounds can exemption be continued?

The Constitutional Amendment declares that no law respecting an establishment of religion should be instituted. Now either this is right or else it is wrong. If it is right that sects should be partially treated, in fact, paid for their belief, then the Constitutional Amendment is wrong and should be abolished. But if this is wrong, then Amendment No. 1 is right, and the necessary conclusion is that the state is wrong. If the state is wrong, this law, this class legislation, this partial conclusion, this diverted sect favor, this unjust exemption, should be abolished.

The amendment is right, the state is wrong. The government is for and is the people. It was not conceived for a division of society, it was not instituted for clergymen, it was not founded for mechanics, philosophers, Christians, Agnostics, or Infidels; it was formed for all the people. Every man, woman, and child was supposed to be equal. The proposition was to do justice. How could it hav been different? On what ground could preference be given to a class? Philosophers, investigators are of great value in finding the hidden and informing us of new-found facts, but in this case support is optional. A man may buy a philosophical work when he pleases and is not compelled by law to do so. Such a law would be considered monstrous. Suppose the government attempted to exempt Agnostics. There would be an awful time. The absurdity and injustice would be plainly shown under the irritation of non-political tenets. The same injustice would be shown more plainly if this scheme was limited to one creed, Catholic, or Presbyterian, or Universalist. The injustice lies in compelling one to pay for the others.

The Brooklyn Eagle gave in the last report (1893) of the board of assessors, $101,700 as ministerial exemption. Ministerial exemption, as explained, means the exemption from taxes to the amount of $1,500 on the holdings of ministers. The exemption of church property is $13,207,700. These, together with church parsonage, represent $13,444,100 taxes to come out of the poor man's pocket by indirect taxation.

If we hav any right to tax anyone for anything it is not justice to excuse some from the payment. There should be no party legislation. The sum of $13,444,100 would pay a vast amount of the debt of person to person. Objection is made to the thoroughfare being monopolized by railroads, yet we hear absolutely none regarding the land monopolized by church.

If there is reason to tax railroads for the monopolization of land, which they put to good use, though unintentionally, for the wealth-makers of Brooklyn—an act fully indorsed and recommended by the writer; then there is absolutely no reason, no basis on which to stand and assert the exemption of church, parsonage, and ministerial belongings. No more hav we a right to exempt a piece of land because a "house of God" is located thereon than to exempt the site of a banking establishment.

Where can be the justice in such legislation? This case cannot be compared with public libraries. They are for the diffusion of general knowledge. Churches are erected for the exposition of a special creed. The professors or instructors of a public institution are not exempted from the tax on their belongings to any amount. It is unjust. It is absurd. It is false. The falsity is apparent.

This result is the outcome of selfishness, of narrow-mindedness. It is devoid of all breadth. The broad-minded, the untrammeled, had nothing to do with this.

All that the church is relieved from falls on the poor. Those who builded are taxed on their wages received from the building. Those who paid the others to be taxed enjoy the benefit of their church, and are exempt so far as that structure is concerned. This law is an outrage, a crime. If they were honest the clergy would endeavor to repeal this law. Perhaps time will accomplish what reason has not. "Time makes more converts than reason." Perhaps we will see things changed in a few years. We may before long hav a system of justification. Perhaps when people see this legislation for a class, for a particular opinion, when they are aware of the real facts, they will repeal these infamous laws. Perhaps they will institute equity a president over legislativ action. Perhaps they will insist, with one accord, that ethics must determin every act, law, and order. LOUIS BOWERMAN.

Observations.

"Lady Cook, née Tennessee Claflin," is appearing in London as a contributor to the press, and articles over her name are printed in the Westminster Review and the Agnostic Journal. Her sister, Mrs. Victoria Woodhull Martin, also contributes a picture and a flattering sketch of herself to the Whitehall Review. These women had passed their glory here in New York before my arrival, but their reputation still lingered in the atmosphere. It did not tend to clarify that element. While yet in my minority I heard Mrs. Woodhull lecture in the Cooper Union, under the patronage, I think, of Mr. Cooper himself, on the "Garden of Eden." She then interpreted the first chapter of Genesis otherwise than geographically, locating that sacred patch in the vicinity of the female hypogastrium. I thought at the time that the lecture could hav been more appropriately delivered under the patronage of Mr. Harry Hill, but of course I was young then, and besides I had been imbued with a prejudice against the sort of place that Mr. Hill kept. He was afterwards raided by the police. Victoria recently brought suit against the British Museum for keeping on exhibition some earlier specimens of her literary work, whose authorship she repudiates. The papers report that she pays the costs.

Lady Cook, with whom Tennie C. has changed to Tennessee, affects moral and historical subjects, but those who knew her here say that she is illiterate and utterly incapable of writing anything, and that it is doubtful if she could read the articles appearing over her name without being terribly bored. But Vic and Tennie are achieving notoriety and are therefore presumably content.

My uncle Benjamin R. Tucker's Liberty, which last fall appeared likely to winter-kill, has sprouted again. It is a six-leaved product and will assert itself twice per month. It may be gathered from the editor's remarks that he regards our present governmental system as defectiv.

A lady rhymer, Helen E. Starrett, contributes a poem to the Interior, of which the following is the refrain:

And still, when come the bitter wintry nights,
And hungry, houseless, suffering men we see,
Stirred by a love and pity, like to thine,
We weep, dear Lord, with thee.

The mingled tears of the poet and the party addressed cannot possibly relieve the indigent persons alluded to. After this fashion, therefore, let Helen sing:

Dear Lord, though weak and having naught to spare,
We break a crust with each poor suffering one;
They are thine own, dependent on thy care—
Dear Lord, what hast thou done?

The good man's sons do never want for bread,
His daughters sink not to the depths of shame,
While by his utmost power they may be fed—
Are thine, dear Lord, the same?

Dear Lord, the earthly parent reasons right
That, having caused one of his kind to be,
He owes it shelter from the wintry night—
How is it, Lord, with thee?

Last Friday night, accompanied by Mrs. Badgepin and the Pledge of Affection which she presented to me in the latter part of 1890, I attended the regular weekly meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club. The lecturer was J. E. Remsburg; subject, "False Claims of the Church." Mr. Remsburg remarked at the outset that he had delivered the same address before the society ten years ago, hearing which announcement the Pledge composed himself in an attitude of rest and proceeded to sleep. I listened to the lecture at the time of its previous delivery, and enjoyed it, though I had theretofore set type on it and read it in manuscript, in proof, and in pamphlet form. But "False Claims," as with the "Age of Reason," will bear reading frequently, and Mr. Remsburg's voice, like the purling of a streamlet, never palls upon the ear.

I hav heard reports that the Liberal Club is getting out of Freethought latitudes, and that its members are running after strange gods, like Socialism, Nationalism, and other idols of modern superstition; but from the way Mr. Remsburg's address was applauded I judge that the impression is wrong. The club is not committed to Mr. Oppenheimer. The spirit of debate is still powerful, so much so that criticism of the minutes of the previous meeting, instead of correction, is invited by the presiding officer. A fakir known as Bror Sundeen, claiming a gift from the Almighty in the form of mind-reading power, entertains the audience at this week's seance of the club.

Although, on the whole, there are more disappointments in this life than there is any reasonable excuse for, we can still, in most cases, see how things might hav been worse. Thus are our misfortunes mitigated in a measure and their harshness modified. I know an estimable lady, now verging on maturity, whose hand has never been solicited in marriage, but among her confidential friends it is no secret that on one occasion she suffered an affront in the form of an offensiv proposition from a man. As the chances of her ever entering a desirable union grow less, the fact of the affront emerges oftener from its concealment in her bosom and has assumed almost the dignity of a disappointment in love. The proposition has also lost some of its offensivness, and the recollection of it may some day be tinged with regret that it could not be accepted under the circumstances. Do not, then, dear reader, make undue haste to extend your sympathy to the unhusbanded female. She may, like this one, cherish a romance that provides her with consolation which the world knows not of. The tender recollections of maiden ladies are often undervalued.

When John Y. McKane, the Gravesend political boss, convicted of criminal interference with election returns, reached Sing Sing last week the warden of that institution inquired what religion he professed. It is not understood that any religious test is required as a qualification for entering Sing Sing, though if there were the population of the place would not be materially diminished; but the invariable asking of the question is suggestiv. The warden does not inquire what kind of an Infidel you are, but what kind of a Christian. Although Christians are the salt of the earth; although religion is the only basis for morality, and although a belief in God and Christ is the only influence that can restrain men from committing crime—in spite of these accepted lies, the warden takes it for granted that the criminal is a church-member, though the fact that he is a convict does not indicate what denomination he belongs to. If the warden should always and first inquire if the convict was a Spiritualist, I think the adherents of the Beautiful Philosophy would raise a howl, and there would also be cause for objection if he should substitute Materialist for Spiritualist; but I never heard of the Christians protesting. I expect he has assumed the Christianity of his guests so many times without an error that it has become a rule of the house. To return to Mr. McKane, that gentleman replied that he was a Protestant, which was true, as, in fact, he leaves a large and flourishing Sabbath-school to mourn the loss of its teacher and superintendent. Being further examined, McKane replied that he neither smoked nor chewed tobacco nor drank liquor. It must grieve every pious heart to know that this brilliant light will for the next six years shine only among criminals, and be snuffed out daily at 9 P.M.

The case is wholly barren of material with which to point a moral further than to remark that apparent piety is not a sure sign of honesty, and that steady habits are not incompatible with rascality, or bad habits with perfect integrity. A man may be a Freethinker, a Christian, or a hypocrit; he may or may not use tobacco, whisky, and profane language; there is no doctrin in any system of religion, philosophy, or hygiene that can keep a man honest who follows the calling of a political priest. Neither is there any warning in his fate, for the sober truth is that where methods like McKane's send one knave to the penitentiary they put a hundred others into offices of public responsibility and trust.

Ex-President Benjamin Harrison has gone to California to deliver ten lectures on Constitutional Law from a Presbyterian point of view before the students of the Stanford University at Palo Alto. The engagement was made with the founder of the university, who has since died, and the remuneration was fixed at $10,000. That is a good price for ten lectures, but it is unlikely that Mr. H. will ever collect it, as a returned Californian informs me it is generally understood that the widowed ex-president has entered into an engagement with the relict of the late Mr. Stanford on other than financial terms. If this is true it only demonstrates that the widow is a lady of business sagacity. Any prudent woman would save ten thousand dollars when opportunity offered, even though it involved linking her fortunes with those of an humble ex-president.

Four-fifths of the world is still in darkness. Without our aid God cannot spread the light. He is doing the best he can. We must do the best that we can. If God, sitting in the heavens and seeing this tremendous darkness, could sit there and do less than his best, he is not our God. He is doing the best he can with the power he has got.—Bishop Foster before the Methodist Social Union.

Doubting Thomases hav often wondered why
Any God of endless goodness and of might Should permit himself to stand serenely by While unrighteousness existed in his sight.

Unenumerated heathen every day,
Never having heard of heaven or its king,
By perversity of nature go astray
And Jehovah doesn't do a blessed thing.

And the Infidels hav noted that his hand
Isn't lent to any visible degree
When the blizzard goes careering o'er the land
Or the hurricane depopulates the sea.

Even innocence may not enlist his aid
Though it supplicate protection in his name;
For the strength to meet temptation prays the maid,
But the parson keeps a-calling just the same.

But an answer to the question now is gained
And the esoteric riddle has been solved,
All the hidden ambiguity explained
By the notion Brother Foster has evolved.

This Jehovah he discusses is so weak,
And so much does he resemble feeble man,
That whenever his assistance we bespeak
We can only hope he does the best he can.

We should not be asking favors of him, then,
As perchance he is commercially depressed,
Or perhaps he isn't luckier than men
And is not in a condition for his best.

After all the difficulties he's endured
Since his trouble with this universe began,
It is meet reward for him to be assured
Brother Foster thinks he does the best he can.

Franklin Steiner, N. F. Griswold, B. A. Roloson, J. M. Peck, I. J. Porter.

OBJECTS OF FEDERATION:

Keep church and state forever separate.—Grant.

In no sense whatsoever is this government founded upon the Christian religion.—Washington.

It is wicked and tyrannical to compel any man to support a religion in which he does not believe.—Jefferson.

The divorce between church and state should be absolute.—Garfield.

A religion that depends on the state for its support, is for that reason a bad religion.—Franklin.

Religion and the manner of discharging it can be directed only by reason and conviction and not by force or violence.—Madison.

To the Friends and Members of the Freethought Federation of America:

Rally, friends! The churches are raising thousands of dollars to push this Christian amendment. They are making a determined effort, and must be met by constant opposition. This issue is not for the time being. The argument before the Judiciary Committee is only a point in the long warfare that is to come. Fortunately, we hav the Constitution with us, and it would show amazing cowardice and weakness if we ever surrender this position. We are the conservativs in the defense of liberty; the Christians are the revolutionists in behalf of despotism. The victory is ours if we do not desert the post. But remember, we hav a vast organization against us, with a membership of twenty-one millions—one-third of the population of the country. Two-thirds of the people are on our side, but they are unorganized and do not realize the danger. It is our work as pioneers, Freethinkers, not only to meet the enemy, but to arouse the enthusiasm of our allies. We must educate the people. We must distribute our pamphlets by the thousand.

Send in the money. Every little helps. A hundred fifty-cent contributions will count a long way. Address E. C. Reichwald, treasurer, 165 South Water street, Chicago, Ill. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Pres. Freethought Federation of America.

News and Notes.

Thursday evening, Feb. 22d, I listened to a lecture on "The Perfect Man," by Professor Copeland, formerly of San Antonio, Tex. It was given in the Methodist church, and there were some very startling and radical utterances for so venerable an institution. I hav no doubt it set many people to thinking, as it proclaimed the doctrins of evolution and social science. On the same evening I also attended a delightful entertainment given at Scandia Hall, under the auspices of a TRUTH SEEKER friend, J. M. Segner. It was musical and dramatic.

Miss Ime Segner, Florence Segner, and Bertie are quite gifted in this line. They are but young yet, and show great promis. They read THE TRUTH SEEKER faithfully. By the way, the Methodist church in which Professor Copeland gave his lecture is a property worth about $1,000,000; the church corporation has a yearly income of $60,000. It has now petitioned the city fathers for leave to tear down the present building and rear an immense business edifice in its place, a part of which, however, must be devoted to church purposes, or the land would be forfeited. It is the most valuable business block in the city—and no taxes are paid on it—with $60,000 income!

On Saturday evening a few of us had an enjoyable time at the home of Mrs. H. H. Harris. We hav not yet forgotton our artist friend Harris, who was always the life of the company, and a Freethinker in every fibre of his being. He died a few months since, but his radiant genius in art and social progress is gently remembered by a host of friends.

Sunday morning I called on Judge Waite, who among other duties is writing a series of articles on church encroachments, which show what the churches hav tried to do; wherein they hav failed and wherein they hav succeeded. These are valuable lessons of history. Judge Waite will be at Washington if pressure of business does not prevent, to join in the battle on the Constitutional Amendment proposed by the Christian party.

In the afternoon at Bricklayers' Hall I listened to a rushing debate between W. C. Pomeroy and Rev. Mr. Burch of the Methodist church. They were both good warriors, and made a fine display. In his address of welcome to the Labor Federation a few weeks since, Mr. Pomeroy had made some pretty severe strictures on the churches, affirming that they were not in sympathy with labor, and did not try to help labor in its contest with monopoly, but were rather on the other side. This address created quite a sensation, and the clergy felt it keenly, and one of their number, the Rev. Mr. Burch, prepared to defend the churches. Mr. Pomeroy was willing to meet him in debate, and Sunday afternoon last was set for the affair, and a vast crowd was present and intense interest existed. Rev. Mr. Burch did his part well. He maintained that the churches were in sympathy with the masses. By the church he meant what he called the Free American church. This of course excluded the Romish church. He admitted that there was a chasm between the churches and organized labor, but he said that was the fault of labor agitators and would-be leaders, who for their own selfish purposes were trying to widen the breach. What a labor agitator could gain by so doing was not demonstrated. It is generally understood that they who knuckle to the churches even in the labor party are the ones who get the loaves and fishes. The main question really at issue was not referred to by Rev. Mr. Burch—namely, that the church was an instrument for future salvation, and not for this world, and therefore in the very nature of things could be of little practical benefit. He tried to show that the church was a good, charitable institution, and did giv bread and butter to the poor. This is granted; but he did not show that by scientific and practical measures the church had ever grappled with the problem of labor, or had tried to settle it in the interest of universal justice. He merely touched upon outside issues. He did not get at the heart of the matter.

I am glad to say that W. C. Pomeroy put in his work splendidly. He was not afraid to denounce the churches and their theological dogmas. He was not afraid to declare not only the principles but the name of Thomas Paine to that vast assembly. "If the churches will work for this world," said he, "all right. We will join with them; but what is the use of working for a world of which we know nothing." He showed plainly that the church as an institution was not in favor of the rights of labor; that it did cringe to the money power, although a few individual Christian clergymen were the other way, and did dare now and then in their pulpits to say a word for justice to all. I think the Rev. Mr. Burch himself must hav learned something from Mr. Pomeroy's brilliant arraignment, which was the eloquent voice of labor against the old-time superstitions that hav ground it into the dust.

Mr. Stead presided at the meeting, which he opened with prayer and the hymn:

All hail the power of Jesus' name, and I didn't know but I was in a revival meeting until I heard Pomeroy's address, and there was "no religion to speak of" in that, and

The rock of ages, cleft for me, rather disappeared. Mr. Stead is a typical Englishman. He has much good sense, mixed with a good deal of nonsense. Some of his ideas are very Liberal, and he has the courage of his convictions. He is evidently a crank, but he is blown about by many a heterodox breeze, and he says many things that would horrify the churchman. I rather liked him after he got through praying and did a little talking about the affairs of this world. He spoke truths that it would be well for Freethinkers to ponder over on the question of property exempt from taxation, etc.

In the evening I lectured before the Secular Union, on "Liberty and Authority." There was a large audience present; and a deep interest was manifested in this greatest of all practical questions. While all Liberals are opposed to the authority of Bible and church, there is some difference of opinion as to the authority of the state, what shall its authority be, and to what extent shall it be submitted to. I took the ground which it seems to me all Liberals must eventually take—of Jeffersonian democracy; against all parental government of any kind whatsoever, be it in the interest of religion, morality, economics, or anything else. The state is simply a police-force to prevent crime; and liberty can only be maintained by thus restricting the powers of government. Mr. Holmes, Mr. Van Armun, Mrs. Parsons, Professor McNally, and others debated the question in a very able manner. They went rather beyond Jefferson and didn't want any government at all; but as it is admitted that the rights of any individual in the nature of things is limited by the equal rights of all others, there must be some way to define these limitations and maintain rights according to this natural law; and what is this but a government as Jefferson defines it? I find that Anarchists, when driven into a corner and confronted with the existence of crime, are compelled to admit the necessary existence of an authority to prevent this. "Anarchism," says one of its level-headed upholders, "affirms the right of association for driving out or restraining the thief, the murderer, the ravisher, the criminal of any class or name, private citizen, or public official—whoever invades the domain of the individual, and takes by force or fraud life, liberty, or property." Of course no one defended bomb-throwing "Anarchy," or any resort to force or violence, for true liberty means peace and brotherhood to all mankind.

The line of battle for all Liberals at present is the total separation of church and state. If we use the state for economic purposes, as the Socialist desires, it is certainly a most dangerous instrumentality in this direction so long as the church is united with it. And it is also apparent that we cannot reduce the power of the state until we banish the authority of the church. All must acknowledge that the church and state question is the fundamental question. Until this is settled there is no surety of human progress and liberty.

The Chicago Secular Union, the only organization in this city that occupies this line of battle, should be supported, notwithstanding differences of opinion on many points. New faces appear in the audiences, new members are coming in, and with new elements there should be a new and brighter advance.

Among others whom I hav met here is George Wilson, who was arrested for selling literature on sale at every book-store of any standing in the city. This was apparently because among other books he had for sale Paine's and Ingersoll's books, etc. He was imprisoned for awhile, but this was declared unlawful and he was released. His book-store is still carried on at 312 State street; and although he has suffered many losses he does not surrender. Freethought books and journals are for sale as usual.

I leave Chicago for Washington. I am obliged to postpone my appointments at Toronto in order to be at Washington March 6th. I consider it of the first importance to speak before the Judiciary Committee of Congress in behalf of the Constitution as it is. It is no use to say there is no danger, for there is danger, and it is increasing.

I hav a pleasant stay over of two days at Metamora, Mich., where I giv two lectures in the town hall to large audiences. This is the first time Freethought has made an effort in this place and it has been eminently successful.

Metamora is fifty miles north of Detroit. It is the center of a fine farming country, and, as it does not depend upon any manufacturing interests, it has not so deeply felt the hard times, for the farmers in this country are pretty well fixed. Even if they don't make any money, they can stand it, for the land is generally free from mortgages I understand; and hence there is the solid earth to depend upon, anyway.

The weather here is delightful—that is, overhead. It is a beautiful sunshiny day. The skies are like silver, and the fields and woods with the white snows are charming to look upon. But the "going" is awful. The mud is deep, and it is almost impossible, from some quarters, to get into town, and some, indeed, prefer to walk rather than to tug through with a team. I should hav had many more hearers had the traveling been favorable, but as it was, every seat was occupied, which is doing pretty well for a village of two or three hundred inhabitants. There are two churches here and it is pretty hard work to support them. The community on the whole is Liberal, and is growing more so. A few years ago it was impossible to raise enough for Freethought lectures; but now in this case it is easily done. It is the same in many places where Freethought lectures hav not been given. It needs but a determined effort, and the work is accomplished.

There is a stanch Freethought element in this place, composed of the best citizens; and by combined action, through lectures and otherwise, it can exercise great influence. Among the comrades of our grand army here are Philo Isham, Joseph Gould, Dr. Geo. W. Stone, Elias Martin, who acted as chairman of the meetings, L. Y. Struble, Mark W. Kelly, Hirum Lee, Leroy Thomas, Alva Barnes, Rufus Wilder, John Freer, John Brown, Richard Easton, Isaac Lewis, and others. On the whole, this is one of the finest points I hav struck for Liberal work.

I visited the schools of Metamora with my friend, Mr. Martin, who himself was formerly a schoolteacher and is interested in educational matters. I find the schools under excellent management, with very little theology in the text books compared to what there used to be, and the methods of teaching are more practical. The children are taught to think for themselvs. The Bible, however, is read in the schools, but I hope for better things where so much Liberalism prevails. As Mr. Martin says, "It is evolution and progress."

I stopped over at Detroit a few hours and visited with my old stanch friend, E. Chope, who has been a Liberal for over fifty years, and is one of the leading business men of Detroit. He settled here in 1837. There were only eight thousand inhabitants in Detroit at that time. He has seen this city grow to its present beautiful and magnificent proportions. It is one of the most prosperous cities on the continent. Even in these present hard times real estate has a boom. Mr. Chope is now seventy-nine years of age, but he looks as if twenty years more were in store for him in this world, which he knows how to enjoy with health and competence. He has a lovely home and pleasant surroundings, after a life of successful industry. He has eight children living, fourteen grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren, and that is ahead of any orthodox heaven that I know of. Children are better than harps of gold to make music for life.

Still the Mystery Is Unsolved.

LAKE CITY, IA., Feb. 10, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I write to say that, if I liv until my subscription expires, I intend when renewing to take Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" in connection with your paper. I hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER about eighteen years, and after I hav passed away I hope it may still be kept in the family. I am now seventy-two years of age and my health is extremely poor. Still the mystery of life and death is just as great as ever.

J. L. TOMPKINS.

At Four-score and Three.

LIVERMORE, CAL., Feb. 17, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find postal order for $3 to renew my subscription. I hav cataracts on my eyes, but hav read your paper for the last four numbers; know George; hav been to his office on Kearny street, San Francisco. Shall be eighty-three the 10th of next May. Hav been with S. P. Putnam and given recitations in connection with his lectures at Union Square Hall and at Irving Hall, also at Boulder Creek, Livermore, and Stockton. Cannot very well do without THE TRUTH SEEKER.

M. S. PALMER.

He at Once Ordered Petitions.

ALEDO, TEX., Feb. 18, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: I received my paper this evening and the article on page 100—"The Christian Amendment"—attracted my attention so much that I read it and then laid the paper down to write to you for petitions against the holy sky-pilots' grand move. I want four or five at least and not more than six, for I think that will be as many as I can use. I think I can place three or four in the hands of other parties who will get signers. I am opposed to any God-in-the-Constitution or any "In God We Trust" on the dollar, for the dollar is what we trust in. I will send stamp for postage.

J. C. MILLER.

Has a High Opinion of Us.

MARSHFIELD, OR., Feb. 1, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find postal note for THE TRUTH SEEKER and myth exposer. I should be very much pleased to send you more aid in the way of money for subscribers, but the plutocratic benefactors of the country hav got their remorseless clutches on the finances of the nation so completely that it is scarcely possible to get sufficient money to pay for the bare necessaries of life, and I can see no prospects of deliverance from this terrible and unjust affliction except through and by a more thorough education of the masses in more liberal views, and a change in the party that makes and executes our laws; and believing that the Editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER is doing as much perhaps as any other one man towards bringing about this result, I shall always do all I can in my humble way to support the paper.

W. A. GILMORE.

In Memoriam.

ROCKY RIVER, O., Feb. 19, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: There passed away Jan. 27, 1894, near Rocky River, O., your old-time subscriber, Manley H. Woodbury, aged eighty-three years. His long life as a reader of the Investigator, THE TRUTH SEEKER, and historical Freethought literature fitted him to look upon the ending of human life as a sentence nature pronounced at birth, with no possibility of evasion. Few of the sixty-odd episodes described in G. W. Foote's "Infidel Death-Beds" could hav been a scene of more calmness, peace, cheerful willingness to die, than his. As gently as the setting sun sinks in a tropical sea did he pass away. He reasoned scientifically, intellectually, not

> Born of fancies weird and elfish,
> Nursing aspirations selfish,
> Gilded with a specious learning,
> Cankering life with futil yearning,
> For a destiny supernal,
> Believed in rest, untroubled, deep,
> Where no souls their vigils keep,
> Where the pain to be shall cease,
> And all life end in perfect peace.

His funeral was non-religious, as he requested. And thus is gone a bold advocate of truth and reason in face of intellectual cringing and treason; gone to the glory of his true self-respect and philosophical manhood in belief.

SILAS GLEASON.

A Sheriff Struck With Piety.

TAMPA, FLA., Feb. 20, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed order for $6.50 for renewal of subscription and Putnam's "Four Hundred Years of Freethought." Heston's cartoons are very much liked; they are the jewels of the paper. They illustrate passages in scripture to perfection.

Well, we Infidels are getting along very well, considering that we hav no organization. We should hav some good speaker like Mr. Putnam to giv us a few lectures.

I will try to get some subscribers for the paper.

Tampa is quite lively this winter, with theaters, circuses, Salvation Army, street preaching, and the churches thrown in.

The sheriff of the county has been struck with a streak of piety and took a notion to enforce the state law, closing up all places of amusement except churches on Sunday. His piety will last but a short time. Of course we hav to submit to his most holy will, or be punished according to the Christian methods of rewarding sinners.

Cheers upon cheers for THE TRUTH SEEKER and Heston.

C. W. WELLS.

A Hypothetical Speech.

BRONSTON, KY., Feb. 19, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $5, which place to the credit of Geo. B. Stigall and myself. Times are so very hard that we hav to scratch for a little money like an old hen that has two families of chickens to provide for at the same time.

Don't you think that it would be a grand thing if some prominent Republican Senator would be patriotic enough to rise in his place in the Senate and address his party somewhat after the following style? "Members of the Republican Party: I want to make an appeal to your love of our common country, to justice, and to that spirit of compromise so aptly illustrated in a late speech by Henri Watterson. It can not be successfully denied that a large majority of the people of the United States are in favor of a tariff for revenue only. And now, friends, as we cannot conscientiously vote for the Wilson bill which has passed the lower house, let us not do an act to obstruct its passage in the Senate. Let the Democrats pass this bill as soon as possible, and let it go into operation at an early date. It may prove a blessing to our country. We don't know. At any rate, let them pass this bill, and then giv it a fair and impartial trial. If it should prove a success, then we can all rejoice in the prosperity of our common country. If, on the contrary, it should work disastrously, then the whole country would turn to the protectiv system. Fellow-Republicans, cease your opposition to this measure. The country demands a test of the two principles, and for the welfare of all its citizens it should hav it."

Education Will "Spoil Our Rich Religious Experiences."

NEW BOSTON, MICH., Feb. 18, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: One of your correspondents spoke recently in rather an uncertain way of the Free Methodists. He was correct in all he said. I know them, their condition, their methods, and their theology. A few of their clergy (too few, by far) are fairly well educated, but the rank and file are not very much beyond the infantile stage of mentality. One of them, a very estimable old lady in several ways, lately said to me that she was afraid this higher education was going to spoil our rich religious experiences. I said, "Undoubtedly." I think if that will spoil them, they had better be spoiled, and that quickly. When she saw some of "Zeke's" predicaments, so splendidly illustrated in THE TRUTH SEEKER, she said, "My goodness! I never supposed there was such stuff in the Bible."

I enjoy a bout with a preacher. A "liberal" one boasted to me of his liberality, and startled me by saying, "I sometimes read THE TRUTH SEEKER." I offered him the use of mine, but he would not touch it. Another one honestly acknowledged that John Wesley was a domestic tyrant, and that Colonel "Bob's" character was irreproachable. When they choose argumentum ad hominem, I'm ready for 'em. One thought to squelch me by calling me an Infidel. I told him I gloried in the name, especially as I developed all my Infidelity at a theological seminary, and before I learned that there were such persons in the world as Infidels. How could I do that? I couldn't help it. The overdose of dogmatic poison acted only as an emetic, producing violent retchings, succeeded by chronic nausea and loathing of that class of medicin. But of all the things to turn the stomach, I think the amended preamble will be the worst. When this country becomes unendurably Christian we can immigrate to Africa.

Go A. HED.

Harvy on the Hill.

Go, wander like the shepherd's flocks,
Where sunny hills slope toward the sea,
You'll find the wild flowers 'mong the rocks,
Like virtue in humanity.

The vulture sailing o'er the glen
Casts gloomy shadows on the way,
Like fears that throng the thoughts of men,
By superstition led astray.

A lonely man lived on the hill
Where smoky columns seek the sky,
He used to keep the water-mill
The brook now wanders idly by.

Without a creed, without a fear,
An independent man was he.
He lived a free life, but last year
He gave it for humanity.

The preacher's daughter loved to play
By the mill-wheel, toiling in the race,
And gather shining shells each day,
Where the water mirrored back her face.

She stumbled down the slippery shore,
On broken boards and mossy plank,
"Old Harve" ran to the open door,
And saw her struggling as she sank.

He sprang and caught her by the dress,
And pushed her safely to the shore.
The mill-wheel crushed his giant breast,
And Harvy Crigger was no more.

The preacher, who had often said,
"Old Harve will surely go to hell,"
Now murmured meekly o'er the dead,
"Ah, yes! he doeth all things well."

Another Priestless Death and Burial.

CANON CITY, COL. Feb. 10, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: On February 1, the wife of our worthy neighbor and Liberal friend, John Locke, died; and as she was a Liberal-minded woman, she requested that there be no religious exercises. Mr. Locke requested me to read a service, which I did. We selected No. 1 in "The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations," changing the wording so as to make it suitable for a wife and mother, with the following added:

"She had no regrets. During a protracted illness there were many times when there were no hopes of her living any length of time. During the intervals she frequently expressed herself as having no fear of death; she had no dread of the future. All she cared to liv for was to be of use to her family and to those around her. If she could not recover her strength so as to be useful in the world she did not care to liv. During her final struggle she said to those in attendance: 'Why do you bring me back so often?' And again, when hope had vanished, rallying once more, she said: "I did not want to come back.' Her deeds of kindness to those around her speak more for her excellence of character than words can express." At the grave the following paraphrase was read after the body had been lowered:

"Sister Locke, while yet in love with life and raptured with the world, has passed to silence and pathetic dust. This loving mother was the friend of all heroic souls. She was a worshiper of liberty and a friend to the oppressed. She has now passed the stone on life's highway, and being weary for a moment has laid down by the wayside to rest, and has fallen into that dreamless sleep that kisses down her eyelids as it will those of all the human family."

A large assemblage of neighbors and friends were present and accompanied the procession to the cemetery. Yours,

G. T. CONAWAY.

Death of a Veteran Worker in the Cause of Liberty.

January 25, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Died, January 18th, E.M. 294, J. L. Bly, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. T. R. Kemp, Portland, Or.

Mr. Bly was born in Kentucky, April 10, 1814, so that at the time of his death he was eighty years old. His life has been a long and useful one.

Reared among slave owners, he early learned the lesson of justice to the black man, when his father, in 1824, freed his slaves, after which he moved to Chautauqua county, N. Y., where he soon died.

Young Bly, at the age of eighteen, settled in Crawford county, Pa., where he married into one of the pioneer families of that state.

About two years before his death, the writer had the pleasure of conversing with him about those early days, when, with his young wife, he built a home in the Pennsylvania forest and prepared the soil for the rich harvest of grain, fruit, and flowers.

Though eighty years old, Mr. Bly had a remarkable memory, and his reminiscences of the early days were very interesting.

About the age of thirty, Mr. Bly became deeply exercised upon the question of religion and joined the Methodist church, in which, however, he did not long remain. To use his own words: "Inconsistency, hypocrisy, and rascality, prominent traits of the godly leaders, soon drove me back into the world," since which time his religion has been to do good.

Long before the Civil War, his sympathies existed for and were actively engaged in behalf of the black slave. He was one of the many noble men and women who helped run what was called "the underground railway," which helped many a slave from his shackles in the South to liberty in the North. His two sons enlisted in the Union army and served throughout the war.

At the close of the war, when the oil excitement broke out in Pennsylvania, Mr. and Mrs. Bly were enabled to sell the land their labor had made valuable, and they invested their money in a comfortable home, only to find a year later that they had been swindled by the Christian neighbor in whom they had placed confidence, for a judgment of many years' standing, and of an amount fully equaling the value of the place, was still unsatisfied. Thus, at the age of fifty-two, he suddenly found himself and family homeless. His many years of arduous toil, under the inexorable ruling of Christian law, now availed him nothing.

The stroke was more than the wife and mother could endure, and a few years of struggle sufficed to overpower nature, and she succumbed, a victim to the barbarous condition known as "Christian civilization."

Since the death of his wife, Mr. Bly has spent most of his time with his daughter. He realized that the Christian religion, with all its concomitants, is the great stumbling-block in the way of true and genuin peace and plenty-giving reform, and for many years has he worked for human liberty. In a note received by me from Mr. and Mrs. Kemp, announcing the death of this good, earnest o ld man, they said: "He was conscious to the very last.

Although a non-believer in the Christian religion, his last moments were as peaceful and resigned as could be;" which is another refutation of the oft-repeated Christian slander that "Infidels, in agony, call on God to help them when they die."

Dear old grandpa, farewell. We loved you living—we love your memory still. The noble thoughts you so oft hav said will be again and again repeated by those who were near and dear to you. Your cause—the great cause of Freethought, love, and right—is their cause, and with youth and strength they will press bravely forward.

KATIE KEHM SMITH.

Comstockism Not Christianity.

BALTIMORE, MD., Feb. 19, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Anthony Comstock has a branch "Society for the Suppression of Vice" in Baltimore, and Cardinal Gibbons, Rev. John T. Ockerman, Rev. H. Vrooman, and Rev. Charles A. Fulton are the head members. These gentlemen are supposed to represent in all they do the teachings of the meek and lowly Jesus. Jails, fines, detectiv business, and policemen's clubs rise up, however, before all who read the proceedings of their meetings. These are all the accessories of the law for suppressing crime, and the ways of the law are not the ways of Jesus, and, consequently, should not be the ways of those who profess to be among his most distinguished followers. It was the law that crucified Jesus. The hypocritical pretenders to the law of Moses, in the persons of scribes and pharisees, instigated his death, and the law of the land, in the hands of Pilate, crucified him, at the same time and in the same way that it crucified two of its ordinary criminals. It is very conclusiv from this that Jesus's kingdom is not of this world in its methods for reforming the world. If the cardinal and the other reverend gentlemen are to become volunteer detectivs and vice ferrets, they could more consistently take up their business quarters near the police stations, and allow their pulpits to preach in silence the lessons of their retrogression—allowing that they were ever founded, individually, on the rock of Peter.

Ministers wonder at the increase of Ingersollism, or Infidelity. Every ordinary man, with the Bible before him—and with no early education forced into him, making him believe black is white—doubts Christianity when he sees such divergence between its precepts and the examples of its professors. Just as soon as such a man finds that his business and social interests allow, he hies off to Infidelity, or, at least, becomes indifferent, and sits under his own roof-tree on Sunday, or goes on an excursion amid the beauties of nature, instead of going to church. The cardinal and the clergymen can keep right on assisting the Anthony Comstock methods of New York; but all of the police work they are busying themselvs in is an aid to the law and not to Christianity, and the ordinary sinner will flee from them still further into the soft and gentle bosom of that Infidelity whose watchword is humanity.

A minister said to the writer the other day that the law of the land was founded upon Christianity, and that it was the duty of ministers to aid and uphold the law. Away with such nonsense! The law of the land is, indeed, founded upon the old Mosaic law; but that is entirely different from Christian law. Eye for eye, tooth for tooth, life for life, was the Mosaic law, and the law of our land to-day stands the same—hanging for the murderer and proportionate punishment for injury of any kind. But Jesus said: "Resist not evil," turn the other cheek to the smiter and forgiv seventy times seven. The apostle said Christians are not under the law, but under grace—something more sympathetic and charitable in its work and something more pleasing and spiritual in its rewards. The absence of it seems to be apparent when cardinal and clergymen unite to hunt sinners with detectiv eye and police assistance.

Comstock, feeling backed by the clergy in what he does, and the clergy feeling backed by Christianity, it is eminently fitting that the clergy be shown how utterly contrary their action is to the letter and spirit of the Christianity they profess, that they may be ashamed when confronted with their inconsistency, and abandon Comstockism, or, by continuing in it, still further reveal their true inwardness to the smiling Freethinker.

OBSERVER.

[It is very difficult to tell what Jesusism is—admitting for argument's sake that there was a Jesus to found it—for he is said to hav enjoined his followers not to resist evil, and he also indicated that he wanted his enemies brought before him and slain. He was most denunciatory and vituperativ in referring to or talking with his opponents. But if we cannot tell really what Jesusism is, no such difficulty confronts us in regard to Christianity. Its history is its definition. There is nothing incongruous in the actions of the Baltimore clerics of whom our correspondent writes. Their conduct as Christians is justified by the conduct of Christians in all preceding ages. Our friend thinks that all the police work these men are doing is an aid to the law and not to Christianity. No greater mistake could be made. Every successful attack upon the freedom of speech and press makes easier the work of Christianizing the Constitution. See in our editorial columns the quotations from the article of Rev. R. C. Wylie. No, it is too late in the day to attempt to distinguish between the church and Christianity. The church made Christianity and is Christianity.—ED. T. S.]

An Editor of a Daily Paper Gently Admonished.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., Feb. 16, 189

MR. EDITOR: Occasionally I send a few lines to our local dailies defending our cause; sometimes they will grant me space, but as soon as I drop a few remarks too severe for our Christian editors, the same will be rejected. Some time ago I penned the following lines to the editor of The Truth (which, with the help of God even, is not able to always tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth):

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 2, 1893.

EDITOR The Truth: In your to-day's "Good Evening" columns, mentioning the election of Rev. E. B. Bagley, of the Disciples denomination, as chaplain of the lower house of Congress, you say that "this is a progressiv country and liberal in its religious ideas, and that before the century ends, perhaps a Jewish rabbi or a Catholic priest may be elected chaplain."

But, as this is a civil institution, why elect a representativ of any denomination? Why these costly prayers? Hav they ever been of any benefit to anyone except the chaplain? Why spend money for sectarian purposes? Very correctly you say this is a progressiv age, but in this direction we are making very slow progress. Our Congress and legislatures could just as well get along without chaplains and prayers and save money besides. When such practices shall hav been abolished; when the time comes that our religious denominations and societies will be liberal enough, or if not thus, when they will be requested to pay their just pro rata tax, etc., on a billion of dollars' worth of (now untaxed) property, thus greatly relieving the poorer classes, who are now struggling to save their only little hut and humble home from the sheriff's hammer, then we may rejoice and exclaim, "Truly, this is a progressiv country!"

Very respectfully yours, for justice and equality to all and special favors to none,

ERWIN AUFFURTH.

Though I inclosed a stamp and politely requested the editor to return above in case he rejected it, he did not do so. After a lapse of over two months I sent him a letter of inquiry, again inclosing stamp for answer, but his answer, as in the former case, is—silence. This caused me to write to him the following:

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 15, 1894.

EDITOR The Truth: Pardon me for intruding upon you once more, but your treating with silence my letter of inquiry of January 19th, concerning my communication sent you some time previously, which, being, being rejected, was not returned, as kindly requested, causes me to write again.

You wish to hav your paper appear to the public as a great reform journal, daily publishing columns of editorials on the gambling and lottery questions, but a paper which will advocate one reform only and ignore others will not benefit the community very much. The subject I was alluding to in my communication deserves criticism just as much, nay more even, than the gambling question, and, thanks to the rivalry which exists between the followers of the different sects, they hav so far been unable to plant the cross above the flag, the stars and stripes, though they all try hard, each hoping to be victorious in the course of time; they are already getting too many rations out of the public crib and continually looking for more, more, more, but I hope to see the day when their rations will be cut short.

Talk about being liberal and progressiv. You are aware, Mr. Editor, as well as I am, that the different Christian societies and their clergy are trying their utmost to force upon us their Sunday laws and are using all their influence to induce Congress to declare this to be, not a civil, but a Christian institution, and to establish the first day of the week as a legal holy day—not holiday—for the benefit of the church, which wants to monopolize one-seventh of our time for its exclusiv use. Very liberal indeed!

Again: Talk about your liberality. Hav you not read about the "God and King Jesus" resolution, introduced lately by pious Congressman Morse of Massachusetts? Is it liberal and progressiv to force upon thousands of Jews and millions of anti-Christians such a law? No, it is not, Mr. Editor; it is most illiberal and retrogressiv. Will these progressiv (?) and liberal people, like Mr. Morse, ever let that poor man Jesus, who is suppose l to hav suffered some nineteen hundred years ago such a horrible and untimely death (due to his mistaken ideas), rest? Had the authorities taken charge of and remanded him for examination as to his mental capacity, the examining physician would surely hav recommended his transfer to an insane asylum for humane and medical treatment. In that case we would hav been spared those terrible religious wars and massacres which occurred later on, for the purpose of spreading the Christian doctrins. Truly, he came not to bring peace, but the sword.

Your actions toward me compel me to believe that you are still wandering knee-deep in the quagmire of superstitious doctrins, and I assure you you hav my sincere sympathy, hoping, nevertheless, that sooner or later the torch of reason (but not the fagot, rack, thumbscrew, etc., etc.—those instruments of Christian persuasion of former days) will lead you into light; for it is more light we want, but the editor of The Truth seems not to be inclined to spread any as yet. The day the daily press becomes liberal enough to advocate such reforms Churchianity will prepare for its own funeral, and halls of science and education, spreading the light of knowledge, will spring up in place of temples of superstition. The foundation of the latter is already crumbling, and a house divided against itself must eventually fall.

Very truly yours, for the emancipation of the human family from the thraldom of mental slavery. ERWIN AUFFURTH.

Several Matters Pointedly Touched.

SAMOTH, ILL., Feb. 7, 1894.

MR. EDITOR: Quite an eon has elapsed since last I came to the Editor's sanctum and asked permission to convey my thoughts to the columns of that courageous champion of the "liberty of utterance," THE TRUTH SEEKER. Your "Letters of Friends" department, besides everything else comprising the contents of the paper, is of the most intense interest, and is very thought-inspiring to the undersigned, who permanently resides at the lethargic little village above designated.

Heston's cartoons are capital, concise, and comical, and are the chief cynosure of all those who prefer progress and patriotism to fear and faith, credulity and contradiction, and "Myth and Miracle"—and, in brief—the "Mistakes of Moses," and the burlesque bulls of the Bible. May his glowing artistic genius so increase that he will be enabled to depict the dogmas of the Bible so convincingly that future fanatics and bigots will come up out of the slough of superstition and bravely pronounce him blessed!

I am grateful to Brother A. J. Wadlia for exposing the enormity of exaggeration indulged in by Henry Dudley Teetor, M.A., in his biographical sketch of the Rev. Robert McIntyre in the November number of the Great Divide, wherein this "M.A." (master of absurdity) apprises an eager, fiction-guzzling public that the subject of the sketch "forgot his father's and mother's prayers, and was president of an Infidel society for seven years."

Lovers of liberty, friends of humankind, let us be alert and vigilant to drive every Theistical fabrication to the caverns of reticence, and plant the flag of Freethought upon the ramparts of free inquiry.

I desire to relate to the readers a bit of my experience with the "unco guid"—devotees of devolution. Last night I attended a so-called lecture at New Columbia, a small, dyed-in-the-wool burg, located about one mile south of my home. The lecture (!) was delivered under the auspices of God, Son, and Holy Ghost by a Mr. Taylor. Notwithstanding his "hark-from-the-tomb" demeanor, he was sleek, robust, and beefy, and I should judge of the motiv temperament. Phrenologically considering the constituency of his cranium, I am compelled to involuntarily exclaim, "A travesty on the genus homo!" Casuality, comparison—the logical organs—were remarkably absent, while veneration, spirituality, self-esteem, firmness, and continuity—the organs of selfishness, egotism, and love of adulation and applause—were prodigiously predominant. His forte was "fuss and feathers."

His subject was methods of conducting a deformity school (Sunday-school).

After Mr. Taylor had exploited his subject, he proposed that anyone desiring to acquire information appertaining to scripture and Sunday-schools was at liberty to interrogate him. As no volunteers came forward to entangle this profound sage, and seeing a splendid opportunity to display my views, I immediately embraced it. I arose and asked: "Mr. Taylor, I hav carefully perused the Bible, and hav discovered sundry chapters that are exceedingly difficult for me to comprehend; will you read for the benefit of myself, as well as for the benefit of these young ladies and gentlemen here, the thirty-eighth chapter of Genesis, and when you hav finished reading the same will you please comment upon it and explain its significance?"

The gentleman was nonplused for a moment, when he ultimately asked: "Did you say the thirty-eighth chapter of Genesis?"

"Yes, sir," I responded.

"The idea of reading and explaining an entire chapter within the limited time that I possess is preposterous! Why, there are various chapters of the Bible, each of which would require a whole night's time to analyze its spiritual meaning. To revert and enumerate the chronological periods of time, the downfall of dynasties, and the lives of those patriarchs would be impossible now," he said, with much solemnity and gravity.

Was I chagrined at his refusal? Not the least. With some regard for decency he, with some compunctions of conscience, avoided an unpleasant issue. Think of those who pretend to believe the Bible implicitly, really ashamed to read it in public places! What does this crucial test of the Christian's feigned belief demonstrate? It proves beyond doubt or cavil that the Bible, as an aggregate, is not a fit instructor to mold the morals of man, woman, or child. The question is, in this era of enlightenment and "higher criticism," as Colonel Ingersoll superbly says, "not, is the Bible inspired, but is it true?"

I admire inexpressibly W. H. Burr's golden opinion of "self-education;" also the "Observations" of that "humorist, satirist, philosopher, logician," on the same. Colonel Ingersoll has pertinently, alliterativly, and poetically said: "Colleges are places where pebbles are polished and diamonds are dimmed."

I am contemplating entering the lecture-field some time in the future when equipped with the intellectual weapons of self-defense. I am twenty-three years of age. My means of livelihood is farming. My circumstances are humble, but I am "true-blue" and aggressiv through and through. Now, the point that I wish to impress is this: Should any of the numerous charitably-disposed readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER wish to assist a fellow-Freethinker in battling against the formidable bulwarks of popular conservatism, just mail to my address any paper, pamphlet, or book which will enable me to secure that mental pabulum so necessary to giv strength to destroy the orthodox octopus, and I assure you it will be thankfully received and read with diligence and thought.

Reformers, agitators, workers in the sweater's den and in the healthful field and forest, let us each and everyone struggle to overcome the obstacles that daily confront us, and manfully press onward and upward.

Yours for the happiness of humanity,

CHARLES D. MCBRIDE.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

A Reminiscence.

Long years ago, in joyous childhood's prime,
To go to Sunday-school in summer time,
My mother made me brand new coat, and breeches
Cut out of calico, and full of midnight stitches,
Sewed ruffle on the front and neck with thread,
And curled a royal top-knot on my head.

I got a ticket for my good behavior,
In traveling on the way to see the Savior,
To whom I frequently addressed a prayer,
For I was very anxious to get there,
And hear the angels play upon their harps
Sweet anthems, without using flats or sharps.

Our antique schoolhouse stood upon a bank,
Near where the river birches grew quite rank,
Which by the pedagogs were made to tell,
When'er we missed a word we couldn't spell,
And other times they welted us right well,
As though they had been devils and we imps in hell,

The structure was an octagon of stone,
With chimney out the summit of the cone,
And served some generations ere my day;
What was its age I'll not attempt to say,
But I hav seen it in a year or so,
And 'twas the same as forty years ago.

The mind is fraught with recollections dear,
Whenever kind remembrance wanders here,
And lingers on those youthful scenes afar,
Back in New Jersey on the Delaware,
Three miles below the famous Water Gap,
Where I first learned to use the name of "pap."

The Liberal Correspondence Club.

Miss Wixon, my respected friend,
To you I this poema send
That young Freethinkers all may hear
Of names sent in from far and near
To join our Correspondence Club.

With brightest hopes for great success,
We ask all others—not one less—
Who deem it right, to send their name—
And gladly we'll receive the same—
To join the Correspondence Club.

This Club's design is to promote Study of heroes—near, remote—
And thus to learn how they endured—
Denounced the false, the good procured.
So join our Correspondence Club.

Acquaintance also would we make,
One of another's thought partake;
And since thought strengthens thought you know,
We each in wisdom strong would grow.

West Sutton, Mass. LUCY W. PHELPS.

The Course of a Life.

[CONCLUDED.]

"Granting that space is infinit, that the earth was a molten mass, cooled down by a process—how could the earth hav been created if it had to grow, as it were? As our first chapter of Genesis tells us, the earth was made or created, and all the things thereon. Therefore, nothing could hav grown, only what was born after, and the trees and the grass. But geology says, in the depth of the earth there are what may be called fossil remains of animals that do not exist now, and which must hav existed over a hundred thousand years ago, perhaps a million, or even more. Then, how can we make the Bible's six thousand years coincide with this? I do not see how. Again, if the earth evolved, as they say, what need was there of God? And another thing, who made God? He could not make himself any more than you could. I hav been reading a book loaned to me by my friend, an Atheist, which says the idea of God was originated by man as explaining the mysteries or phenomena which surrounded him. If this be true, where is the use in believing in God?"

"Percy," I said, "you are simply an innocent fool, allowing yourself to be played into the hands of a most despicable wretch, who would rob us of our dearest hopes, and giv us not anything in return for them."

"Nay, there you are wrong. I said the same thing to him. But he answered, 'We do giv you something in return. We giv you nature to worship in place of your God. We will giv you a code of morals founded on experience and observation instead of sentiment—a sickly one at that. We will giv you in place of your Bible the book of nature, wherein are recorded the truths which science has revealed to us, taken from the heavens and the earth. And instead of using your churches as places of worship, we will turn them into school-houses. This and more we will giv you.' This is what he said. And now, Reginald, I will now write out my resignation, and return to my home, and try to preach to my fellow-men real truth, and to alleviate their suffering in a better and more beneficent way. The past few months I hav spoken in my pulpit, I felt like a sinner and a hypocrit, and this is the course of action I intend to pursue."

"Idiot! fool! What will the people say when they hear this?" I savagely said, pacing the room with immense strides.

"I can't help what the people say, Reginald. If my conscience tells me I'm doing right I am not going to ask other people if their consciences think the same as mine. That would be utter folly. Another thing, the history of the Middle Ages appears to me in a new light, and the charity and spirit of tolerance manifested by our so-called Christians has struck me as being unchristian-like in the extreme."

Thus ended our talk. He sent in his resignation and earned the abuse of his congregation. Rich as he was, and with all means available to enjoy himself, he was not allowed a minute's peace. His former Christian friends conspired against his life and hired two assassins to butcher him. The congregation that once admired him was now full of the most bitter hatred and reproach toward him.

The violence which I feared would happen to him came, alas! too soon. One morning a letter arrived in my mail from his young wife, telling me that he had been cruelly murdered and cut to pieces as he was coming home one night. Later I heard that, from the way the body was found, he must hav been brained from behind and over a dozen knife wounds were found on his body. The perpetrators of the deed left no clue, but one of them afterward confessed his part of the deed, was tried and hanged.

When I noticed the look of joy on most of the faces of his former congregation I concluded that, if this is what a person must expect to get in trying to carry out his convictions and be a man, I would resign from the ministry and emigrate to America, where I could with safety investigate the truth for myself. I did so, and hav since led a peaceful life as a Liberal; and if there be a life beyond the grave, I hope, when my turn comes, to meet my friend there, for he was a true man. EDWARD DOBSON.

Correspondence.

PAWNEE, OKLA., Jan. 4, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my first attempt to write to the Children's Corner. I hav seen a good many letters in the Corner, but I hav not seen any from Oklahoma; so I thought I would write a few lines.

I hav three brothers, but no sisters, as my only sister died six years ago the 8th of this month. I will be fourteen the 13th of next month. I do not go to school, as there is none here yet. My oldest brother has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for three or four years. I will close now, hoping this will escape the wastebasket.

I remain your Liberal friend,
ESTHER HARRIS.

[A kiss goes to Esther over the Mountains to Oklahoma, and best wishes also from the Editor of C. C.]

STAPLETON, S. I., Jan. 6, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As I was reading the Children's Corner, I thought it was my chance to write again. I never saw a letter in the Corner from Staten Island, and by that I think there are not many Freethinkers here. But this island where I liv is a beautiful little place. In the spring, when going to the woods, everything looks so fresh and green, and the merry little birds singing their "tweet tweet," the beautiful, towering trees, spreading forth their branches, that everything seems to beckon us to go and see nature's garden. And in the winter when old "Jack Frost" comes, we all go coasting and skating, and such merry times as we hav! But still it takes only twenty minutes to cross New York bay, and we are in the largest city in the United States. And oh! such stores, and such beautiful things as they keep, especially around Christmas time.

One more thing which I wish to say is, that among many beautiful Christmas presents, I also received "All in a Lifetime," which, as I hav read it through, I think is beautiful. Fearing that I am using too much valuable space, I will close.

Remaining yours as ever,
ELSIE L. SIEDEL.

[We are glad there is some one to keep the flag of Freethought flying in Stapleton. Elsie will always be welcome in the Corner.—ED. C. C.]

EAST JORDAN, MICH., Jan. 7, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my first letter to the Corner.

I am a little girl, nearly seven years old. My father takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I like to read the little letters very much. He is in California now. But mamma sends him THE TRUTH SEEKER.

I go to school every day, and my teacher's name is Mrs. Pope, and I like her. I study reading, writing, spelling, and arithmetic. I liv in a town of about fifteen hundred inhabitants. There are six churches here, but I don't go to any, nor Sunday school. I hav two sisters and one brother, all younger than myself.

I remain your Liberal friend,
RUZIE G. STEWART.

[A fine letter from a girl not seven years old. It shows how bright she is; a little jewel of Freethought.—ED. C. C.]

LONG LAKE, MINN., Jan. 9, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: This is my first attempt to write to the Corner. We take THE TRUTH SEEKER and like it very much; we would not know how to get along without it.

I am going to school now, and like to go; I started to-day. We hav a good teacher; his name is Mr. Glasby; he is very religious. There are quite a number of Freethinkers here, but they are afraid to say so. There is only one church in Long Lake, and it is a small one at that. We never had a good Freethought lecture here. I think to hav one would open the eyes of many half-blind Freethinkers.

There are two feet of snow here, and it is very cold, sometimes running as low as forty deg. below zero.

I hav been laid up for six weeks with a sore foot; I cut myself in the right ankle. We had the doctor three times, and had a hard time of it besides.

We hav three of your books—"The Story Hour," "Apples of Gold," and "All In a Lifetime"—and like them very much.

This being my first letter to the Corner, I think I will close before it gets too long.

I remain your Freethinker friend,
FRANK WOLSFELD.

[We are sorry for your misfortune Frank, and hope your foot will soon be well.—ED. C. C.]

MARSH, IDA., Jan. 13, 1894.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write to the Corner again. The gentleman I am living with is called a crank, and I don't know any other reason unless it is because he has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER and Investigator so long and also various other reading matter. There are a good many Christians around here and it made some kick because the singing school was open on Sunday evenings; it is all bigotry to not even leave school open for those who would go. The teacher was very sensible, for he did not go a cent on Sunday laws. Therefore, in other communities he taught Sunday afternoons and evenings, as there were not so many Christians and moreover they were not so particular. I sent for your "Story Hour" and received it a few weeks ago and enjoy reading it very much. I would like some of the correspondents to write to me and I would gladly answer their letters.

Now I will tell you something about placer mining. The water is first brought from different gulches to a reservoir in ditches and held over night. In the morning a head of water, just what is needed, is turned on and carried around a hill in a ditch till it is from about 100 to 200 feet above where the mining is to be done. The water is carried from what is called the penstock, where it enters the iron pipe which is from six to ten inches in diameter. Water enough should be turned through to fill the pipe from the nozzle, or chief, as it is called, to the penstock. The chief works up and down and from side to side, so that the stream will cut where you want it to. The water being forced down through the pipe is called hydraulic pressure. The gravel is washed away in a race, as it is called; this is set down far enough so that the water cannot get out on either side. The gravel is then washed into boxes with 2x4 scantlings in the bottom about an inch apart, and between these is quicksilver, which is to catch the gold. After the quicksilver and gold mix they are called amalgam. The only way to separate them is to put them into an iron bowl or retort as it is called, with a tight cover and a spout leading from this into a gold pan. The mouth of this spout should be under water, if not the quick-silver before in water would salivate a person. Yes, I forgot, this retort must be in the forge but not kept too hot, the spout being kept cool with a wet cloth. When the quick-silver is out the spout gets cooler itself and the gold is ready to take out. It is not a good plan for a poor man to see much of this, for he will be in pursuit of it himself. When the gold is in that state it is ready for coining. I will close hoping to see this in print if you think it worthy. Your liberal friend,

ARMETAS E. BENOIT.

P. S.—In my given name you had n instead of m, and o instead of a, and in my sir name you had a instead of o. This was my mistake, I suppose, made by fast writing. A. E. B.

Pleasure and Progress.

AN ATTEMPT TO PROVE THAT

The Pursuit of Pleasure is the Sine Qua Non of Intellectual, Moral, and Social Development, and that The Promotion of Pleasure is the Duty of Philanthropy and Statesmanship.

By Albert M. Lorentz, LL.B.

BOOK II.—INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Purpose of life. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures. Chap. III.—Ideal Pleasures: Knowledge. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Reason. Chap.—V. Ideal Pleasures: Character. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Pedagogical Despotism.

BOOK III.—MORAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Morality. Chap. II.—Material Pleasures: Prudence. Chap. III.—Material Pleasures: Refinement. Chap. IV.—Ideal Pleasures: Foresight, Chap. V.—Ideal Pleasures: Civilization. Chap. VI.—Social Pleasures. Chap. VII.—Vice Caused by Restraint.

BOOK IV.—SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT: Chap. I.—Progress. Chap. II.—Protection, Capitalism, and Socialism: Respectivly an Actual, an Imminent, and a Proposed Violation of Individual Sovereignty. Chap. III.—Condition of Agriculture. Chap. IV. Public Schools, the Mene, Mene, Tekel of Socialism. Chap. V.—Province of Government. Chap. VI.—Our Social Disorder.

Here are some of the verdicts on this remarkable production which have been rendered by men who are in every way qualified as judges of books:

This is a spirited, rattling sort of a book that skates right along over the deepest subject without much thought whether the ice is thin or not. It answers the greatest question—What is the use, object, motive, purpose, and summum bonum of life, and the real cause and motive of progress?—by one word, Pleasure!—Thaddeus B. Wakeman.

He sharply attacks, also, modern methods of education, and in this he is most abundantly borne out by the facts, and his arraignment is practically unanswerable. His book is altogether a curious and suggestive one.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The man who wrote this book knows how to write a book, and knows what he is writing about. There is not a padded sentence in the volume, not an attempt to fill up with words for lack of knowledge. The author deals hard blows at shams and falsehoods, and hard blows for realities and truth. We do not see how anyone can read this book and disagree with the leading propositions. The work is good; every chapter is worth reading. It is a work of common-sense Socialism. The chapter on public schools ought to be put into a tract and sent to every teacher in the land. Thousands of sentences are worthy of being framed as political maxims and hung up all over the nation. The book deserves a wide reading, not only for its literary style, which is clear and incisive, but for its bold, honest sayings.—L. K. Washburn.

Here we have philosophy up to date, the advance word of the progressive thinker; not a dry, abstruse discourse, but a common-sense essay in plain words upon the conduct of life, and all illustrated with such an abundance of anecdote and metaphor as add real entertainment to solid instruction. This is an important book, striking at superstition and unreasonable tradition, and upholding individual liberty in defiance of governmental law and social custom. After reading this book one feels that the author will never be able to write another, for he has put all his life and knowledge into this one. Every page bristles with points; there is no padding or filling in, no mere literary embellishment; but clean-cut apothegms abound, and every line is dictated by hard-headed common-sense.—Capt. Robt. C. Adams.

After you read this book you will be as enthusiastic in praise of it as are the eloquent editor of the Investigator and the gallant President of the Canadian Secular Union,

"Pleasure and Progress" has 398 pages, is splendidly printed from large, clear type, on excellent paper, and costs, bound in cloth, $1; paper covers, 50 cents.
